"(d) The Commission may stay the deportation of any alien deportable under this section, if the testimony of such alien is desired on behalf of the United States in the prosecution of offenders against any provisions of this act or other laws of the United States. The cost of maintenance of any alien so detained resulting from a stay of deportation under this subsection and a reasonable witness fee for each day such alien is so detained may be paid from the appropriation for the enforcement of this act. Such alien may be released either under bond in the penalty of not less than $500 with security approved by the Commission on condition that such alien shall be produced when required as a witness and for deportation, or on such other conditions as the Commission may prescribe, or both.

"(e) In the case of an accompanying alien excluded under section 302 (b) (6) and ordered deported, the master, commanding officer, agent, owner, consignee, or charterer of the vessel or aircraft in which such alien arrived in the United States shall be required to return the alien in the same manner as other aliens denied admission and ordered deported under this section.

"SEC. 337. Entry through or from foreign contiguous territory; landing stations: (a) The Commission shall have power to enter into contracts with transportation lines for the entry and inspection of aliens coming to the United States through foreign contiguous territory. Due care shall be exercised to avoid any discriminatory action in favor of transportation companies transporting to such territory or islands aliens destined to the United States, and all such transportation companies shall be required, as a condition precedent to the inspection or examination under such rules and contracts at the ports of such contiguous territory of aliens brought thereto by them, to enter into a contract which will require them to submit to and comply with all the requirements of this act which would apply were they bringing such aliens directly to ports of the United States.

"(b) The Commission shall have power to enter into contracts with transportation lines for the entry and inspection of aliens coming to the United States from foreign contiguous territory. No such transportation line shall be allowed to land any such alien in the United States until and unless it has entered into any such contracts as may be required by the Commission.

"(c) Every transportation line engaged in carrying alien passengers for hire to the United States from foreign contiguous territory shall provide and maintain at its expense suitable landing stations, approved by the Commission, conveniently located at the port or ports of entry. No such transportation line shall be allowed to land any alien passenger in the United States until such landing stations are provided, and unless such stations are thereafter maintained to the satisfaction of the Commission.

"(d) The Commission shall have power to enter into contracts including bonding agreements with transportation lines to guarantee the passage through the United States in immediate and continuous transit of aliens destined to foreign countries. Notwithstanding any other provision of this act, such aliens may not have their classification changed under section 346.

"(e) As used in this section the terms 'transportation line' and 'transportation company' include, but are not limited to, the owner, charterer, consignee, or authorized agent operating any vessel or aircraft bringing aliens to the United States, or to foreign contiguous territory.

"SEC. 338. Designation of ports of entry for aliens arriving by civil aircraft: The Commission may by rules and regulations (1) designate as ports of entry for aliens arriving by aircraft any of the ports of entry for civil aircraft designated as such in accordance with law; (2) provide such reasonable requirements for aircraft in civil air navigation with respect to giving notice of intention to land in advance of landing, or notice of landing, as shall be deemed necessary for purposes of adminisrtation and enforcement of this act; and (3) provide for the application of civil air navigation of the provisions of this act where not expressly so provided in this act to such extent and upon such conditions as it deems necessary. Any person found to have violated any rule or regulation made under this section may be required by the Commission to pay a sum, to be determined by it, not to exceed $500 for each violation.

"SEC. 339. Records of admission: (a) The Commission shall cause to be filed as a record of admission to the United States, (1) the immigrant visa required by section 321 (e) to be surrendered by the alien when he presents himself at the port of entry, and (2) such record of the entry, reentry, admission, or return of any other alien as is necessary for the enforcement and administration of the immigration laws.

"CHAPTER 5—DEPORTATION: EQUITABLE RELIEF

"SEC. 341. General classes of deportable aliens: (a) Subject to the limitations prescribed in section 342, any alien in the United States shall be deportable who—

"(1) was ineligible to receive a visa or was excludable under the law existing at the time of receiving a visa or admission to the United States but received a visa or was admitted as a result of willful and material fraud which was willfully and materially committed or procured by him;

"(2) entered the United States without inspection;

"(3) has remained in the United States beyond the time granted to him; or otherwise knowingly violated a lawful condition of his admission to the United States;

"(4) becomes a public charge within 5 years after his entry from causes not affirmatively shown to have arisen subsequent to entry;

"(5) is sentenced to and confined to prison for a term of 1 year or more upon conviction in the United States of a crime involving moral turpitude, committed within 5 years after his entry; or within 10 years after entry, is sentenced more than once to such a term of imprisonment as a result of convictions in the United States of any crimes involving moral turpitude;

"(6) is convicted at any time after entry of the crime of prostitution, soliciting, procuring, or assisting a prostitute, or any other crime involving commercialized vice;

"(7) is convicted at any time after entry of violating or conspiring to violate any statute of the United States or of any State, Territory, possession, or of the District of Columbia, taxing, prohibiting, or regulating the manufacture, production, compounding, transportation, sale, exchange, dispensing, giving away, importation, or exportation of opium, coca leaves, heroin, marihuana, or any salt, derivative, or preparation of opium or coca leaves, or isonipecaine or any addiction-forming or addiction-sustaining opiate; and

"(8) within 5 years prior to the issuance of a warrant of arrest in deportation proceedings against him, advocated or taught subversive doctrine or was a member of or affiliated with any organization which advocated or taught subversive doctrine.

"(b) 'Conviction' as used in paragraph (5), (6), and (7) of subsection (a) shall not include a conviction—

"(1) for a crime committed by an alien under the age of 16; or

"(2) for a crime which has been pardoned or otherwise forgiven or expunged under applicable law; or

"(3) in any case where recommendation is made by the court which imposed sentence that deportation is not warranted, if prior to the making of such a recommendation due notice is given to the Commission and prosecuting authorities, and they are given an opportunity to be heard in the matter.

"(c) The Commission may, upon finding that (1) serious hardship would result from deportation, and (2) that continued residence of the alien in the United States would not be undesirable, determine that an alien deportable under subsections (5), (6), or (7) of subsection (b) by reason of a single conviction shall not be so deported.

"(d) Entry as used in this section means, in the case of a previously admitted alien, the time of his admission for lawful permanent residence, and in the case of any other alien, any entry as defined in section 102 (a) (11).

"SEC. 342. Limitations on deportation: (a) No alien shall be deported from the United States unless he is advised of the charges against him and given the opportunity for a hearing. Deportation of an alien shall be ordered only upon a record.

"(b) No alien shall be deported (1) who was admitted to the United States for permanent residence before his 14th birthday; or (2) who has lived in the United States for 20 years of more, other than as a nonimmigrant or as a fugitive from a criminal charge, the conviction on which would be a ground for deportation; or (3) for an act or omission to act or for a criminal conviction which occurred more than 10 years prior to the issuance of a warrant for his arrest in deportation proceeding.

"SEC. 343. Apprehension and deportation of aliens: (a) Whenever the Commission has reasonable ground for belief that an alien is deportable, it may issue a warrant for his arrest and detention, pending a determination as to his deportability.

"(b) When a final order of deportation is issued by the Commission against any alien, the Commission shall have a period of 6 months from the date of such order, or, if judicial review is had, then from the date of the final order of the court, within which to effect the alien's departure from the United States, during which period, at the Commission's discretion, the alien may be detained or released on bond or on any other conditions the Commission may prescribe. If deportation of the alien from the United States under the order of deportation has not been effected within the time prescribed, the alien shall become subject to such further detention or supervision pending eventual deportation as may be prescribed by the Commission. The Commission is authorized and directed to arrange for appropriate places of detention for those aliens whom it shall take into custody and detain under this section. For the purposes of this section an order of deportation heretofore or hereafter entered against an alien in legal detention or confinement other than under an immigration process, shall be considered as being made as of the moment he is released from such detention or confinement, and not prior thereto.

"(c) Any alien may apply to any court of appropriate jurisdiction for the purpose of obtaining his release from detention under subsection (b), and the court may for good cause order his release under such conditions as the court may prescribe. In determining whether good cause has been shown to justify releasing the alien, the court shall take into account such factors as (1) the age, health, and period of detention of the alien; (2) the effect of the alien's release upon the national health or security; (3) the likelihood of the alien's resuming or following a course of conduct which made or would make him deportable; (4) the character of the efforts made by such alien himself to expedite his departure from the United States; (5) the attitude of the representatives of the country or countries to which the alien's deportation is directed; (6) the reason for the inability of the Government of the United States to obtain passports, other travel documents, or deportation facilities from the country or countries to which the alien has been ordered deported; and (7) the eligibility of the alien for discretionary relief under the immigration laws.

"(d) Any alien, against whom a final order of deportation, heretofore or hereafter issued, is outstanding, shall, pending eventual deportation, be subject to supervision under regulations prescribed by the Commission. Such regulations shall include provisions which will require any alien subject to supervision (1) to appear from time to time before an officer of the Commission for identification; (2) to submit, if necessary, to medical and psychiatric examinations, (3) to give information under oath as to his circumstances, associations, and activities, and such other relevant information, as the Commission may deem fit and proper; and (4) to conform to such reasonable written restrictions on his conduct or activities as are prescribed by the Commission. Any alien who knowingly fails to comply with such regulations, or knowingly gives false information in relation to the requirements of such regulations, or knowingly violates a reasonable restriction imposed upon his conduct or activity, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not more than $1,000 or shall be imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both.

"(e) Any alien against whom a final order of deportation is outstanding by reason of section 341 (a) (1), (5), (6), (7), or (8), who willfully refuses to depart from the United States within a period of 6 months from the date of the final order of deportation under administrative processes, or, if judicial review is had, then from the date of the final order of the court, or fails or refuses to make timely application in good faith for travel or other documents necessary to his departure, or who connives or conspires, or takes any other action designed to prevent or hamper or with the purpose of preventing or hampering his departure pursuant to such order of deportation, or who fails or refuses to present himself for deportation at the time and place required by the Commission pursuant to such order of deportation, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be imprisoned not more than 1 year.

"(f) An alien sentenced to imprisonment shall not be deported until such imprisonment has been terminated by the release of the alien from confinement. However, parole or probation shall not be a ground for deferral of deportation.

"SEC. 344. Nations to which aliens shall be deported; Cost of deportation: (a) The deportation of an alien shall in the first instance be directed by the Commission to any nation desired by the alien, unless the Commission, in its discretion, concludes that deportation to such nation would be prejudicial to the interests of the United States. No alien shall choose as the place to which he wishes to be deported any foreign territory contiguous to the United States or any island adjacent thereto or adjacent to the United States unless the alien is a native, citizen, subject, or national of, or had a residence in, such designated territory or island, or unless the Commission shall grant special permission, in the interest of avoiding undue hardship, and consistent with the interests of the United States.

"(b) If the alien fails to present to the Commission within 3 months following the date of the final order of deportation an official document or communication establishing that a nation, in accordance with subsection (a), will accept the alien into its territory, then deportation of the alien shall be directed by the Commission to any willing nation of which the alien is a subject, national, or citizen. If the government of such nation fails finally to advise the Commission within 3 months following the date of original inquiry, or within such longer period as the Commission shall deem reasonable under the circumstances of the particular case, whether that government will or will not accept such alien into its territory, then such deportation shall be directed by the Commission within its discretion either—

"(1) to the nation from which such alien last entered the United States;

"(2) to the nation in which is located the foreign port at which such alien embarked for the United States or for foreign contiguous territory;

"(3) to the nation in which he was born;

"(4) to the nation in which the place of his birth is situated at the time he is ordered deported;

"(5) to any nation in which he resided prior to entering the country from which he entered the United States;

"(6) to the nation which had sovereignty over the birthplace of the alien at the time of his birth; or

"(7) if deportation to any of the foregoing places or nations is impracticable, inadvisable, or impossible, then to any nation which is willing to accept such alien into its territory.

"(c) If the United States is at war and the deportation, in accordance with the provisions of subsection (a), of any alien who is deportable under any law of the United States is found by the Commission to be impracticable, inadvisable, inconvenient, or impossible because of enemy occupation of the nation from which such alien came or wherein is located the foreign port at which he embarked for the United States or because of reasons connected with the war, such alien may, in the discretion of the Commission, be deported as follows:

"(1) If such alien is a citizen or subject of a nation whose recognized government is in exile, to the nation in which is located that government in exile if that nation will permit him to enter its territory; or

"(2) If such alien is a citizen or subject of a nation whose recognized government is not in exile, then to a nation or any political or territorial subdivision thereof which is proximate to the nation of which the alien is a citizen or subject, or, with the consent of the nation of which the alien is a citizen or subject, to any other nation.

"(d) No alien shall be deported to any nation in which the Commission finds that such alien would be subjected to persecution by reason of race, religion, or political beliefs, or which would permit him to enter only upon unreasonable or onerous conditions.

"(e) If deportation proceedings are instituted at any time within 5 years after the entry of the alien for causes existing prior to or at the time of entry, the cost of removal to the port of deportation shall be at the expense of the appropriation for the enforcement of this act, and the deportation from such port shall be at the expense of the owner or owners of the vessels, aircraft, or other transportation lines by which such alien came to the United States. Such expenses shall not be assessed against such owner or owners if he or they did not know or could not have ascertained by exercise of reasonable diligence, prior to embarkation of the alien transported, that he was an alien; or that being an alien his visa or other documents authorizing entry were invalid or had expired; or that he was excludable under section 302 (b) (2) or (5). If such expenses are not collected from such owner or owners, they shall be paid from the appropriation for the enforcement of this act. Such expenses when paid by such owner or owners, or by the United States, may be recovered from such an alien who is deported on grounds other than health or becoming a public charge.

"(f) If deportation proceedings are instituted more than 5 years after the entry of the alien, or in the case of an alien crewman more than 5 years after the granting of his last temporary admission, the cost of deportation shall be payable from the appropriation for the enforcement of this act. The expenses incident to transportation of such an alien from the United States to the nation to which he is deported may be recovered from such alien who is deported on grounds other than health or becoming a public charge.

"(g) A failure or refusal on the part of the master, commanding officer, agent, owner, charterer, or consignee of a vessel, aircraft, or other transportation line to comply with the order of the Commission to take on board, guard safely, and transport to the destination specified any alien ordered to be deported under the provisions of this act, or a failure or refusal by any such person to comply with an order of the Commission to pay deportation expenses in accordance with the requirements of this section, shall be punished by the imposition of a penalty in the sum and manner prescribed in section 336 (b).

"(h) When in the opinion of the Commission the mental or physical condition of an alien being deported is such as to require personal care and attendance, the Commission shall, when necessary, employ a suitable person for that purpose who shall accompany such alien to his final destination, and the expense incident to such service shall be defrayed in the same manner as the expense of deporting the accompanied alien is defrayed, and any failure or refusal to defray such expenses shall be punished in the manner prescribed by section 336 (b).

"SEC. 345. Voluntary departure: (a) Upon application to the Commission, any deportable alien may before or after his arrest in deportation proceedings, be permitted to depart the United States to any country of his choice at his own expense in lieu of deportation; and shall be permitted so to depart if he proves ability to do so and good moral character for the preceding 5 years.

"(b) Any alien who may otherwise voluntarily depart under subsection (a), except that he is financially unable to do so at his own expense, may, upon application to the Commission, be permitted to depart and the expenses incident thereto be paid from the appropriation for the enforcement of this act, if the Commission finds that his removal is in the best interest of the United States.

"SEC. 346. Adjustment of status: (a) Upon application and appropriate showing to the Commission the status of an alien in the United States shall be adjusted—

"(1) to any nonimmigrant status for which he qualifies under this act, if he is not deportable; and

"(2) to the status of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, if, were he applying abroad, no provision of law would bar his eligibility for admission and he could secure the reasonably prompt issuance of an immigrant visa.

"(b) Upon application to the Commission, the status of any alien in the United States shall be adjusted to the status of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence if he proves good moral character for the preceding 5 years and (1) has resided in the United States for 7 years, or (2) would, by his residence abroad, cause serious hardship to himself, or to a citizen or previously admitted alien who is his spouse or child. The status of an alien who is deportable under section 341 (a) (1), (5), (7), or (8) may be adjusted pursuant to this subsection only if he has resided in the United States for 10 years.

"(c) The status to which any alien is adjusted pursuant to this act shall date from the time of the grant of the adjusted status.

"(d) Adjustments of status under this section shall be granted by order of the Commission and no application therefor shall be denied without notice and opportunity for hearing in accordance with section 108 of this act. The number of quota immigrant visas authorized by this act shall be reduced to reflect adjustments of status under subsections (a) (2) and (b).

"(e) The Commission may, after notice and hearing, revoke an adjustment of the status of any alien within 2 years after such adjustment upon evidence which has become available to it after such adjustment and which establishes facts which would have barred such adjustment, or may revoke an adjustment of status within 10 years after such adjustment, for fraud which is willful and material committed or procured by the alien in obtaining such adjustment. On revocation of an adjustment of status, an order of admission to citizenship through naturalization issued to an alien whose status has been adjusted under this section, shall become subject to revocation, in accordance with section 447, for illegal procurement of such citizenship.

"SEC. 347. Removal of aliens who have fallen into distress: The Commission may remove from the United States any alien who falls into distress or who needs public aid from causes arising subsequent to his entry, and is desirous of being so removed, to the native nation of such alien, or to the nation from which he came, or to the nation of which he is a citizen or subject, or to any other nation to which he wishes to go and which will receive him, at the expense of the appropriation for the enforcement of this act.

"CHAPTER 6—SPECIAL PROVISIONS RELATING TO ALIEN CREWMEN

"SEC. 351. Lists of alien crewmen; reports of illegal landings: (a) Upon arrival of any vessel or aircraft in the United States from any place outside the United States it shall be the duty of the owner, agent, consignee, master, or commanding officer thereof to deliver to the Commission officer at the port of arrival a complete, true, and correct list containing the names of all aliens employed on such vessel or aircraft, the positions they respectively hold in the crew of the vessel or aircraft, when and where they were respectively shipped or engaged, and those to be paid off or discharged in the port of arrival. The Commission may by rules and regulations, in stated categories of cases, require other information in lieu of or in addition to the information required in such lists, to be furnished at such time and place as the Commission may require.

"(b) It shall be the duty of any owner, agent, consignee, master, or commanding officer of any vessel or aircraft to report, in writing, to a Commission officer, as soon as discovered, all cases in which any alien crewman has illegally landed in the United States from the vessel or aircraft, together with a description of such alien and any information likely to lead to his apprehension.

"(c) Before the departure of any vessel or aircraft from any port in the United States, it shall be the duty of the owner, agent, consignee, master, or commanding officer thereof, to deliver to a Commission officer at that port a list containing the names of all alien employees who were not employed thereon at the time of the arrival at that port but who will leave such port thereon at the time of the departure of such vessel or aircraft and the names of those, if any, who have been paid off or discharged, and of those, if any, who have deserted or landed at that port. The Commission may by rules and regulations, in stated categories of cases, require other information in lieu of or in addition to the information required in such lists, to be furnished at such time and place as the Commission may require.

"(d) In case any owner, agent, consignee, master, or commanding officer shall fail to deliver complete, true, and correct lists or reports of aliens, or to report cases of desertion or landing, as required by subsections (a), (b), and (c), such owner, agent, consignee, master, or commanding officer, shall pay to the Commission a sum to be determined by it, not to exceed $10 for each alien concerning whom such lists are not delivered or such reports are not made as required in the preceding subsections.

"(e) The Commission may prescribe rules and regulations defining the circumstances under which a vessel or aircraft shall be deemed to be arriving in, or departing from, the United States or any port thereof within the meaning of any provision of this act.

"SEC. 352. Temporary landing of alien crewmen: (a) An alien crewman shall be subject to all of the provisions of the immigration laws governing issuance of visas, admission, exclusion, and deportation of aliens generally. Any alien crewman, including one whose name appears on a crew list visaed pursuant to section 321 (f) shall be excluded if he is within one of the categories listed in section 301 (a) and if his temporary landing would be contrary to the best interests of the United States. Subject to the provisions of section 305, the Commission may nevertheless permit any alien crewman to land temporarily in the United States for such periods of time as it may prescribe.

"(b) Sections 108 through and including 111 of this act shall not apply to any alien crewman temporarily landing under this section. The Commission shall, however, issue rules and regulations to provide appropriate expeditious hearings for any alien crewman who requests a hearing and who has been denied permission to land temporarily, or whose temporary permission has been canceled, or who has been ordered deported under subsection (c).

"(c) The Commission may, if it determines that an alien is not a bona fide crewman or does not intend to depart on the vessel or aircraft which brought him, cancel the permission to land temporarily granted to such crewman, take such crewman into custody and require the master or commanding officer of the vessel or aircraft on which the crewman arrived to receive, detain, and deport him pursuant to section 354 of this act.

"(d) Any alien crewman who willfully remains in the United States in excess of the number of days permitted him by the Commission at or subsequent to his landing shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof may be fined not more than $250 or imprisoned for not more than 60 days, or both.

"SEC. 353. Hospital treatment of alien crewmen afflicted with certain diseases: An alien crewman who is found on arrival in a port of the United States to be afflicted with any of the disabilities or diseases mentioned in section 355, shall be placed and treated in a hospital designated by the Commission, all expenses connected therewith, including burial in the event of death, to be borne by the owner, agent, consignee, commanding officer, or master of the vessel or aircraft, and not to be deducted from the crewman's wages. An alien crewman suspected of being afflicted with any such disability or disease may be removed from the vessel or aircraft on which he arrived to an immigration station, or other appropriate place, for such observation as will enable the medical examiners to determine whether or not he is so afflicted, all expenses connected therewith, to be borne in the manner here-inbefore prescribed. In cases in which the Commission officer finds that it will not be possible within a reasonable time to effect a cure, the return of the alien crewman shall be enforced on, or at the expense of, the transportation line on which he came, upon such conditions as the Commission shall prescribe, to insure that the alien shall be properly cared for and protected, and that the spread of contagion shall be guarded against.

"SEC. 354. Control of alien crewmen: (a) Every alien crewman shall be detained on board the vessel on which he arrived, or at the airport of arrival of the aircraft, or at any other suitable place designated by the Commission, until completely inspected, including a physical examination. Any alien crewman who is excluded from the United States, or whose temporary admission is canceled, or who is ordered deported, shall also be detained in such vessel, airport or place. Such alien crewman shall be deported from the United States on, and as soon as, the vessel or aircraft on which he arrived departs. If the Commission finds that such detention or deportation is impracticable, or would cause undue hardship to such alien crewman, it may order him deported from the port of arrival or any other port on another vessel or aircraft owned or operated by the same transportation line as the vessel or aircraft on which he arrived, or if this is found impracticable on another vessel or aircraft.

"(b) Any person who fails to detain or deport any alien crewman as specified by subsection (a) of this section shall pay to the Commission a sum to be determined by it, not to exceed $1,000, for each alien crewman in respect of whom any such failure occurs.

"(c) Except as may be otherwise prescribed by rules and regulations issued by the Commission, proof that an alien crewman did not appear upon the outgoing manifest of the vessel or aircraft on which he arrived in the United States from any place outside thereof, or that he was reported by the master or commanding officer of such vessel or aircraft as a deserter, shall be prima facie evidence of a failure to detain or deport such alien crewman.

"(d) Except as otherwise provided by law, all expenses incurred in connection with detention and deportation under this section, including expenses incurred in transferring an alien crewman from one place in the United States to another under such conditions and safeguards as the Commission shall impose, shall be paid by the owner or owners of the vessel or aircraft on which the alien arrived in the United States. An alien crewman who is transferred within the United States in accordance with this subsection shall not be regarded as having entered or been admitted to the United States.

"SEC. 355. Employment on passenger vessels of aliens afflicted with certain disabilities: It shall be unlawful for any vessel or aircraft carrying passengers between a port of the United States and a port outside thereof to have on board upon arrival in the United States any alien crewman afflicted with feeblemindedness, insanity, epilepsy, tuberculosis in any form, leprosy, or any dangerous contagious disease. If the Commission finds that any such alien crewman was so afflicted at the time he was shipped or engaged and taken on board such a vessel or aircraft and that the existence of such affliction might have been detected by a competent medical examination at such time, the owner, commanding officer, master, agent, consignee, or charterer thereof shall pay to the Commission a sum, to be determined by it, not to exceed $500 for each alien crewman so afflicted.

"SEC. 356. Discharge of alien crewmen: It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly to pay off or discharge any alien crewman employed on board a vessel or aircraft arriving in the United States without first having obtained the consent of the Commission. If the Commission shall find that any alien crewman has been paid off or discharged in the United States in violation of the provisions of this section, such person shall pay to the Commission a sum, to be determined by it, not to exceed $1,000 for each such violation.

"SEC. 357. Bringing alien crewmen into the United States with intent to evade immigration laws: Any person who shall knowingly either sign on a vessel's articles, or bring to the United States, as one of the crew of a vessel or aircraft, from any place outside thereof, any alien, with intent to permit or assist such alien to enter or land in the United States in violation of law, or who shall falsely and knowingly represent to the Commission officer, at the time of application for a crew list visa, or at the port of arrival in the United States, that such alien is a bona fide member of the crew employed in any capacity regularly required for normal operation and services aboard such vessel or aircraft, shall pay to the Commission a sum, to be determined by it, not to exceed $5,000 for each such violation.

"CHAPTER 7—REGISTRATION OF ALIENS

"SEC. 361. Aliens seeking entry into the United States: No visa shall be issued to any alien seeking to enter the United States until he has been registered and fingerprinted in accordance with section 321 (b), unless he is exempted from being fingerprinted as provided in that section.

"SEC. 362. Registration of aliens in the United States: (a) It shall be the duty of every alien now or hereafter in the United States, who (1) is 16 years of age or older, (a) has not been registered and fingerprinted under section 321 (b) of this act, or section 30 or 31 of the Alien Registration Act of 1940, or section 222 (b) or 262 of the Immigration and Nationality Act, and (2) remains in the United States for 30 days or longer, to apply for registration and to be fingerprinted before the expiration of such 30 days. Aliens applying for alien registration shall make application therefor in such a manner and at such place as the Attorney General shall prescribe.

"(b) It shall be the duty of every parent or legal guardian of any alien now or hereafter in the United States, who (1) is less than 16 years of age, (2) has not been registered under section 321 (b) of this act, or section 30 or 31 of the Alien Registration Act, 1940, or section 222 (b) or 262 of the Immigration and Nationality Act, and (3) remains in the United States for 30 days or longer, to apply for the registration of the alien before the expiration of 30 days. Application for such registration shall be in a form and manner and at such place as the Attorney General shall prescribe. Whenever any alien attains his 16th birthday in the United States he shall, within 30 days thereafter, apply in person for registration and to be fingerprinted.

"SEC. 363. Provisions governing registration of special groups: Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 361 and 362, the Attorney General is authorized to prescribe special regulations and forms for the registration and fingerprinting of (1) alien crewmen, (2) holders of border-crossing cards, (3) aliens confined in institutions within the United States, (4) aliens under order of deportation, and (5) aliens of any other class not lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence.

"SEC. 364. Forms and procedure: (a) The Attorney General shall prepare forms for the registration and fingerprinting of aliens under sections 361 and 362 of this act. Such forms shall contain such inquiries as he may, after hearing, prescribe.

"(b) All registration and fingerprint records made under the provisions of this act shall be confidential, and shall be made available to the Commission and only to such other persons or departments or agencies as may be designated by the Attorney General.

"(c) Every person required to apply for the registration of himself or another under this title shall submit under oath the information required for such registration. Any person authorized by the Attorney General to register aliens under this title shall be authorized to administer oaths for such purpose.

"(d) Every alien in the United States who has been registered and fingerprinted under the provisions of the Alien Registration Act of 1940, or the Immigration and Nationality Act, or under the provisions of this act shall be issued a certificate of alien registration or an alien registration receipt card in such form and manner and at such time as shall be prescribed under regulations issued by the Attorney General.

"(e) Every alien, 16 years of age and over, shall at all times carry with him and have in his personal possession any certificate of alien registration or alien registration receipt card issued to him pursuant to subsection (d). Any alien who willfully fails to comply with the provisions of this subsection shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and may upon conviction be fined a sum not to exceed $50.

"SEC. 365. Notices of change of address: Every alien required to be registered under this title, or who was required to be registered under the Alien Registration Act of 1940, or the Immigration and Nationality Act, who is within the United States on the first day of January following the effective date of this act, or on the first day of January of each succeeding year shall, within 30 days following such dates, notify the Attorney General in writing of his current address and furnish such additional information as may by regulations be required by the Attorney General. Any such alien shall likewise notify the Attorney General in writing of each change of address and new address within 30 days from the date of such change. Any such alien who is temporarily absent from the United States on the first day of January following the effective date of this act, or on the first day of January of any succeeding year shall furnish his current address and other information as required by this section within 30 days after his return. In the case of an alien for whom a parent or legal guardian is required to apply for registration, the notice required by this section shall be given by such parent or legal guardian.

"SEC. 366. Penalties: (a) Any alien or any parent or legal guardian of any alien who willfully fails or refuses to comply with the provisions of section 362 of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof, may be fined a sum not to exceed $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 6 months, or both.

"(b) Any alien or any parent or legal guardian of any alien who willfully fails or refuses to comply with the provisions of section 365 of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof, may be fined a sum not to exceed $100.

"(c) Any alien or any parent or legal guardian of any alien, who files an application for registration containing material statements known by him to be false, or who procures or attempts to procure registration of himself or another person through fraud which is willful and material, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof, may be fined a sum not to exceed $1,000, or be imprisoned not more than 6 months, or both.

"(d) Any person who with unlawful intent photographs, prints, or in any other manner makes, or executes, any engraving, photograph, print, or impression or any imitation in the likeness of any certificate of alien registration or alien registration receipt card authorized under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Attorney General, shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, may be fined not to exceed $5,000 or be imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"SEC. 367. Enforcement by the Attorney General: The Attorney General shall enforce and administer the provisions of this act with respect to the registration of aliens within the United States. The Attorney General and the Commission shall furnish each other with such information as each may request with respect to any alien who has entered the United States.

"CHAPTER 8—GENERAL PENALTY PROVISIONS

"SEC. 371. Prevention of unauthorized landing of aliens: (a) It shall be the duty of every person, bringing or providing means for an alien to come to the United States, to prevent the landing of such alien in the United States at any time or place other than as designated by the Commission. Any such person who fails to comply with the foregoing requirements shall pay to the Commission a sum, to be determined by it, not to exceed $1,000 for each such violation.

"(b) Proof that the alien failed to present himself at the time and place designated by the Commission shall be prima facie evidence that such alien has landed in the United States at a time or place other than as designated by the Commisison.

"SEC. 372. Bringing in aliens illegally: (a) No person shall bring to the United States from any place outside thereof (other than from foreign contiguous territory) any alien (other than an alien crewman), (1) who is not in possession of a valid unexpired visa or other document authorizing such alien to enter the United States; or (2) who is excludable under section 302 (b) (2) or (5).

"(b) Any person who brings such an alien to the United States shall pay to the Commission a sum, to be determined by it, not to exceed $1,000 for each violation, unless such person did not know or could not have ascertained by exercise of reasonable diligence, prior to embarkation of the alien transported, that he was an alien; or that, being an alien, his visa or other documents authorizing entry were invalid or had expired or that the alien was excludable under section 302 (b) (2) or (5).

"(c) Nothing contained in this section shall be construed to subject any person to a penalty for bringing to the United States any alien, (1) who is entitled by law to exemption from the provisions of section 302 (b) (2) or (5); or (2) who is admitted to the United States.

"SEC. 373. Alien stowaways; detention and deportation: (a) Until he has been inspected by the Commission officer, every alien stowaway shall be detained either at such suitable place as the Commission officer may designate or aboard the vessel or at the airport of arrival of the aircraft on which he arrived at the United States.

"(b) After inspection, if so ordered, the stowaways shall be deported and as soon as the vessel or aircraft on which he arrived departs, or if this is impracticable or impossible, on another leaving within a reasonable time after inspection.

"(c) The expenses of detention prior to as well as those of deportation shall both be paid by the person whose vessel or aircraft brought the alien stowaway to the United States.

"(d) Any person who fails to detain or deport an alien stowaway as required by this section shall pay to the Commission a sum, to be determined by it, not to exceed $1,000 for each such failure.

"(e) Unless he is in possession of a valid unexpired visa or reentry permit issued to him, or is admissible under section 302 (a) (4), the provisions of section 304 shall not apply to any alien who arrives as a stowaway, and such an alien shall not be permitted to land in the United States except pursuant to such rules and regulations as the Commission may prescribe for (1) medical treatment, or (2) detention pending deportation.

"SEC. 374. Bringing in and harboring certain aliens: (a) Any person who knowingly—

"(1) brings into or lands in the United States, by any means of transportation or otherwise, or attempts, by himself or through another, to bring into or land in the United States, by any means of transportation or otherwise; or

"(2) conceals, harbors, or shields from detection, or attempts to conceal, harbor, or shield from detection, in any place, including any building, or any means of transportation; or

"(3) induces, or attempts to induce, either directly or indirectly, the entry into the United States of, any alien who, to such person's knowledge, was not duly admitted by the Commission or is not lawfully entitled to enter or reside within the United States under the terms of this act or any other law relating to the immigration or expulsion of aliens, shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof may be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,000 or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding 5 years, or both, for each alien in respect to whom any violation of this subsection occurs.

"(b) No officer or person shall have authority to make any arrest for a violation of any provision of this section except officers and employees designated by rules and regulations of the Commission, either individually or as a member of a class, and all other officers whose duty it is to enforce criminal laws of the United States.

"SEC. 375. Entry of alien at improper time or place; misrepresentation and concealment of facts: Any alien who (1) knowingly enters the United States at any time or place other than as designated by the Commission, or (2) knowingly eludes examination or inspection by Commission officers; or (3) obtains entry to the United States by fraud which is willful and material, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof, may be punished by imprisonment for not more than 6 months, or by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by both.

"SEC. 376. Reentry of deported alien: Any alien who has been arrested and deported or excluded and deported, and thereafter voluntarily enters, attempts to enter, or is at any time in, the United States, without complying with provisions for advance consent as a condition of readmittance into the United States, or without being lawfully admitted, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof, may be punished by imprisonment of not more than 1 year, or by a fine of not more than $500, or both.

"SEC. 377. Aiding or assisting subversive alien to enter the United States: Any person who, with knowledge that an alien is excludable under subsections (h) and (i) of section 301 of this act, aids or assists such alien to enter the United States, or who connives or conspires with any person or persons to allow, procure, or permit any such alien to enter the United States, shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof may be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 10 years, or both.

"SEC. 378. Importation of aliens for immoral purposes: Whoever shall, directly or indirectly, bring or attempt to bring into the United States any alien for the purpose of prostitution or for the purpose of engaging in any other unlawful commercialized vice, or shall hold or attempt to hold any alien for any such purpose in pursuance of such entry, or shall keep, maintain, control, support, employ, or harbor in any house or other place, for such purpose, any alien, in pursuance of such illegal entry, shall, in every such case, be guilty of a felony and upon conviction thereof may be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 and by imprisonment for a term of not more than 5 years. The prosecution of offenses under this section may be brought in any district into which such alien is brought by the person or persons accused, or in any district in which a violation of any of the provisions of this section occurs.

"SEC. 379. Collection of penalties and expenses: (a) Any penalties, fines or expenses assessed or imposed under sections 331, 332, 333, 336, 338, 344, 351, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 371, 372, and 373, of this act, after hearing and determination in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Commission, shall be paid to the Commission and be a lien upon the vessel or aircraft whose owner, master, officer, agent, charterer, or consignee has violated such sections. Pending final determination of liability for such penalty no such vessel or aircraft shall be granted clearance except that clearance may be granted upon deposit of a sum sufficient to cover such penalty or a bond with sufficient surety to secure payment thereof approved by the Commission.

"(b) The provisions of subsection (a) of this section shall not be regarded as the sole and exclusive means or remedy for the enforcement of any payment of any penalty, fine or expenses imposed or incurred under sections there specified. In the discretion of the Commission the amount thereof may be recovered by a civil suit, in the name of the United States, from any person made liable under any of such sections.

"CHAPTER 9—MISCELLANEOUS

"SEC. 381. Schedule of fees: (a) The following fees shall be charged:

"(1) For the furnishing and verification of each application for an immigrant visa (which shall include the furnishing and verification of the duplicate), $5;

"(2) For the issuance of each immigrant visa, $10;

"(3) For the issuance, or extension, of a reentry permit, $5, except a border crossing card, $1; and

"(4) For the filing of each application for adjustment of status under section 346, $10.

"(b) The fees for the furnishing and verification of applications of visas by nonimmigrants of each foreign country and for the issuance of visas and extension thereof, to nonimmigrants of each foreign country shall be prescribed by the Commission in amounts corresponding, as nearly as practicable, to the total of all similar visa, entry, residence, or other fees, taxes, or charges assessed or levied against citizens of the United States by the foreign countries of which such nonimmigrants are nationals or stateless residents. Nonimmigrant visas issued to aliens coming to the United States in transit to and from the headquarters district of the United Nations in accordance with the provisions of the Headquarters Agreement shall be gratis.

"(c) Reasonable fees may be charged by the Commission in cases where such fees have not been established by law, to cover the cost of furnishing copies, whether certified or uncertified, of any part of the records, or information from the records, of the Commission. (The Commission may lend copies, for short periods, without charge.) No such fee shall be required from officers or agencies of the United States or of any State or subdivision thereof, for such copies of information furnished for official use in connection with the official duties of such officers or agencies.

"(d) No fees shall be charged under this act except as specifically provided by this section and sections 435 and 463.

"SEC. 382. Printing of certain blank forms: The Public Printer is authorized to print for sale to the public by the Superintendent of Documents, upon prepayment, copies of blank forms of manifests and crew lists and such other forms as may be prescribed and authorized by the Commission.

"SEC. 383. Members of the Armed Forces: Nothing contained in this title shall be construed so as to limit, restrict, deny, or affect the coming into or departure from the United States of an alien member of the Armed Forces of the United States who is in unform of, or who bears documents identifying him as a member of, such Armed Forces, and who is coming to or departing from the United States under official orders or permit of such Armed Forces. Nothing in this section shall be construed to confer upon any such alien any other privileges, rights, benefits, exemptions, or immunities.

"SEC. 384. Disposal of privileges at immigrant stations: (a) Subject to such conditions as the Commission shall prescribe, all exclusive privileges of exchanging money, transporting passengers or baggage, keeping eating houses, or other like privileges in connection with any United States immigrant station, shall be disposed of to the lowest responsible and capable bidder (other than an alien) in accordance with the provisions of section 3708 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (41 U. S. C. 5), and for the use of Government property in connection with the exercise of such exclusive privileges a reasonable rental may be charged. The feeding of aliens, or the furnishing of any other necessary service in connection with any United States immigrant station, may be performed by the Commission without regard to the foregoing provisions of this subsection if the Commission finds that it would be advantageous to the Government in terms of economy and efficiency. No intoxicating liquors shall be sold at any immigrant station.

"(b) Such articles determined by the Commission to be necessary to the health and welfare of aliens detained at any immigrant station, when not otherwise readily procurable by such aliens, may be sold at reasonable prices to such aliens through Government canteens operated by the Commission, under such conditions as the Commission shall prescribe.

"(c) All rentals or other receipts accruing from the disposal of privileges, and all moneys arising from the sale of articles through Commission-operated canteens, authorized by this section, shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation for the enforcement of this title.

"SEC. 385. Disposition of moneys collected under the provisions of this title: (a) All moneys paid into the Treasury to reimburse the Commission for detention, transportation, hospitalization, and all other expenses of detained aliens paid from the appropriation for the enforcement of this act, and all moneys paid into the Treasury to reimburse the Commission for expenses of landing stations referred to in section 337 (c) paid by the Commission from the appropriation for the enforcement of this act, shall be credited to the appropriation for the enforcement of this act for the fiscal year in which the expenses were incurred.

"(b) Except as otherwise provided in this title, all moneys received in payment of fees and administrative fines and penalties under this title shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. All fees received from applicants residing in the Virgin Islands of the United States, and in Guam, required to be paid under section 381, shall be paid over to the treasury of the Virgin Islands and to the treasury of Guam, respectively.

"SEC. 386. American Indians born in Canada: Nothing in this title shall be construed to affect the right of American Indians born in Canada to pass the borders of the United States, but such right shall not extend to non-Indians whose membership in Indian tribes or families is created by adoption.

"SEC. 387. Central file; information from other departments and agencies: (a) There shall be established in the office of the Commission, for the use of the security and enforcement agencies of the Government of the United States, a central index, which shall contain the names of all aliens heretofore admitted to the United States, or excluded therefrom, insofar as such information is available from the records of the Commission, and the names of all aliens hereafter admitted to the United States, or excluded therefrom, the names of their sponsors of record, if any, and such other relevant information as the Commission shall require as an aid to the proper enforcement of this act.

"(b) Any information in any records kept by any department or agency of the Government as to the identity and location of aliens in the United States shall be made available to the Commission upon request by the Commission to the head of any such department or agency.

"(c) The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare shall notify the Commission upon request whenever any alien is issued a social security account number and social security card. It shall also furnish such available information as may be requested by the Commission regarding the identity and location of aliens in the United States.

"(d) A written certification signed by any officer of the Commission designated by it to make such certification, that after diligent search no record or entry of a special nature is found to exist in the records of the Commission, shall be admissible as evidence in any proceeding as evidence that the records of the Commission contain no such record or entry, and shall have the same effect as the testimony of a witness given in open court.

"SEC. 388. Burden of proof: The burden of proof shall be upon any alien—

"(1) when he applies for a visa to show that he is eligible therefor under the immigration laws;

"(2) when he attempts to enter the United States without a visa or other entry document to show that he is not subject to exclusion under the immigration laws; and

"(3) in any deportation proceedings commenced within 5 years of his entry to show the time, place, and manner of his entry into the United States; but in presenting such proof he shall be entitled to the production of his visa, if any, and of other relevant documents in the custody of the Commission or other agency or department of the United States.

"SEC. 389. Local jurisdiction over immigrant stations: The Commission shall admit to the various immigrant stations the proper State and local officers charged with the enforcement of the laws of the State or Territory of the United States in which any such immigrant station is located in order that such State and local officers may preserve the peace and make arrests for crimes under the laws of the States and Territories. For the purpose of this section, the jurisdiction of such State and local officers and of the State and local courts shall extend over such immigrant stations.

"TITLE IV—CITIZENSHIP AND NATURALIZATION

"CHAPTER 1—CITIZENSHIP AT BIRTH AND BY COLLECTIVE NATURALIZATION

"SEC. 401. Citizens of the United States at birth: (a) The following are citizens of the United States at birth:

"(1) A person born in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof;

"(2) A person born in the United States to a member of an Indian, Eskimo, Aleutian, or other aboriginal tribe. This paragraph shall not impair or otherwise affect the right of such person to tribal or other property;

"(3) A person of unknown parentage found in the United States while under the age of 5 years, unless within 5 years after he is found, it is shown that he was born outside the United States;

"(4) A person born outside of the United States of parents both of whom are citizens of the United States and one of whom resided in the United States prior to the birth of such person; and

"(5) A person born outside the United States of parents one of whom is an alien, and the other a citizen of the United States who, prior to the birth of such person, resided in the United States for a period or periods totaling not less than 5 years.

"(b) Any person who is a citizen of the United States at birth under paragraph (5) of subsection (a) shall lose his citizenship unless he comes to the United States and resides continuously in the United States for at least 5 years between the ages of 14 and 28. Active service in the Armed Forces of the United States shall be considered as residence for this purpose. This subsection shall not apply to a child born abroad whose American parent is, at the time of the child's birth, residing abroad solely or principally in the employment of the Government of the United States or a bona fide American educational, scientific, philanthropic, religious, commercial, or financial organization, having its principal office or place of business in the United States, or an international agency of an official character in which the United States participates.

"SEC. 402. Persons born or residing in Puerto Rico: (a) All persons born in Puerto Rico on or after April 11, 1899, and prior to January 13, 1941, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, residing on January 13, 1941, in Puerto Rico or other territory over which the United States exercises rights of sovereignty and not citizens of the United States under any other act, are citizens of the United States as of January 13, 1941. All persons born in Puerto Rico on or after January 13, 1941, and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, are citizens of the United States at birth.

"(b) All inhabitants of Puerto Rico on April 11, 1899, including those temporarily absent from the island on that date, who were Spanish subjects, who after that date continued to reside in Puerto Rico or other territory over which the United States exercises sovereignty, and who have taken no affirmative steps to preserve or acquire foreign nationality are citizens of the United States as of the effective date of this act.

"SEC. 403. Persons born in the Canal Zone or Republic of Panama on or after February 26, 1904: (a) Any person born in the Canal Zone on or after February 26, 1904, and whether before or after the effective date of this act, whose father or mother, at the time of the birth of such person was or is a citizen of the United States, is a citizen of the United States.

"(b) Any person born in the Republic of Panama on or after February 26, 1904, and whether before or after the effective date of this Act, whose father or mother at the time of the birth of such person was or is a citizen of the United States employed by the Government of the United States or by the Panama Railroad Company, or its successor in title, is a citizen of the United States.

"SEC. 404. Persons born in Alaska on or after March 30, 1867: A person born in Alaska on or after March 30, 1867, except a noncitizen Indian, is a citizen of the United States at birth. A noncitizen Indian born in Alaska on or after March 30, 1867, and prior to June 2, 1924, is a citizen of the United States as of June 2, 1924. An Indian born in Alaska on or after June 2, 1924, is a citizen of the United States at birth.

"SEC. 405. Persons born in Hawaii: A person born in Hawaii on or after August 12, 1898, and before April 30, 1900, is a citizen of the United States as of April 30, 1900. A person born in Hawaii on or after April 30, 1900, is a citizen of the United States at birth. A person who was a citizen of the Republic of Hawaii on August 12, 1898, is a citizen of the United States as of April 30, 1900.

"SEC. 406. Persons living in and born in the Virgin Islands: (a) The following persons, and their children born subsequent to January 17, 1917, and prior to February 25, 1927, are citizens of the United States as of February 25, 1927:

"(1) All former Danish citizens who, on January 17, 1917, resided in the Virgin Islands of the United States, and were residing in those islands or in the United States or Puerto Rico on February 25, 1927, and who did not make the declaration required to preserve their Danish citizenship by article 6 of the treaty entered into on August 4, 1916, between the United States and Denmark, or who, having made such a declaration have heretofore renounced or may hereafter renounce it by a declaration before a court of record;

"(2) All natives of the Virgin Islands of the United States who, on January 17, 1917, resided in those islands, and were residing in those islands or in the United States or Puerto Rico on February 25, 1927, and who were not on February 25, 1927, citizens or subjects of any foreign country;

"(3) All natives of the Virgin Islands of the United States who, on January 17, 1917, resided in the United States, and were residing in those islands on February 25, 1927, and who were not on February 25, 1927, citizens or subjects of any foreign country; and

"(4) All natives of the Virgin Islands of the United States who, on June 28, 1932, were residing in continental United States, the Virgin Islands of the United States, Puerto Rico, the Canal Zone, or any other insular possession or Territory of the United States and who, on June 28, 1932, were not citizens or subjects of any foreign country, regardless of their place of residence on January 17, 1917.

"(b) All persons born in the Virgin Islands of the United States on or after January 17, 1917, and prior to February 25, 1927, and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States are citizens of the United States as of February 25, 1927; and all persons born in those islands on or after February 25, 1927, and subject to the jurisdiction of the United States are citizens of the United States at birth.

"SEC. 407. Persons living in and born in Guam: (a) The following persons and their children born after April 11, 1899, are citizens of the United States as of August 1, 1950, if they were residing on August 1, 1950, on the island of Guam or other territory over which the United States exercises rights of sovereignty:

"(1) All inhabitants of the island of Guam on April 11, 1899, including those temporarily absent from the island on that date, who were Spanish subjects, who after that date continued to reside in Guam or other territory over which the United States exercises sovereignty, and who have taken no affirmative steps to preserve or acquire foreign nationality; and

"(2) All persons born on the island of Guam who resided in Guam on April 11, 1899, including those temporarily absent from the island on that date, who after that date continued to reside on Guam or other territory over which the United States exercises sovereignty, and who have taken no affirmative steps to preserve or acquire foreign nationality.

"(b) All persons born on the island of Guam on or after April 11, 1899 (whether before or after August 1, 1950), subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, are citizens of the United States, except persons born before August 1, 1950, who have taken affirmative steps to preserve or acquire foreign nationality.

"(c) This section shall not confer citizenship upon any person who was a citizen or national of a country other than the United States and prior to August 1, 1952, made a declaration under oath of his desire to retain his then political status.

"SEC. 408. Nationals declared citizens: All persons who, immediately preceding the effective date of this act, were nationals but not citizens of the United States are declared to be citizens of the United States as of the effective date of this act, except persons born before such date who have taken affirmative steps to preserve or acquire foreign nationality.

"(b) Any person upon whom United States citizenship is conferred by this section who is a citizen or national of a country other than the United States and does not desire to accept United States citizenship shall, within 2 years of the effective date of this act, make a declaration under oath of his refusal to accept, such declaration to be in the form and executed in the manner prescribed by regulations. From and after the making of such a declaration any such person shall not be a citizen of the United States under the provisions of this section.

"SEC. 409. Children born out of wedlock: A person born out of wedlock may not claim United States citizenship at birth under section 401 (a) (4) or (5) through his father unless his paternity is established by legitimation while he is under the age of 21.

"CHAPTER 2—NEUTRALIZATION COURTS; ELIGIBILITY FOR NATURALIZATION

"SEC. 411. Jurisdiction to naturalize: Exclusive jurisdiction to naturalize persons as citizens of the United States is conferred upon the following specified courts: District courts of the United States in any State, District Courts of the United States for the Territories of Hawaii and Alaska, and for the District of Columbia and for Puerto Rico, the district court of the Virgin Islands of the United States, and the district court of Guam; also all courts of record in any State or Territory having a seal, a clerk, and general jurisdiction in actions at law or equity. Jurisdiction of all the courts herein specified to naturalize shall extend only over persons resident within the respective jurisdiction of such courts except as otherwise specifically provided in this title.

"(b) Petitions for naturalization may be filed in any State court having naturalization jurisdiction within the State judicial district or circuit in which the petitioner resides, whether or not he resides within the county in which the petition for naturalization is filed.

"(c) The courts herein specified, upon request of the clerks of such courts, shall be furnished from time to time by the Commission with such forms as may be required in naturalization proceedings.

"(d) A person may be naturalized as a citizen of the United States only in the manner and under the conditions prescribed in this title.

"SEC. 412. Eligibility for naturalization: The right of a person to become a naturalized citizen of the United States shall not be denied or abridged because of race or sex or because such person is married.

"SEC. 413. Prohibition of the naturalization of subversives: No alien may be naturalized as a citizen of the United States who within 5 years prior to the filing of his petition for naturalization or at any time subsequent thereto has advocated or taught subversive doctrine, or was a member of or affiliated with any organization which then advocated or taught subversive doctrine.

"SEC. 414. Ineligibility to naturalization of deserters from the Armed Forces of the United States: Any alien who, at any time during which the United States has been or shall be at war, deserted or shall desert the military, air, or naval forces of the United States, or who, having been duly enrolled, departed or shall depart from the jurisdiction of the district in which enrolled, or who, whether or not having been duly enrolled, went or shall go beyond the limits of the United States, with intent to avoid any draft into the military, air, or naval service, lawfully ordered, shall, upon conviction thereof by a court-martial or a court of competent jurisdiction, be permanently ineligible to become a citizen of the United States; and such deserters and evaders shall be forever incapable of holding any office of trust or of profit under the United States.

"SEC. 415. Alien relieved from training and service in the Armed Forces of the United States because of alienage barred from citizenship: (a) Any alien having been admitted for permanent residence and who being subject to military service applies or has applied for exemption or discharge from training or service in the Armed Forces or in the National Security Training Corps of the United States on the ground that he is an alien, and is or was relieved or discharged from such training or service on such ground, shall be ineligible to become a citizen of the United States.

"(b) This section shall not apply in the case of any alien who, after obtaining such exemption or discharge, thereafter waives his exemption and makes himself available for service in the Armed Forces of the United States. Length of residence for the purpose of citizenship as required in section 422 shall be computed from the date upon which the exemption is waived.

"SEC. 416. Enemy aliens; nationalization under specified conditions and procedure: (a) An enemy alien shall be naturalized if—

"(1) his petition for naturalization is pending at the start of the state of war;

"(2) his loyalty has been established after investigation by the Commission; and

"(3) he is otherwise eligible for naturalization.

"(b) No enemy alien may file a petition for naturalization unless he first receives permission to do so from the Commission. Permission shall not be given until the loyalty of such alien has been established after an investigation.

"(c) A final hearing shall be help upon a petition for naturalization of an enemy alien only after the Commission has been given at least 90 days' notice thereof. Such final hearing shall be continued for such reasonable periods as the Commission may request.

"(d) This section shall not prevent the lawful apprehension, detention, or removal of any enemy alien at any time prior to his naturalization.

"(e) As used in this section 'enemy alien' means an alien who is a native, citizen, subject, or denizen of any state with which the United States is at war except as the President may otherwise provide. Such status shall cease upon the determination by proclamation of the President, or by concurrent resolution of the Congress, that hostilities between the United States and such state have ended.

"CHAPTER 3—GENERAL REQUIREMENTS FOR NATURALIZATION

"SEC. 421. Requirements as to understanding the English language, history, principles, and form of government of the United States: (a) No alien except as otherwise provided in this title shall be naturalized as a citizen of the United States upon his own petition who cannot reasonably demonstrate—

"(1) an understanding of the English language, including an ability to read and speak words in ordinary usage in the English language; and

"(2) a knowledge and understanding of the fundamentals of the history, and of the principles and form of government, of the United States.

"(b) Ability to read shall be tested on the basis of simple words and phrases, and no extraordinary or unreasonable condition shall be imposed upon the applicant.

"(c) The requirements of subsection (a) (1) of this section shall not apply to any person physically unable to comply therewith, if otherwise qualified to be naturalized, or to any person who (A) is over 50 years of age on the effective date of this act, and (B) has been living in the United States for 20 years.

"SEC. 422. Requirements as to residence, good moral character, attachment to the principles of the Constitution, and favorable disposition to the United States: (a) No alien, except as otherwise provided in this title, shall be naturalized unless such petitioner—

"(1) immediately preceding the date of filing his petition for naturalization has resided continuously, after being lawfully admitted for permanent residence, within the United States for at least 5 years and who has resided within the State in which the petitioner filed the petition for at least 6 months;

"(2) has resided continuously within the United States from the date of the petition up to the time of admission to citizenship; and

"(3) during all the periods referred to in this subsection has been and still is a person of good moral character, attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the United States.

"(b) Absence from the United States for 6 months or less during the period for which continuous residence is required for admission to citizenship, immediately preceding the date of filing a petition for naturalization, or during the period between the date of filing the petition and the date of final hearing shall not break the continuity of such residence. Absence from the United States for more than 6 months but less than 1 year during the period for which continuous residence is required for admission to citizenship, immediately preceding the date of filing the petition for naturalization, or during the period between the date of filing the petition and the date of final hearing, shall be presumed to break the continuity of such residence, but such presumption may be overcome by evidence satisfactory to the naturalization court that such individual had a reasonable cause for not sooner returning to the United States. Absence from the United States for a continuous period of 1 year or more during the period for which continuous residence is required for admission to citizenship (whether preceding or subsequent to the filing of the petition for naturalization) shall break the continuity of such residence, except in the case of a person eligible for the benefits of section 423.

"(c) In determining whether the petitioner has sustained the burden of establishing good moral character during the preceding 5 years and the other qualifications for citizenship specified in subsection (a) of this section, the court may take into consideration as a basis for such determinations the petitioner's conduct and acts before as well as during that period.

"SEC. 423. Temporary absence of persons performing certain duties: (a) Any alien who has been physically present and residing within the United States for an uninterrupted period of at least 1 year following lawful admission for permanent residence shall, notwithstanding any absences prior to or after the effective date of this act, be considered as residing in the United States for the purpose of naturalization within the meaning of section 422 (a), notwithstanding any such absence from the United States, if such absence was solely for the purpose of—

"(1) performing the ministerial or priestly functions of a religious denomination having a bona fide organization within the United States;

"(2) acting as a missionary, brother, nun, or sister, of a religious denomination or an interdenominational mission organization having a bona fide organization within the United States;

"(3) employment by or under contract with the Government of the United States;

"(4) employment by a public international organization of which the United States is a member under treaty or statute;

"(5) employment by or under contract with an American institution of research recognized as such by the Commission;

"(6) employment by or under contract with an American philanthropic agency recognized as such by the Commission; or

"(7) employment by an American firm or corporation performing work abroad under contract with the United States Government or engaged in whole or in part in the development of foreign trade and commerce of the United States, or an affiliate thereof which is substantially controlled by the American firm or corporation and is recognized as such by the Commission.

"(b) The benefits of subsection (a) of this section shall apply equally to the spouse and child of the alien, if living in his household.

"SEC. 424. Requirement of lawful entry for naturalization; burden of proof: (a) Except as otherwise provided in this title, no alien shall be naturalized unless he has been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence.

"(b) The burden of proof shall be upon such alien to show that he is a lawfully admitted alien, but in presenting such proof he shall be entitled to the production of all relevant documents in the custody of the Commission or any other department or agency of the United States.

"(c) Except as provided in section 437 no alien shall be naturalized against whom there is outstanding a final order of deportation pursuant to a warrant of arrest issued under the provisions of this or any other act; and no petition for naturalization shall be finally heard by a naturalization court while a deportation proceeding is pending against the petitioner.

"(d) No finding of the Commission in any proceeding under this act shall bind the naturalization court with respect to the question of whether an alien has established his eligibility for naturalization under this title.

"SEC. 425. Resident Philippine citizens excepted from certain requirements: Any person who (1) was a citizen of the Commonwealth of the Philippines on July 2, 1946, (2) entered the United States prior to May 1, 1934, and (3) has, since such entry, resided continuously in the United States shall be regarded as having been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence for the purpose of petitioning for naturalization under this title.

"SEC. 426. Constructive residence through service on certain United States vessels: (a) (1) Any periods of time during all of which an alien who was previously lawfully admitted for permanent residence has served honorably or with good conduct, in any capacity other than as a member of the Armed Forces of the United States (A) on board a vessel operated by the United States, or any agency thereof; or (B) on board a vessel whose home port is in the United States, and (i) which is registered under the laws of the United States, or (ii) title to which is in a citizen of the United States, or a corporation organized under the laws of any of the several States of the United States, shall be deemed residence within the United States within the meaning of section 422 (a) of this title, if such service occurred within 5 years immediately preceding the date such alien files petition for naturalization. Service on vessels described in clause (A) of this paragraph may be proved by duly authenticated copies of the records of the executive departments or agency having custody of the records of such service. Service on vessels described in clause (B) of this paragraph may be proved by certificates from the masters of such vessels.

"(2) For the purposes of this subsection, any periods of time prior to September 23, 1950, during all of which any person had served honorably or with good conduct for an aggregate period of 5 years on any vessel described in section 325 (a) of the Nationality Act of 1940 prior to its amendment by the act of September 23, 1950, shall be deemed residence within the United States within the meaning of section 422 (a) of this title, if such petition is filed within 1 year from the effective date of this act. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 424, an alien entitled to claim the exemptions contained in this paragraph shall not be required to establish a lawful admission for permanent residence.

"(3) For the purposes of this subsection, any periods of time prior to September 23, 1950, during all of which any alien not within the provisions of paragraph (2) had, prior to September 23, 1950, served honorably or with good conduct on any vessel described in section 325 (a) of the Nationality Act of 1940 prior to its amendment by the act of September 23, 1950, and was so serving on September 23, 1950, shall be deemed residence within the United States within the meaning of section 422 (a) of this title, if such alien at any time prior to filing his petition for naturalization shall have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence, and if such petition is filed on or before September 23, 1955.

"(b) Any alien who was excepted from certain requirements of the naturalization laws under section 325 of the Nationality Act of 1940 prior to its amendment by the act of September 23, 1950, and had filed a petition for naturalization under section 325 of the Nationality Act of 1940, may, if such petition was pending on September 23, 1950, and is still pending on the effective date of this act, be naturalized upon compliance with the applicable provisions of the naturalization laws in effect upon the date such petition was filed. Such an alien shall be subject to the provisions of section 413 and to those provisions of section 424 which relate to the prohibition against the naturalization of an alien against whom there is outstanding a final order of deportation pursuant to a warrant of arrest issued under the provisions of this act, or which relate to the prohibition against the final hearing on a petition for naturalization if there is pending against the alien a deportation proceeding pursuant to a warrant of arrest issued under the provisions of this or any other act.

"CHAPTER 4—NATURALIZATION PROVISIONS APPLICABLE TO PARTICULAR GROUPS

"SEC. 431. Married persons: (a) Any alien whose spouse is a citizen of the United States may be naturalized upon compliance with all the requirements of this title except the provisions of paragraph (1) of section 422 (a) if such person—

"(1) immediately preceding the date of filing his petition for naturalization has resided continuously within the United States for at least 1 year, after being lawfully admitted for permanent residence;

"(2) is living in marital union with the citizen spouse at the time of naturalization; and

"(3) has resided in the State in which he filed his petition for at least 6 months.

"(b) Any alien may be naturalized upon compliance with all the requirements of this title, except that no prior residence or specified period of physical presence within the United States or within the jurisdiction of the naturalization court shall be required if—

"(1) his spouse is (A) a citizen of the United States, (B) in the employment of the Government of the United States, or of an American institution of research recognized as such by the Commission or an American philanthropic agency recognized as such by the Commission, or of an American firm or corporation performing work abroad under contract with the United States Government or engaged in whole or in part in the development of foreign trade and commerce of the United States, or an affiliate thereof, which is substantially controlled by such American firm or corporation, or of a public international organization in which the United States participates by treaty or statute, and (C) regularly stationed abroad in such employment;

"(2) he is in the United States at the time of naturalization; and

"(3) he declares in good faith before the naturalization court an intention to take up or continue residence within the United States immediately upon the termination of such employment abroad of the citizen spouse.

"SEC. 432. Alien child born outside of United States of one or both citizen parents: (a) An alien child under the age of 18 born outside of the United States of citizen parents who have never thereafter ceased to be citizens of the United States, becomes a citizen of the United States if one of his parents takes up residence in the United States—

"(1) if such child resides at that time in the United States; or

"(2) upon the child's subsequent admission to the United States for permanent residence.

"(b) An alien child under the age of 18 born outside of the United States, one of whose parents at the time of the child's birth was an alien and the other of whose parents then was and never thereafter ceased to be a citizen of the United States, becomes a citizen of of United States if his alien parent is naturalized, or if the citizen parent completes 5 years of residence in the United States—

"(1) if such child resides at that time in the United States; or

"(2) upon the child's subsequent admission to the United States for permanent residence.

"(c) An alien child under the age of 18 born outside of the United States, one or both of whose parents is at the time of petitioning for the naturalization of the child, a citizen of the United States may be naturalized, on the petition of such citizen parent, upon compliance with all the provisions of this title, except that no particular period of residence in the United States is required if he resides permanently in the United States with the petitioning parent pursuant to a lawful admission for permanent residence. If the child is of tender years the court may waive any and all requirements of sections 421 and 422.

"SEC. 433. Child born outside of United States of alien parents; conditions under which citizenship automatically acquired: An alien child under the age of 18 born outside of the United States of alien parents, or of an alien parent and a citizen parent who has subsequently lost citizenship of the United States, becomes a citizen of the United States—

"(1) the naturalization of both parents; or

"(2) the naturalization of the surviving parent if one of the parents is deceased; or

"(3) the naturalization of the parent having legal custody of the child when there has been a legal separation of the parents or the naturalization of the mother if the child was born out of wedlock and the paternity of the child has not been established by legitimation, if such child is residing in the United States pursuant to a lawful admission for permanent residence at the time of the naturalization of the parent last naturalized under clause (1) of this section, or of the parent naturalized under clause (2) or (3) of this section, or if such child thereafter begins to reside permanently in the United States while under the age of 18 years, pursuant to a lawful admission.

"SEC. 434. Children adopted by United States citizens: An adopted alien child under the age of 18 one of whose adoptive parents is a citizen of the United States may be naturalized on the petition of such adoptive parent upon compliance with all the provisions of this title, except that no particular period of residence shall be required. If the child is of tender years, the court may waive any and all requirements of sections 421 and 422.

"SEC. 435. Former citizens of United States regaining United States citizenship: (a) Any person formerly a citizen of the United States who (1) prior to September 22, 1922, lost United States citizenship by marriage to an alien, or by the loss of United States citizenship of such person's spouse, or (2) on or after September 22, 1922, lost United States citizenship by marriage to an alien ineligible to citizenship, may, if no other nationality was acquired by an affirmative act other than marriage, regain citizenship upon compliance with all requirements of this title, except—

"(1) no period of residence within the United States or within the State where the petition is filed shall be required;

"(2) the petition need not set forth that it is the intention of the petitioner to reside permanently within the United States;

"(3) the petition may be filed in any court having naturalization jurisdiction, regardless of the residence of the petitioner; and

"(4) the petition may be heard at any time after filing if there is attached to the petition at the time of filing a certificate from a naturalization examiner stating that the petitioner and her witnesses have appeared before such examiner for examination.

Such person, or any person who regains citizenship in accordance with the provisions of section 317 (a) of the Nationality Act of 1940, or section 324 (a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, shall have, after regaining her citizenship, the status of a native-born or naturalized citizen of the United States, whichever status existed in the case of such person prior to the loss of citizenship. Nothing contained herein or in any other provision of law shall be construed as conferring United States citizenship retroactively upon such a person, or upon any person who regained citizenship in accordance with the provisions of section 317 (a) of the Nationality Act of 1940, or section 324 (a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act during any period in which such person was not a citizen.

"(b) No person who is otherwise eligible for citizenship in accordance with the provisions of subsection (a) of this section shall regain citizenship unless such person establishes to the satisfaction of the naturalization court that she—

"(1) has been a person of good moral character, attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the United States for a period of not less than 5 years immediately preceding the date of filing her petition to regain citizenship and up to the time of admission to citizenship; and

"(2) unless she has resided continuously in the United States since the date of her marriage and was lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence prior to filing her petition to regain citizenship.

"(c) (1) A woman who was a citizen of the United States at birth and (A) who has or is believed to have lost her United States citizenship solely by reason of her marriage prior to September 22, 1922, to an alien, or by her marriage on or after such date to an alien ineligible to citizenship, (B) whose marriage to such alien shall have terminated subsequent to January 12, 1941, and (C) who has not acquired by an affirmative act other than marriage any other nationality, shall, from and after taking the oath of allegiance required by section 445, be a citizen of the United States and have the status of a citizen of the United States by birth, without filing a petition for naturalization, and notwithstanding any of the other provisions of this title except the provisions of section 413. Nothing contained herein or in any other provision of law shall be construed as conferring United States citizenship retroactively upon such person, or upon any person who regained citizenship in accordance with the provisions of section 317 (b) of the Nationality Act of 1940, or section 324 (c) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, during any period in which such person was not a citizen.

"(2) Such oath of allegiance may be taken abroad before a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States, or in the United States before the judge or clerk of a naturalization court.

"(3) Such oath of allegiance shall be entered in the records of the appropriate embassy, legation, consulate, or naturalization court, and, upon demand, a certified copy of the proceedings, including a copy of the oath administered, under the seal of the embassy, legation, consulate, or naturalization court, shall be delivered to such person at a cost not exceeding $5, which certified copy shall be evidence of the facts stated therein before any court of record or judicial tribunal and in any department or agency of the Government of the United States.

"SEC. 436. Former United States citizens losing citizenship by entering the armed forces of foreign countries during World War II: (a) Any person who (1) during World War II and while a citizen of the United States, served in the military, air, or naval forces of any country at war with a country with which the United States was at war after December 7, 1941, and before September 2, 1945, and (2) has lost United States citizenship by reason of entering or serving in such forces, or taking an oath or obligation for the purpose of entering such forces, may regain citizenship by taking the oath required by section 435 before any diplomatic or consular officer of the United States, or any naturalization court specified in section 411 (a). Certified copies of such oath shall be sent by such court to the Commission.

"(b) Any person regaining citizenship in accordance with the provisions of this section, or any person who regained citizenship in accordance with the provisions of section 323 of the Nationality Act of 1940, or of section 327 of the Immigration and Nationality Act shall have, from and after such reacquisition of citizenship, the status of native-born, or naturalized, citizen of the United States, whichever status existed in the case of such person prior to the loss of citizenship. Nothing contained herein, or in any other provision of law, shall be construed as conferring United States citizenship retroactively upon any such person during any period in which such person was not a citizen.

"(c) For the purposes of this section, World War II is deemed to have begun on September 1, 1939, and to have terminated on September 2, 1945.

"(d) This section shall not apply to any person who during World War II served in the armed forces of a country while such country was at war with the United States.

"SEC. 437. Naturalization through service in the Armed Forces of the United States; active-duty service during World War I, World War II, or Korean conflict: (a) An alien, who while in the United States entered the Armed Forces of the United States and thereafter served honorably in an active-duty status at any time for a period or periods aggregating 3 years, and who, if separated from such service, was not separated except honorably or under honorable conditions, may be naturalized without regard to the other naturalization requirements set forth in this title if he is a person of good moral character, well disposed to the good order and happiness of the United States, and attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and his petition for naturalization is filed while he is still in the service or within 1 year after the termination of such service.

"(b) Any alien, who while in the United States entered the Armed Forces of the United States, and thereafter served honorably for 90 days or more in an active-duty status during World War I, or during the period beginning September 1, 1939, and ending December 31, 1946, or during the period June 25, 1950, and ending on July 1, 1955, and who, if separated from such service, was separated under honorable conditions, may be naturalized without regard to other naturalization requirements set forth in this title if he is a person of good moral character, well disposed to the good order and happiness of the United States, and attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States.

"SEC. 438. Armed Forces naturalization outside United States; determination of honorable active-duty status: (a) Any person entitled to naturalization under section 437 may be naturalized while serving outside the jurisdiction of any naturalization court, upon compliance with the applicable provisions of that section without appearing before any court. The petition for naturalization of any such person shall be made and sworn to before, and filed with a representative of the Commission, which representative is hereby authorized to receive such petition, to conduct hearing thereon, to take testimony concerning any matter touching or in any way affecting the admissibility of such person for naturalization, to call witnesses, to administer oaths, including the oath of the petitioner and his witnesses to the petition and the oath prescribed by section 445 of this act, and to grant naturalization and to issue certificates of naturalization. The record of any proceedings under this section shall be forwarded to and filed with the clerk of a naturalization court designated by the petitioner and made a part of the record of such court.

"(b) The executive department under which a person served shall determine, for the purposes of section 437, whether persons have served honorably in an active-duty status and whether separation from such service was under honorable conditions, but no person who is or has been separated from such service at his request on account of alienage, or who was a conscientious objector who performed no military, air, or naval duty whatever or refused to wear a uniform, shall be regarded as having served honorably or having been separated under honorable conditions for the purpose of this section and section 437.

"(c) No period of service in the Armed Forces shall be made the basis of a petition for naturalization under section 437 if the applicant has previously been naturalized on the basis of the same period of service.

"SEC. 439. Former United States citizens losing citizenship under prior laws: (a) Any person who was formerly a citizen of the United States and who, prior to the effective date of this act, lost his United States citizenship under the provisions of any law in effect prior to such effective date by the performance of an act or the occurrence of an event which, if such act had been performed or such event had occurred after the effective date of this act, would not have resulted in loss of citizenship under section 451 of this act, may be naturalized upon compliance with all the requirements of this title except the provision of paragraph (1) of section 422 (a), if such person—

"(1) immediately preceding the date of filing his petition for naturalization has resided continuously within the United States for at least 2 years, after being lawfully admitted for permanent residence; and

"(2) has resided in the State in which he filed his petition for at least 6 months.

"(b) The provisions of this section shall not apply to (1) any former citizen of the United States who is eligible to regain his United States citizenship under section 435 or 436, or (2) any person who, under section 413, section 414, or section 415, is ineligible for naturalization.

"CHAPTER 5—PROCEDURAL AND ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS RELATING TO GRANTING AND REVOCATION OF NATURALIZATION

"SEC. 441. Miscellaneous administrative provisions: (a) For the purpose of making recommendations to the naturalization court, the Commission shall provide for the examination of petitioners for naturalization as to their admissibility to citizenship. Such examination may be conducted before or after the applicant has filed his petition for naturalization. It shall be limited to an inquiry concerning the applicant's qualifications to become a naturalized citizen as required by law, and shall be uniform throughout the United States.

"(b) The Commission is authorized to promote instruction and training in citizenship responsibilities of applicants for naturalization including the sending of names of candidates for naturalization to the public schools, preparing and distributing citizenship textbooks to such candidates as are receiving instruction in preparation for citizenship within or under the supervision of the public schools, preparing and distributing monthly an immigration and naturalization bulletin and securing the aid of and cooperating with official State and national organizations, including those concerned with vocational education.

"(c) Employees of the Commission may be designated by the Commission to administer oaths and to take depositions without charge in matters relating to the administration of the naturalization and citizenship laws. In cases where there is a likelihood of unusual delay or of hardship, the Commission may, in its discretion, authorize such depositions to be taken before a postmaster without charge, or before a notary public or other person authorized to administer oaths for general purposes.

"(d) A certificate of naturalization or of citizenship issued by the Commission shall have the same effect in all courts, tribunals, and public offices of the United States, at home and abroad, of the District of Columbia, and of each State and Territory, as a certificate of naturalization or of citizenship issued by a court having naturalization jurisdiction.

"(e) Certification and certified copies of all papers, documents, certificates, and records required or authorized to be issued, used, filed, recorded, or kept under any and all provisions of this title, shall be admitted in evidence equally with the originals in any and all cases and proceedings under this title and in all cases and proceedings in which the originals thereof might be admissible as evidence.

"(f) The officers in charge of property owned or leased by the Government are authorized, upon the recommendation of the Commission, to provide quarters, without payment of rent, in any building occupied by the Commission for a photographic studio, operated by welfare organizations without profit and solely for the benefit of persons seeking to comply with requirements under the immigration and citizenship laws. Such studio shall be under the supervision of the Commission.

"SEC. 442. Petition for naturalization; declaration of intention: (a) An applicant for naturalization shall make and file in the office of the clerk of a naturalization court, in duplicate, a sworn petition in writing, signed by the applicant in the applicant's own handwriting if physically able to write, and duly verified by two witnesses, which petition shall be on a form prescribed by the Commission and shall include averments of all facts which in the opinion of the Commission may be material to the applicant's naturalization and required to be proved upon the hearing of such petition.

"(b) No petition for naturalization may be filed unless the petitioner (1) has attained the age of 18 years and (2) has first filed an application therefor at an office of the Commission in the form and manner prescribed by the Commission.

"(c) Petitions for naturalization may be made and filed during the term time or vacation of the naturalization court and shall be docketed the same day as filed, but final action thereon shall be had only on stated days, to be fixed by rule or order of the court.

"(d) If the applicant is prevented by sickness or other disability from presenting himself in the office of the clerk to make the petition required by subsection (a) of this section, the petitioner may make such petition at any other place designated by the clerk.

"(e) Each petitioner for naturalization shall furnish to the Commission such photographs as it shall prescribe.

"(f) An alien over 18 years of age who is residing in the United States pursuant to a lawful admission for permanent residence may, upon an application prescribed, filed with, and approved by the Commission, make and file in duplicate in the office of the clerk of court, regardless of the alien's place of residence in the United States, a signed declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States, in such form as the Commission shall prescribe. This subsection is not to be construed as requiring such an alien to make and file a declaration of intention as a condition precedent to filing a petition for naturalization nor is a declaration of intention to be construed as conferring or having conferred upon an alien United States citizenship or the right to United States citizenship, nor is a declaration to be evidence of an alien's lawful admission for permanent residence in any proceeding, action, or matter arising under this act or any other law.

"SEC. 443. Preliminary examinations on petition: (a) The Commission shall conduct preliminary examinations upon petitions for naturalization and make recommendations thereon to the naturalization court. Any employee of the Commission designated to make such examinations is authorized to take testimony concerning any matter touching or in any way affecting the qualifications of any petitioner for naturalization, to administer oaths, and to require by subpena the attendance and testimony of witnesses, including petitioner before such employee and the production of relevant books, papers, and documents, and to that end many invoke the aid of any court exercising naturalization jurisdiction; and any such court may, in the event of neglect or refusal to respond to a subpena issued by any such employee or refusal to testify before such employee issue an order requiring such person to appear before such employee, produce relevant books, papers, and documents if demanded, and testify; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof. The record of the preliminary examination authorized by this subsection shall be admissible as evidence in any final hearing conducted by a naturalization court.

"(b) As to each period and place of residence in the State in which the petitioner resides at the time of filing the petition, during the entire period of at least 6 months immediately preceding the date of filing the petition, there shall be included in the petition for naturalization the affidavits of at least two credible witnesses, citizens of the United States, stating that each has personally known the petitioner to have been a resident at such place for such period, and that the petitioner is and during all such periods has been a person of good moral character, attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the United States.

"(c) At the hearing on the petition, residence in the State in which the petitioner resides at the time of filing the petition for at least 6 months immediately preceding the date of filing the petition, and the other qualifications required by subsection (a) of section 422 during such residence, shall be proved by the oral testimony of at least two credible witnesses, citizens of the United States, in addition to the affidavits required by subsection (b) of this section to be included in the petition. At the hearing, residence within the United States during the 5-year period required by section 422 (a), but outside the State, or within the State, but prior to the 6 months immediately preceding the date of filing the petition, and the other qualifications required by subsection (a) of section 422 during such period and such places, shall be proved either by depositions taken in accordance with subsection (c) of section 441, or oral testimony, of at least two such witnesses for each place of residence.

"(d) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsections (b) and (c) of this section, the requirements of subsection (a) of section 422 as to the petitioner's residence, good moral character, attachment to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and disposition toward the good order and happiness of the United States may be established by any evidence satisfactory to the naturalization court in the case of persons availing themselves of the benefits of section 423.

"(e) (1) A petitioner for naturalization who removes from the jurisdiction of the court in which his petition for naturalization is pending may, at any time thereafter, make application to the court for transfer of the petition to a naturalization court exercising jurisdiction over the petitioner's place of residence, or to any other naturalization court if the petition was not required to be filed in a naturalization court exercising jurisdiction over the petitioner's place of residence.

"(2) Where transfer of the petition is authorized, the clerk of court in which the petition was filed shall forward a certified copy of the petition and the original record in the case to the clerk of court to which the petition is transferred, and proceedings on the petition shall thereafter continue as though the petition had originally been filed in the court to which transferred, except that the court to which the petition is transferred may, in its discretion, require the production of two credible United States citizen witnesses to testify as to the petitioner's qualifications for naturalization since the date of such transfer.

"SEC. 444. Final hearing upon petitions for naturalization; final order entered upon record; examination of petitioner and witnesses: (a) Every final hearing upon a petition for naturalization shall be had in open court before a judge or judges thereof, and every final order which may be made upon such petition shall be under the hand of the court and entered in full upon a record kept for that purpose, and upon such final hearing of such petition, the petitioner and the witnesses, except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, shall be examined under oath before the court and in the presence of the court. If the petitioner is prevented by sickness or other disability from being in open court for the final hearing upon a petition for naturalization, such final hearing may be had before a judge or judges of the court at such place as may be designated by the court.

"(b) The requirement of subsection (a) of this section for the examination of the petitioner and the witnesses under oath before the court and in the presence of the court shall not apply in any case where Commission employee has conducted the preliminary examination authorized by section 443 (a), except that the court may, in its discretion, and shall, upon demand of the petitioner, require the examination of the petitioner and the witnesses under oath during the final hearing.

"(c) Except as otherwise specifically provided in this title, no final hearing shall be held on any petition for naturalization nor shall any person be naturalized nor shall any certificate of naturalization be issued by any court within a period of 30 days after the filing of the petition for naturalization. The Commission may waive such period in an individual case if its finds that the waiver will be in the public interest and will promote the security of the United States.

"(d) The Commission shall have the right to appear before any court in any naturalization proceedings for the purpose of cross-examining the petitioner and the witnesses produced in support of the petition concerning any matter affecting the petitioner's right to naturalization, and shall have the right to call witnesses, including the petitioner, produce evidence, and be heard in opposition to, or in favor of, the granting of any petition in naturalization proceedings.

"(e) Upon timely application to the naturalization court, and notice to the Commission or the petitioner, as the case may be, the clerk of the court shall issue subpenas for witnesses named by the petitioner or by the Commission to appear on the day set for the final hearing. Additional subpenas shall be issued upon subsequent applications up to the time of the final hearing.

"(f) It shall be lawful at the time and as a part of the naturalization of any person, for the court, in its discretion, upon the prayer of the petitioner included in the petition for naturalization of such person, to make a decree changing the name of said person, and the certificate of naturalization shall be issued in accordance therewith.

"(g) If a final hearing upon a petition has not been had within 1 year following the date on which it was filed, the petitioner may file a motion requesting an immediate final hearing. The court shall thereupon require the Commission to show cause why a final hearing cannot be had and may, at its discretion, set such peremptory date for such final hearing as it deems reasonable and proper.

"SEC. 445. Oath of renunciation and allegiance: (a) An alien who has petitioned for naturalization shall, before being admitted to citizenship, take in open court one of the oaths (or make one of the affirmations) set forth in subsection (b) of this section, (1) to support the Constitution of the United States; (2) to renounce and abjure absolutely and entirely all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty of whom or which the petitioner was before a subject or citizen; (3) to support and defend the Constitution and the laws of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; (4) to bear true faith and allegiance to the same; and (5) to bear arms on behalf of the United States when required by law, or to perform noncombatant service in the Armed Forces of the United States when required by law. Any such alien shall be required to take the oath prescribed in subsection (b) (1) of this section unless by clear and convincing evidence he can show to the satisfaction of the naturalization court that he is opposed to the bearing of arms or the performance of noncombatant service in the Armed Forces of the United States by reason of religious training and belief. In the case of the naturalization of a child under the provisions of section 432 (c) and 434 the naturalization court may waive the taking of either of such oaths or affirmations if in the opinion of the court the child is unable to understand their meaning.

"(b) As provided in subsection (a) of this section, the petitioner for naturalization shall take one of the following oaths (or make one of the following affirmations):

"'(1) I hereby declare, on oath (or affirm), that I absolutely and entirely renounce and abjure all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty of whom or which I have heretofore been a subject or citizen; that I will support and defend the Constitution and laws of the United States of America against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear arms on behalf of the United States or perform noncombatant service in the Armed Forces of the United States when required by law; and that I take this obligation freely without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion: So help me God. In acknowledgment whereof I have hereunto affixed my signature'; or

"'(2) I hereby declare, on oath (or affirm), that I absolutely and entirely renounce and abjure all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereignty of whom or which I have heretofore been a subject or citizen; that I will support and defend the Constitution and laws of the United States of America against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; and that I take this obligation freely and without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion: So, help me God. In acknowledgment whereof I have hereunto affixed my signature.'

"(c) In case the alien petitioning for naturalization has borne any hereditary title, or has been of any of the orders of nobility in any foreign state, the petitioner shall in addition to complying with the requirements of subsection (a) of this section, make under oath in open court in the court in which the petition for naturalization is made, an express renunciation of such title or order of nobility, and such renunciation shall be recorded in the court as a part of such proceedings.

"(d) If the petitioner is prevented by sickness or other disability from being in open court, the oath or affirmation required to be taken by subsection (a) of this section may be taken before a judge of the court at such place as may be designated by the court.

"SEC. 446. Certificate of naturalization; contents: A person admitted to citizenship by a naturalization court shall be entitled to receive from the court a document certifying to his naturalization in such form as the Commission shall prescribe.

"SEC. 447. Revocation of naturalization: (a) It shall be the duty of the United States district attorneys for the respective districts, upon affidavits showing good cause therefor, to institute proceedings in any court specified in subsection (a) of section 411 of this title in the judicial district in which the naturalized citizen may reside at the time of bringing suit for the purpose of revoking and setting aside the order admitting such person to citizenship and canceling the certificate of naturalization on the ground of fraud or on the ground that such order and certificate of naturalization were illegally procured. No such proceeding shall be instituted more than 10 years after the naturalization order was issued. If the naturalized citizen does not reside in any judicial district in the United States at the time of bringing such suit, the proceedings may be instituted in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia or in the United States district court in the judicial district in which such person last had his residence.

"(b) The person to whom was granted the neutralization alleged to have been fraudulent or illegally procured shall be served personally in any judicial district in the United States, unless personal service is waived, or shall be served by substituted service as prescribed in subsection (c) of this section.

"(c) If it is shown to the naturalization court that the naturalized person is absent from the United States, the court may order substituted service to be made, wherever feasible, by personal delivery of a letter abroad by an employee of the United States designated by the Commission, by letter sent by registered mail to the person at his last known address in the United States or abroad, and by publication of such letter in a newspaper of general circulation in the vicinity of such address. If no answer or other motion has been filed by the naturalized person and if the court finds that he has actual notice or is evading service, it shall make a record of such finding, and may then proceed to hear the evidence in the case and enter its order.

"(d) The naturalized person shall have 60 days in which to answer or otherwise move from the time of personal or substituted service.

"(e) Where citizenship is revoked under subsection (a) of this section it shall not result in the loss of citizenship or of any right or privilege of citizenship which would have been derived by or been available to a spouse or minor child of the naturalized person had such naturalization not been revoked.

"(f) When a person is convicted under section 1425 of title 18 of the United States Code of knowingly procuring naturalization in violation of law, the court in which such conviction is had shall thereupon revoke the final order admitting such person to citizenship, and shall declare the certificate of naturalization of such person to be canceled. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred on the courts having jurisdiction of the trial of such offense to make such adjudication.

"(g) Wherever an order admitting an alien to citizenship is revoked or a certificate of naturalization is canceled, or both, as provided in this section, the court in which such judgment or decree is rendered shall make an order canceling such certificate and shall send a certified copy of such order to the Commission. In case such certificate was not originally issued by the court making such order, it shall direct the clerk of the court in which the order is revoked to transmit a copy of such order and judgment to the court out of which such certificate of naturalization was originally issued. It shall thereupon be the duty of the clerk of the court receiving such certified copy of the order and judgment of the court to enter the same of record and to cancel such original certificate of naturalization, if there be any, upon the records and to notify the Commission of the entry of such order and of such cancellation. A person holding a certificate of naturalization or citizenship which has been canceled as provided by this section shall, upon notice by the court by which the decree of cancellation was made, or by the Commission, surrender the same to the Commission.

"(h) The provisions of this section shall apply not only to any naturalization granted and to certificates of naturalization and citizenship issued under the provisions of this title, but to any naturalization heretofore granted by any court, or by any duly authorized officer of the United States.

"SEC. 448. Certificates of citizenship; Procedure: A person who claims to have derived United States citizenship through the naturalization of a parent or through the naturalization or citizenship of a husband, or who is a citizen of the United States by virtue of the provisions of section 1993 of the United States Revised Statutes, or of section 1993 of the United States Revised Statutes, as amended by section 1 of the act of May 24, 1934 (48 Stat. 797), or who is a citizen of the United States by virtue of the provisions of subsection (c), (d), (e), (g), or (i) of section 201 of the Nationality Act of 1940, as amended (54 Stat. 1138), or of the act of May 7, 1934 (48 Stat. 667), or of paragraph (3), (4), or (5) of section 401 (a) of this title, or under the provisions of the act of August 4, 1937 (50 Stat. 558), or under the provisions of section 203 or 205 of the Nationality Act of 1940 (54 Stat. 1139) or under paragraph (3), (4), (5), or (7) of section 301 (a) or under section 303 of the Immigration and Nationality Act, or under the provisions of section 403 of this title, may apply to the Commission for a certificate of citizenship. Upon proof to the satisfaction of the Commission that the applicant is a citizen, and that the applicant's alleged citizenship was derived or acquired, as the case may be, as claimed and upon taking and subscribing before an employee of the Commission or other designated officer of the United States the oath of allegiance required of a petitioner for naturalization, such individual shall be furnished by the Commission with a certificate of citizenship, but only if such individual is at the time within the United States, or serving abroad with the Armed Forces of the United States. For the purposes of this section, any person who has resided continuously in the United States since July 1, 1924, shall be presumed to have been lawfully admitted.

"SEC. 449. Cancellation of certificates; Action not to affect citizenship status: The Commission is authorized to cancel any certificate of citizenship, certificate of naturalization, copy of a declaration of intention, or other certificate, document, or record heretofore issued or made by the Attorney General or the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization or a Deputy Commissioner or hereafter made by the Commission if it appears to the Commission that such document or record was illegally or fraudulently obtained, or was created by willful and material fraud; but the person for or to whom such document or record has been made or issued shall be given written notice by registered mail, at such person's last-known address, of the intention to cancel such document or record, with the reasons therefor, and shall be given at least 60 days in which to show cause why such document or record should not be canceled. The cancellation under this section of any document purporting to show the citizenship status of the person to whom it was issued shall affect only the document and not the citizenship status of the person in whose name the document was issued.

"CHAPTER 6—LOSS OF CITIZENSHIP; SUITS FOR DECLARATORY JUDGMENT

"SEC. 451—Loss of citizenship: (a) From and after the effective date of this act a person who is a citizen of the United States whether by birth or naturalization, shall lose his citizenship by—

"(1) making a formal renunciation of citizenship before a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States in a foreign state, in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of State; or

"(2) making in the United States a formal written renunciation of citizenship in such form as may be prescribed by, and before such officer as may be designated by, the Commission, whenever the United States is in a state of war and the Attorney General approves renunciation as not contrary to the interests of national defense; or

"(3) obtaining, without compulsion, naturalization in a foreign state upon his own application, if such person is over 21 years of age at the time application is made; or

"(4) deserting the military, air, or naval forces of the United States in time of war, if and when he is convicted thereof by court-martial, and as the result of such conviction is dismissed or dishonorably discharged from the services of such military, air, or naval forces. Notwithstanding loss of citizenship under the terms of this or previous laws by reason of desertion committed in time of war, restoration to active duty with such military, air, or naval forces in time of war, or the reenlistment or induction of such a person in time of war with permission of competent military, air, or naval authority shall be deemed to have the immediate effect of restoring citizenship heretofore or hereafter so lost; or

"(5) committing any act of treason against, or attempting by force to overthrow, or bearing arms against the United States, if and when he is convicted thereof by a court-martial or by a court of competent jurisdiction; or

"(6) departing from or remaining outside of the jurisdiction of the United States in time of war or during a period declared by the President to be a period of national emergency for the purpose of evading or avoiding training or service in the military, air, or naval forces of the United States, or to avoid complying with any provision of any compulsory service laws of the United States.

"(b) (1) The officer before whom a renunciation is made under paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (a) of this section or a court convicting a person of the crimes specified in paragraphs (4) and (5) of that subsection shall report the name of the person involved and all relevant facts to the Commission.

"(2) Whenever a diplomatic or consular officer of the United States has reason to believe that a person while in a foreign state has lost his United States citizenship under paragraph (3) or (6) of subsection (a) of this section, he shall certify the facts upon which such belief is based to the Department of State, in writing, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of State. If the report of the diplomatic or consular officer is approved by the Secretary of State, a copy of the certificate shall be forwarded to the Commission, which shall notify the person to whom it relates.

"SEC. 452. Suits to declare citizenship forfeited: (a) It shall be the duty of the United States district attorneys for the respective districts, upon affidavit showing good cause therefor, to institute proceedings in any court specified in subsection (a) of section 411 of this title in the judicial district in which the citizen may reside at the time of bringing suit, for the purpose of having a person's United States citizenship declared forfeited, if such person—

"(1) being under the age of 21 years, without compulsion obtained naturalization in a foreign state and without good cause, failed to enter the United States to establish a permanent residence prior to his 25th birthday; or

"(2) without compulsion took an oath or made other formal declaration of allegiance to a foreign state or a political subdivision thereof; or

"(3) without compulsion entered or served in the armed forces of a foreign state not being expressly authorized by the laws of the United States after he has acquired the nationality of such foreign state.

"If the citizen does not reside in any judicial district in the United States at the time of bringing such suit, the proceedings may be instituted in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia or in the United States district court in the judicial district in which such person last had his residence.

"(b) The respondent shall be served personally in any judicial district in the United States, unless personal service is waived, or shall be served by substituted service as prescribed in subsection (c) of this section.

"(c) If it is shown to the court that the respondent is absent from the United States, the court may order substituted service to be made, wherever feasible, by personal delivery of a letter abroad by an employee of the United States designated by the Commission, by letter sent by registered mail to the person at his last known address in the United States or abroad, and by publication of such letter in a newspaper of general circulation in the vicinity of such address. If no answer or other motion has been filed by the respondent, and if the court finds that he has actual notice or is evading service, it shall make a record of such finding, and may then proceed to hear the evidence in the case and enter its order.

"(d) The respondent shall have 60 days in which to answer or otherwise move from the time of personal or substituted service.

"(e) Whenever a person's citizenship is declared forfeited, as provided in this section, the court in which such judgment or decree is rendered shall make an order declaring that person's United States citizenship forfeited and shall send a certified copy of such order to the Commission.

"(f) No proceeding shall be instituted under subsection (a) of this section more than 10 years following the citizen's return to the United States.

"SEC. 453. Loss of citizenship through parent's expatriation; not effective until person attains age of 25 years: (a) A person having United States citizenship, who is under the age of 21 and whose residence is in a foreign state with or under the legal custody of a parent who hereafter loses United States citizenship under section 451 or 452 of this title, shall also lose his United States citizenship if such person has or acquires the citizenship of such foreign state and if such person attains the age of 25 years without having established permanent residence in the United States.

"(b) Any person who lost his United States citizenship prior to January 1, 1948, through the naturalization in a foreign state of a parent or parents may, within 1 year from the effective date of this act, apply for a visa and for admission to the United States as a nonquota immigrant under section 102 (a) (19) (D).

"SEC. 454. Citizenship not to be denied or abridged: United States citizenship, once acquired, shall not be denied or lost, except as provided in this act.

"SEC. 455. Proceedings for declaration of United States citizenship in the event of denial of rights or privileges as citizen: If a department, agency, or officer of the United States raises a substantial doubt as to the United States citizenship of a person, such person, regardless of whether he is in the United States or abroad, may institute an action against the head of such department or agency or such officer in the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, or in the district court of the United States for the district in which such person claims a permanent residence, for a judgment declaring him to be a citizen of the United States. If such person is outside the United States and has instituted such an action in court, and if the court shall find that the action was instituted in good faith and has a substantial basis, the Commission shall issue a certificate of identity, stating that citizenship status is pending before the court and he shall be admitted to the United States but shall be subject to deportation in the event that it is decided by the court that he is not a citizen of the United States.

"SEC. 461. Functions and duties of clerks. (a) It shall be the duty of the clerk of each naturalization court to forward to the Commission a duplicate of each petition for naturalization within 30 days after the close of the month in which such petition was filed, and to forward to the Commission certified copies of such other proceedings and orders instituted in or issued out of the court affecting or relating to the naturalization of persons as may be required from time to time by the Commission.

"(b) It shall be the duty of the clerk of each naturalization court to forward to the Commission within 30 days after the close of the month in which a naturalization certificate was issued, a duplicate thereof, and to make and keep on file in the clerk's office a stub for each certificate so issued, and to forward a duplicate of each such stub to the Commission within 30 days after the close of the month in which such certificate was issued.

"(c) It shall be the duty of the clerk of each naturalization court to report to the Commission, within 30 days after the close of the month in which the final hearing and decision of the court was had, the name and number of the petition of each and every person who shall be denied naturalization together with the cause of such denial.

"(d) Clerks of courts shall be responsible for all blank certificates of naturalization received by them from time to time from the Commission, and shall account to the Commission for them whenever required to do so. A certificate of naturalization received by any clerk of court which may be defaced or injured in such manner as to prevent its use shall be not destroyed, but shall be returned to the Commission.

"(e) It shall be the duty of the clerk of every naturalization court to cause to be filed in chronological order in separate volumes, indexed, consecutively numbered, and made a part of the records of such court, all declarations of intention and petitions for naturalization.

"SEC. 462. Documents and copies. (a) A person who claims to have been naturalized in the United States under section 323 of the Nationality Act of 1940 may make application to the Commission for a certificate of naturalization. Upon proof to the satisfaction of the Commission that the applicant was naturalized as claimed in the application and that he is still a citizen, such individual shall be furnished a certificate of naturalization by the Commission, but only if the applicant is at the time within the United States, or is serving abroad in the armed services of the United States.

"(b) If any certificate of naturalization or citizenship issued to any citizen or any declaration of intention furnished to any declarant is lost, mutilated, or destroyed, the citizen or declarant may make application to the Commission for a new certificate or declaration. If the Commission finds that the certificate or declaration is lost, mutilated, or destroyed, it shall issue to the applicant a new certificate or declaration. If the certificate or declaration has been mutilated, it shall be surrendered to the Commission before the applicant may receive such new certificate or declaration. If the certificate or declaration has been lost, the applicant or any other person who shall have, or may come into, possession of it is hereby required to surrender it to the Commission.

"(c) The Commission shall issue for any naturalized citizen, on such citizen's application therefore, a special certificate of naturalization for use by such citizen for the purpose of obtaining recognition as a citizen of the United States by a foreign state. Such certificate when issued shall be furnished to the Secretary of State for transmission to the proper authority in such foreign state.

"(d) If the name of any naturalized citizen has, subsequent to naturalization, been changed by order of any court of competent jurisdiction, or by marriage, the citizen may make application for a new certificate of naturalization in the new name of such citizen. If the Commission finds the name of the applicant to have been changed as claimed, the Commission shall issue to the applicant a new certificate and shall notify the naturalization court of such action.

"(e) The Commission is authorized to make and issue certifications of any part of the naturalization records of any court, or of any certificate of naturalization or citizenship, for use in complying with any statute, State or Federal, or in any judicial proceeding. No such certification shall be made by any clerk of court except upon order of the court.

"SEC. 463. Fiscal provisions: (a) The clerk of court shall charge, collect, and account for the following fees:

"(1) For making, filing, and docketing a petition for naturalization, $10, including the final hearing on such petition, if such hearing is held, and a certificate of naturalization, if the issuance of such certificate is authorized by the naturalization court.

"(2) For receiving and filing a declaration of intention, and issuing a duplicate thereof, $5.

"(b) The Commission shall charge, collect, and account for the following fees:

"(1) For application for a certificate of naturalization or declaration of intention in lieu of a certificate or declaration alleged to have been lost, mutilated, or destroyed, $5.

"(2) For application for a certificate of citizenship, $5.

"(3) For application for the issuance of a special certificate of citizenship to obtain recognition, $5.

"(4) For application for a certificate of naturalization under section 323 of the Nationality Act of 1940, or under section 343 (a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act or under section 462 (a) of this act, $5.

"(5) For application for a certificate of citizenship in changed name, $5.

"(6) Reasonable fees in cases where such fees have not been established by law, to cover the cost of furnishing copies, whether certified or uncertified, of any part of the records, or information from the records, of the Commission. The Commission may lend copies, for short periods, without charge. Such fees shall not exceed a maximum of 25 cents per folio of 100 words, with a minimum fee of 50 cents for any one such service, in addition to a fee of $1 for any official certification furnished under seal. No such fee shall be required from officers or agencies of the United States or of any State or any subdivision thereof, for such copies or information furnished for official use in connection with the official duties of such officers or agencies.

"(7) Notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this subsection, no fee shall be charged or collected for an application for declaration of intention or a certificate of naturalization in lieu of a declaration or a certificate alleged to have been lost, mutilated, or destroyed, submitted by a person who was a member of the military or naval forces of the United States at any time after April 20, 1898, and before July 5, 1902; or at any time after April 5, 1917, and before November 12, 1918, or who served on the Mexican border as a member of the Regular Army or National Guard between June 1916 and April 1917, or who has served or hereafter serves in the military, air, or naval forces of the United States after September 16, 1940, and who was not at any time during such period or thereafter separated from such forces under other than honorable conditions, who was not a conscientious objector who performed no military duty whatever or refused to wear the uniform or who was not at any time during such period or thereafter discharged from such military, air, or naval forces on account of alienage.

"(c) The clerk of any naturalization court specified in subsection (a) of section 411 (except the courts specified in subsection (d) of this section) shall account for and pay over to the Commission one-half of all fees up to the sum of $6,000, and all fees in excess of $6,000, collected by any such clerk in naturalization proceedings in any fiscal year.

"(d) The clerk of any United States district court (except in Alaska and in the District Court of the Virgin Islands of the United States and in the District Court of Guam) shall account for and pay over to the Commission all fees collected by any such clerk in naturalization proceedings. The clerk of the District Court of the Virgin Islands of the United States and of the District Court of Guam shall report but shall not be required to pay over to the Commission the fees collected by any such clerk in naturalization proceedings.

"(e) The accounting required by subsections (c) and (d) of this section shall be made and the fees paid over to the Commission by such clerks in their quarterly accounts which they are hereby required to render to the Commission within 30 days from the close of each quarter of each fiscal year, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commission.

"(f) The clerks of the various naturalization courts shall pay all additional clerical force that may be required in performing the duties imposed by this title upon clerks of courts from fees retained under the provisions of this section by such clerks in naturalization proceedings.

"(g) All fees collected by the Commission and all fees paid over to the Commission by clerks of courts under the provisions of this title shall be deposited by the Commission in the Treasury of the United States, except that all fees received from applicants residing in the Virgin Islands of the United States, and in Guam, required to be paid under subsection (b) of this section, shall be paid over to the treasury of the Virgin Islands and to the treasury of Guam, respectively.

"(h) During the time when the United States is at war no clerk of a United States court shall charge or collect a naturalization fee from an alien in the military, air, or naval service of the United States for filing a petition for naturalization or issuing a certificate of naturalization upon admission to citizenship, and no clerk of any State court shall charge or collect any fee for such services unless the laws of the State require such charge to be made, in which case nothing more than the portion of the fee required to be paid to the State shall be charged or collected. A report of all transactions under this subsection shall be made to the Commission as in the case of other reports required of clerks of courts by this title.

"(i) In addition to the other fees required by this title, the petitioner for naturalization shall, upon the filing of a petition for naturalization, deposit with and pay to the clerk of court a sum of money sufficient to cover the expenses of supenaing and paying the legal fees of any witnesses for whom such petitioner may request a subpena, and upon the final discharge of such witnesses, they shall receive, if they demand the same from the clerk, the customary and usual witness fees from the moneys which the petitioner has paid to such clerk for such purpose, and the residue, if any, shall be returned by the clerk to the petitioner.

"SEC. 464. Mail relating to naturalization: All mail matter of whatever class, relating to naturalization, including duplicate papers required by law or regulation to be sent to the Commission by clerks of courts addressed to the Commission, or any official thereof, and endorsed "Official Business", shall be transmitted free of postage and, if necessary, by registered mail without fee, and so marked.

"SEC. 465. Publication and distribution of citizenship textbooks: Authorization is hereby granted for the publication and distribution of the citizenship textbook described in subsection (b) of section 441 and for the reimbursement of the appropriation of the Commission upon the records of the Treasury Department from the naturalization fees deposited in the Treasury through the Commission for the cost of such publication and distribution, such reimbursement to be made upon statements by the Commission of books so published and distributed.

"SEC. 466. Civil actions against clerks of court: (a) In case any clerk of court shall refuse or neglect to comply with any of the provisions of section 461 (a), (b), or (c), such clerk of court shall forfeit and pay to the United States the sum of $25 in each and every case in which such violation or omission occurs and the amount for such forfeiture may be recovered by the United States in a civil action against such clerk.

"(b) If any clerk of court shall fail to return to the Commission or properly account for any certificate of naturalization furnished by the Commission as provided in subsection (d) of section 461, such clerk of court shall be liable to the United States in the sum of $50, to be recovered in a civil action, for each and every such certificate not properly accounted for or returned.

"SEC. 467. Application of treaties; Exceptions: Nothing in this title shall be applied in contravention of the provisions of any treaty or convention to which the United States is a party and which has been ratified prior to the effective date of this act. No woman who was a national of the United States shall be deemed to have lost her citizenship solely by reason of her marriage to an alien on or after September 22, 1922, or to an alien racially ineligible to citizenship on or after March 3, 1931, or in the case of a woman who was a United States citizen at birth, through residence abroad following such marriage, notwithstanding the provisions of any existing treaty or convention.

"TITLE V—MISCELLANEOUS

"SEC. 501. Joint congressional committee: (a) There is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be known as the Joint Committee on Immigration and Citizenship Policy (hereinafter referred to as the 'committee') to be composed of 14 members as follows: (1) 3 members who are members of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, 2 from the majority and 1 from the minority party, 2 members who are members of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, 1 from the majority party, and 1 from the minority party, and 2 members who are members of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare of the Senate, 1 from the majority party and 1 from the minority party, all to be appointed by the President of the Senate; and (2) 3 members who are members of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, 2 from the majority and 1 from the minority party, 2 members who are members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, 1 from the majority party and 1 from the minority party, and 2 members who are members of the Committee on Education and Labor of the House of Representatives, 1 from the majority party and 1 from the minority party, all to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

"(b) No person shall continue to serve as a member of the committee after he has ceased to be a member of the committee of either the Senate or the House of Representatives from which he was appointed.

"(c) A vacancy in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection and the committee shall elect a chairman from among its members.

"(d) It shall be the function of the committee to make a continuous study of (1) the administration of this act, and its effect on the foreign policy, national security, the economy and the social welfare of, and labor conditions in, the United States, and (2) such conditions within or without the United States which in the opinion of the committee might have any bearing on the immigration and citizenship policy of the United States.

"(e) The committee shall make from time to time a report to the Senate and the House of Representatives concerning the results of its studies together with such recommendations as it may deem desirable.

"(f) The Commission, the Secretary of State, and the Attorney General shall keep the committee fully and currently informed with respect to their activities in the administration of this act; and the Commission, the Secretary of State, and the Attorney General shall consult with the committee from time to time with respect to their activities under this act.

"(g) The committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings; to sit and act at such times and places; to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents; to administer such oaths; to take such testimony; to procure such printing and binding as it deems advisable. The provisions of sections 102 and 104, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes shall apply in case of any failure of any witnesses to comply with any subpena or to testify when summoned under the authority of this act.

"(h) The members of the committee shall serve without compensation other than that received for their services as Members of Congress but they shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other expenses incurred by them in the performance of the duties vested in the committee other than expenses in connection with meetings of the committee held in the District of Columbia during such times as the Congress is in session.

"(i) The committee is authorized, without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1949, to appoint and fix the compensation of such clerks, experts, consultants, and clerical stenographic assistants as it deems necessary and advisable. The committee is authorized to reimburse the members of its staff for travel, subsistence, and the other necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of the duties vested in the committee other than expenses in connection with meetings of the committee held in the District of Columbia during such times as the Congress is in session. The chairmen of the Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare of the Senate and the chairmen of the Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the Committee on Education and Labor of the House of Representatives may assign members of the staff of the committees to serve on the staff of the committee, without additional compensation, except for the reimbursement of expenses incurred by such staff members as prescribed in this subsection.

"(j) The expenses of the committee shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, upon vouchers signed by the chairman of the committee or by any members of the committee duly authorized by the chairman.

"(k) This section shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this act.

"SEC. 502. Amendments to other laws: (a) Section 1546 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by striking out 'the Attorney General or the Commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service', wherever it appears therein, and inserting in lieu thereof 'the Immigration and Naturalization Commission.'

"(b) Section 1429 of title 18 of the United States Code is amended by striking out 'subsection (e) of section 336 of the Immigration and Nationality Act' and inserting in lieu thereof 'section 444 (e) of the Immigration and Citizenship Act of 1955.'

"(c) Section 1114 of title 18 of the United State Code is amended by striking out 'any immigration officer' and inserting in lieu thereof 'any immigration officer of the Immigration and Naturalization Commission.'

"(d) Section 8 (c) of the act entitled 'An act to require the registration of certain persons employed by agencies to disseminate propaganda in the United States, and for other purposes,' approved June 8, 1938 (52 Stat. 631; 22 U. S. C. 618), is amended by striking out 'sections 241, 242, and 243 of the Immigration and Nationality Act' and inserting in lieu thereof 'sections 343 and 344 of the Immigration and Citizenship Act of 1955.'

"(e) Section 4 of the act entitled 'An act to provide for the enlistment of aliens in the Regular Army', approved June 30, 1950 (64 Stat. 316), is amended—

"(1) by striking out 'section 329 of the Immigration and Nationality Act' and inserting in lieu thereof 'sections 437 and 438 of the Immigration and Citizenship Act of 1955'; and

"(2) by striking out 'such section 329' and inserting in lieu thereof 'such sections 437 and 438.'

"(f) Section 201 of the United States Information and Education Exchange Act of 1948 (62 Stat. 7; 22 U. S. C., sec. 1446) is amended to read as follows:

"'PERSONS

"'SEC. 201. The Secretary is authorized to provide for interchanges on a reciprocal basis between the United States and other countries of students, trainees, teachers, guest instructors, professors, and leaders in fields of specialized knowledge or skill and shall wherever possible provide these interchanges by using the services of existing reputable agencies which are successfully engaged in such activity. The Secretary may provide for orientation courses and other appropriate services for such persons from other countries upon their arrival in the United States, and for such persons going to other countries from the United States. When any country fails or refuses to cooperate in such program on the basis of reciprocity the Secretary shall terminate or limit such program, with respect to such country, to the extent he deems to be advisable in the interests of the United States. The persons specified in this section shall be admitted as nonimmigrants under section 102 (a) (18) of the Immigration and Citizenship Act of 1955, for such time and under such conditions as may be prescribed by regulations promulgated by the Secretary of State and the Immigration and Naturalization Commission. A person admitted under this section who fails to maintain the status under which he was admitted or who fails to depart from the United States at the expiration of the time for which he was admitted, or who engages in activities of a political nature detrimental to the interests of the United States, or in activities not consistent with the security of the United States shall, upon the warrant of the Immigration and Naturalization Commission, be taken into custody and promptly deported pursuant to sections 343 and 344 of the Immigration and Citizenship Act of 1955. Deportation proceedings under this section shall be summary and the findings of the Immigration and Naturalization Commission as to matters of fact shall be conclusive. Such persons shall not be eligible for adjustment of status under section 346 of the Immigration and Citizenship Act of 1955.'

"(g) Section 1 (7) of the Interstate Commerce Act is amended by striking out 'immigration officers' and inserting in lieu thereof 'immigration officers of the Immigration and Naturalization Commission.'

"(h) (1) The first sentence of section 3 (c) of the Displaced Persons Act of 1948 is amended by striking out 'section 202 of the Immigration and Nationality Act' and inserting in lieu thereof 'title II of the Immigration and Citizenship Act of 1955.'

"(2) The second proviso to section 3 (c) of such act is amended by striking out 'section 203 (a) (4) of the Immigration and Nationality Act' and inserting in lieu thereof 'section 201 (b) (5) of the Immigration and Citizenship Act of 1955."

"(3) Section 4 (a) of such act is amended by striking out 'section 202 of the Immigration and Nationality Act' and inserting in lieu thereof 'title II of the Immigration and Citizenship Act of 1955.'

"(4) Section 5 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 5. The quota to which an alien is chargeable for the purposes of this act shall be determined in accordance with the provisions of title II of the Immigration and Citizenship Act of 1955 and no eligible displaced person shall be issued an immigrant visa if he is known or believed by the visa-granting officer to be subject to exclusion from the United States under any provision of the immigration laws, with the exception of section 301 (j) of the Immigration and Citizenship Act of 1955; and all eligible displaced persons, eligible displaced orphans and orphans under section 2 (f) shall be exempt from paying visa fees and head taxes.'

"(5) Section 6 of such act is amended—

"(A) by striking out 'section 203 of the Immigration and Nationality Act' and inserting in lieu thereof 'title II of the Immigration and Citizenship Act of 1955'; and

"(B) by striking out 'sections 241, 242, and 243 of the Immigration and Nationality Act' and inserting in lieu thereof 'sections 343 and 344 of the Immigration and Citizenship Act of 1955.'

"(i) The act entitled 'An act to provide extra compensation for overtime service performed by immigrant inspectors and other employees of the Immigration Service,' approved March 2, 1931 (46 Stat. 1467; 5 U. S. C. 342c–d), is amended—

"(1) by striking out 'Secretary of Labor' wherever it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof 'Immigration and Naturalization Commission'; and

"(2) by striking out 'Immigration Service' and inserting in lieu thereof 'Commission'.

"(j) The act of August 22, 1940 (54 Stat. 858; 5 U. S. C. 342e), is amended—

"(1) by striking out 'Immigration Service' and inserting in lieu thereof 'Immigration and Naturalization Commission'; and

"(2) by striking out 'Immigration and Naturalization Service' and inserting in lieu thereof 'Commission'.

"SEC. 503. Repeal of prior laws: The following laws and all amendments thereto are repealed:

"(a) The Immigration and Nationality Act (Public Law 414, 82d Cong.);

"(b) The act entitled 'An act to provide for the naturalization of persons serving in the Armed Forces of the United States after June 24, 1950', approved June 30, 1953 (Public Law 86, 83d Cong.).

"SEC. 504. References in other laws: Any reference in any law of the United States (other than in any law specifically repealed or amended by this act) or in any Executive order to any provision of the Immigration and Nationality Act shall, where not otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly incompatible with the intent thereof, be deemed to refer to the corresponding provision of this act.

"SEC. 505. Authorization of appropriations: There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 506. Transfer of functions, personnel, and property: (a) Except as provided in this act, all functions of the Department of Justice and of all officers and employees thereof with respect to the immigration laws and the nationality and citizenship laws are transferred to the Commission and to the Board, as provided in this act. The Immigration and Naturalization Service of the Department of Justice and the office of Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization are abolished.

"(b) Except as provided in this act, all functions of the Department of State and of all officers or employees thereof with respect to the immigration laws and the nationality and citizenship laws are transferred to the Commission and to the Board, as provided in this act.

"(c) Such officers and employees of the Department of Justice (including the members, officers, and employees of the Board of Immigration Appeals) and such officers and employees of the Department of State as the Attorney General and Secretary of State, respectively, determine to be employed in the exercise of functions transferred to or imposed upon the Commission and the Board under this act may be transferred to the Commission. The transfer of such personnel shall be without reduction in classification or compensation to conform to the duties to which such transferred personnel may be assigned. Such of the personnel so transferred as do not already possess a classified civil-service status shall not acquire such status by reason of such transfer except (1) upon recommendation of the Commission within 1 year after such personnel have been so transferred and certification within such period by the Commission to the Civil Service Commission that such personnel have served with merit for not less than 6 months subsequent to the transfer, and (2) upon passing such suitable noncompetitive examination as the Civil Service Commission may prescribe. No officer or employee taking such examination shall be discharged or reduced in grade or compensation pending the result thereof, except for cause in the manner provided by law.

"(d) Such property and official records of the Department of Justice and of the Department of State as the Attorney General and the Secretary of State, respectively, determine to be used in the administration of the immigration laws and the nationality and citizenship laws are transferred to the Commission.

"(e) To assist in the orderly transferral of functions from the Department of State to the Commission as provided in this section, the Secretary of State, upon request of the Commission, is authorized to assign, for such periods of time as he deems necessary, officers of the Foreign Service for duty under the supervision and direction of the Commission. Any officer so assigned shall retain all the privileges and prerogatives provided by law or regulations for officers of the Foreign Service.

"SEC. 507. Savings clauses: (a) This act, except as otherwise specifically provided herein, does not affect the validity of any declaration of intention, petition for naturalization certificate of naturalization, or certificate of citizenship which is valid on the effective date of this act. With that qualification, the provisions of this act do apply to all judicial proceedings, suits, actions, and prosecutions, civil and criminal, pending on the effective date of such provisions; to all administrative proceedings pending on such effective date, including any warrant of arrest, order of deportation or exclusion; and to any status, condition, right in process of acquisition, act, thing, liability, or other matter existing on such effective date. Except where the contrary intention clearly appears, no proceeding, administrative or judicial, shall be abated by the provisions of this act, but all such proceedings shall continue before or be transferred to the appropriate officer, Board, Commission, or other tribunal, or court, to be determined under the provisions of this act.

"(b) Nothing contained in this act, unless otherwise specifically provided herein, shall affect the validity of any declaration of intention, petition for naturalization, certificate of naturalization, or certificate of citizenship, which is valid on the effective date of this act; or the validity of any judicial proceeding, suit, action, or prosecution, civil or criminal, in which final judgment has been rendered prior to such effective date.

"(c) The admissibility of any immigrant presenting himself for admission on or after the effective date of this act shall be determined under the provisions of this act even though such immigrant's visa was issued prior to such effective date.

"(d) An application for adjustment of status under section 4 of the Displaced Persons Act of 1948, as amended, under the Immigration and Nationality Act, which is pending on the effective date of this act shall be regarded as a proceeding within the meaning of subsections (a) and (b) of this section.

"(e) This act shall not be construed to repeal, alter, or amend section 231 (a) of the act of April 30, 1946 (60 Stat. 148½; 22 U. S. C. 1281 (a)); section 8 of the act of June 20, 1949 (Public Law 110, 81st Cong., 1st sess.; 63 Stat. 208); the act of June 5, 1950 (Public Law 535, 81st Cong., 2d sess.; title V of the Agricultural Act of 1949, as amended (Public Law 78, 82d Cong., 1st sess.); or the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended (67 Stat. 401).

"SEC. 508. Separability: If any particular provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

"SEC. 509. Effective dates: (a) Except as provided in subsection (k) of section 501 and in subsections (b) and (c) of this section, the provisions of this act shall take effect at 12:01 o'clock antemeridian United States eastern standard time on whichever of the following days first occurs:

"(1) The 180th day following the date of appointment of the members of the Commission; or

"(2) The 365th day following the date of enactment of this act.

"(b) The following provisions shall take effect on the date of enactment of this act:

"(1) Section 103 (establishing the Immigration and Naturalization Commission);

"(2) Section 104 (relating to the organization of the Commission);

"(3) Section 105 (relating to powers and duties of the Commission), other than subsection (e), (f), and (g) of such section;

"(4) Subsections (a), (b), (e), and (i) of section 107 (establishing the Board of Immigration and Visa Appeals);

"(5) Section 109 (relating to the applicability of the Administrative Procedure Act);

"(6) Section 113 (relating to establishment of offices abroad); and

"(7) Section 114 (authorizing expenditures and travel).

"(c) The provisions of subsections (c) and (d) of section 505 (relating to the transfer of personnel and property to the Commission) shall take effect on the date of appointment of the Commission, but only such personnel and property shall be transferred to the Commission prior to the effective date of this act, as prescribed in subsection (a), as the Commission from time to time requests and the Attorney General or Secretary of State, as the case may be, approves.

"(d) The Commission may adopt and publish in the Federal Register rules and regulations for the administration of any section of this act prior to the date upon which such section takes effect as provided in this section, but such rules and regulations shall be effective only on the date such section takes effect.

"(e) In the application of section 203 during the period following the effective date of such section and prior to the first day of the first calendar year which begins after such effective date, the number of quota immigrant visas to be available for issuance during such period shall be a number which bears the same ratio to the total number of quota immigrant visas available for a whole calendar year as the number of days in such period bears to 365 days."

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time for debate on the Lehman amendment be limited to 15 minutes to a side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN] has 15 minutes on the amendment and the majority leader has 15 minutes.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, the pending amendment is identical with Senate bill 1206, which I introduced last year at the beginning of the 84th Congress, and which has been before the Senate Judiciary Committee ever since.

The Senate Judiciary Committee held some hearings last November on this bill and other proposals for substantial modification of the McCarran-Walter Act. Those hearings have not been printed, but I believe that most of the Members of the Senate have some knowledge of the issues and some acquaintance with the contents of my amendment, comprehensive as it is.

Mr. President, I have made many speeches on the floor of the Senate during this session, in previous sessions, and in previous Congresses, demanding action on overhauling the McCarran-Walter Act. In fact, substantial revision of this act was pledged by the spokesmen of both major national parties during the 1952 campaign. Since then, the President of the United States has made recommendation for changes—not so sweeping as those I should like to see—but steps in the right general direction.

Those Presidential recommendations have fitted into a nationwide pattern of criticism by hundreds of great organizations representing every stratum of our society and all the major religious faiths. Many of these organizations have endorsed the pending amendment, which, as I have said, is identical with S. 1206.

Particularly noteworthy among the organizations which have been demanding substantial modification of existing immigration and citizenship laws have been the CIO and the AFL—now the AFL–CIO—representing 15 million working men and women throughout the country. Indeed, in my judgment, organizations representing the overwhelming majority of the American people today demand modification of present law.

There have now been 4 years of experience under the McCarran-Walter Act. Each week and each day bring to light new examples of the inequities and injustices of the present law. Our foreign policy has been gravely handicapped by the terms of the present law. We have been made a butt of cruel gibes abroad when the contrast is pointed out between our professions of faith in brotherhood and equality, and our practice of discrimination under the terms of the McCarran-Walter Act.

I have been made aware, Mr. President, and have been kept informed of discussions of the possibility that some minor amendments to the present law and to the Refugee Relief Act might be considered and enacted before this session ends, and that we might be able to take some small steps forward in the direction of justice, or at least to provide for the entry of a few more persons from abroad into this country and the removal of some of the inflexible and dehumanizing barriers which now exist both in the McCarran-Walter Act and in the Refugee Relief Act.

Mr. President, I am in favor of any progress that can be made on this front, even inches of progress, and I shall vote, in the end, for any bill which represents any progress in this vital area.

But, Mr. President, I want the Senate to have a chance to consider and to vote not only on proposals for minor steps forward, but also on proposals for the major changes that everyone knows are needed. We are told that if we make any major changes in the McCarran-Walter Act this late in the session, they will be blocked in the House. I know that we cannot control the actions of the House, or of the House Immigration Subcommittee, or of its chairman. But I think we ought to do our duty as we see it and at least to face the issue—not merely the fringes of the issue, but the central issue involved here.

There is pending before the Senate on the calendar, a bill for the relief of the sheepherding industry, and my amendment was originally designed as a substitute for that bill. There is now pending a bill making provision for the admission of certain orphans into our country. I am for that bill. This sheepherders bill and the war orphans bill are the only immigration measures which the Senate Judiciary Committee has seen fit to report, of all the major proposals for immigration reform that are and have been pending before that committee.

I wish to address a few remarks to the sheepherders bill and the relationship of that bill to my amendment, even though that is not the pending bill. But it soon will be.

I am as sympathetic as is any other person to the needs of the sheepraising industry, even though we do not have many sheep in New York State. But although there are relatively few sheep in my State, we have many people and many other kinds of industries. The people have relatives and friends abroad. The people have families, some of whose members are abroad and would like to unite their families in this land of asylum and opportunity.

Many industries in my State have need of skilled technicians and of specialists in certain branches of those industries—tailors and capmakers, watchmakers and farmhands. The people of my State do not understand why Congress should show a special concern for the sheep and none for the people.

Actually, Mr. President, my amendment, the pending amendment, would meet the needs of the sheep-raising industry and of many other industries as well. It would meet the needs of the orphans, too. It would admit orphans and sheepherders into this country along with other classes of persons. I am sure that the sheep of Nevada and Utah and Idaho need to be tended, but so do the farms and factories of New York State.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEHMAN. I will yield briefly for a question.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I wish to compliment the Senator from New York and to say that a thousand tailors and garment workers were badly needed in New York and Mr. Corsi had planned to bring them into the United States.

Mr. LEHMAN. I thank the Senator from North Dakota.

My amendment is not a special bill for the relief of sheepherders and the sheep-raising industry. It is a bill for the relief of the United States. This amendment would completely overhaul the McCarran-Walter Act and its major unjust features, while retaining those provisions of the law which are good and sound and constructive.

When I introduced S. 1206 last year, it was cosponsored by Senators GREEN, HUMPHREY, KEFAUVER, KENNEDY, LANGER, CHAVEZ, MAGNUSON, MCNAMARA, MORSE, MURRAY, PASTORE, and NEUBERGER.

I assume that these Senators and many others join with me now in advocating the adoption of this substantial amendment which I have called up for consideration as a substitute for the pending bill. I wish to make it clear that if my amendment is adopted it will take care completely of the minor situation which is sought to be cured by the pending sheepherders' bill.

But, of course, my amendment goes much further. My amendment would eliminate from the law the iniquitous and discriminatory national origins quota system and substitute in its place a unified quota system which retains a fixed ceiling on total immigration into the United States—a ceiling more certain than that contained in the present law, but which would select people for admission into the United States on the basis of the individual worth and merit of the immigrants concerned, and on the needs of the United States. Immigration would be made flexible and adjustable to the changing needs of changing times.

The pending amendment would also strike out the intolerable distinctions and discriminations which now exist in the present law between native-born and naturalized American citizens, and which are among the most unjustifiable of the provisions of the present law. We must put an end to second-class citizenship in America.

The pending amendment would remove some of the boobytraps and pitfalls set forth in present law—boobytraps and pitfalls which now make admission into the United States a matter of whimsy and caprice, in some cases, on the part of consular officers and immigration officials.

The pending amendment would introduce justice and equity into the handling of aliens already in the United States. It would apply American standards of law and of justice to resident aliens as well as to American citizens.

The pending amendment would set up a statutory board for the review of decisions made by consular officers and immigration officers, thus remedying the incredible situation under which the decision of a consular officer, for instance, is absolute and nonreviewable, not even by the Secretary of State of the United States. A customs ruling on the admission of a sack of potatoes into the United States can be appealed as high as the Supreme Court but a decision by a consular officer as to the admission of a citizen's alien mother is as absolute as an imperial edict in some ancient monarchy or, to make a more modern analogy, one of the decisions of Stalin.

The pending amendment, moreover, would eliminate the waste and duplication of having both the consular service and the immigration service go over the same ground, do the same work, and expose every alien who enters this country to the double jeopardy of having two different sets of officials in different departments judge the same individual on the same set of facts.

Mr. President, I do not deceive myself into thinking that this amendment is going to be overwhelmingly approved. I agree that for the consideration of an amendment so comprehensive as mine, the Senate should have had the benefits of the detailed judgment of the Judiciary Committee. But, Mr. President, the Judiciary Committee refused to give the necessary study and attention to my proposal, and likewise overlooked the analogous proposals made by other Members of the Senate, and the recommendations of the President of the United States.

This is the only way left to me to bring this proposed legislation before the Senate for its consideration. This is the only way left to me to submit this measure in these closing hours of the session, to the Senate for a vote.

All of my colleagues, I am sure, have received during the past 2 years scores and even hundreds of letters, as I have, from individuals and organizations asking for the enactment of the principles which are contained in the pending amendment. These principles are not new; most of them have been advocated for many years. I, myself, have been advocating them for many years. If Senators are for wholesale immigration reform, they should vote for the pending amendment.

Mr. President, I have no pride of authorship or sponsorship in the actually pending amendment. The amendment was drafted by a score of the outstanding legal minds in America. It represents the best thought on this subject that is, in my judgment, anywhere available. I may say at this point that I would also be willing to support the recommendations of President Eisenhower, as translated into legislative form by the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS]. There are some points in the Watkins proposals which represent steps backward. Most of them represent forward movements—although not far or fast enough—and I shall vote for them if a majority of the Senate will not support my proposals.

There is no partisanship and no politics in this proposal. This is not a Democratic proposal but an American proposal.

I know that everyone is anxious to get on with the pressing business that confronts us before adjournment. I must say in passing that I can think of no business more pressing than the business of reforming our immigration and citizenship laws. I am willing to go to a vote on this proposition without the detailed discussion I should like to make of the detailed terms of this amendment. I ask unanimous consent, however, to have printed at this point in the RECORD a detailed analysis of my bill—the pending amendment—which I prepared at the time I introduced the bill in the Senate more than a year ago.

FEBRUARY 25, 1955.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCNAMARA], the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PASTORE], and the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. NEUBERGER], I introduce for appropriate reference an omnibus immigration and naturalization bill to replace the Immigration and Nationality Act, or so-called McCarran-Walter Act. The bill has for its title "The Immigration and Citizenship Act of 1955," and a similar bill is being introduced simultaneously in the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the press release, explanatory statement, and summary will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1206) to amend and revise the laws relating to immigration, naturalization, nationality, and citizenship, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. LEHMAN (for himself and other Senators), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXPLANATORY STATEMENT

We are today introducing an omnibus immigration and citizenship bill to overhaul, revise, and replace the discriminatory, oppressive, and inhospitable immigration and citizenship laws now on our statute books.

Our bill is a recodification of the McCarran-Walter Act, preserving the technical advances it made over preexisting law, but modifying and humanizing the spirit and letter both of preexisting law and of the McCarran-Walter Act in conformity with the repeated pledges and commitments which have been made by both major parties and by the President of the United States in official communications and messages to the Congress.

Our bill conforms to the recommendations of scores of religious and nonsectarian organizations of all shades and complexions interested in immigration and citizenship, and dedicated to the free exchange of ideas and persons, within the limits of reasonable security safeguards and orderly immigration procedures.

Our bill carries out the recommendations of the nonpartisan Presidential Commission on Immigration and Citizenship, which made its report in January 1953.

We call on President Eisenhower, and on the leadership of both parties in both Houses, to help insure prompt, early and intensive hearings on our bill and on other pending proposals to amend the McCarran-Walter Act.

In the present state of world affairs we dare no longer tolerate on our statute books the present shameful law which is losing us friends abroad daily, holding us up to contempt in the eyes of free mankind, and working havoc among our own people.

It is intolerable that we should continue to maintain our own Iron Curtain—against visitors and alien immigrants alike—while criticizing the Iron Curtain abroad. And the daily examples of senseless cruelty and injustice against aliens already resident here, or recently arrived here, makes our advocacy of justice abroad seem like hollow sham and pretense.

Our bill provides full and comprehensive security against the admission of subversive and undesirable aliens into the United States. Indeed, our bill tightens existing loopholes which now permit millions—yes, millions—of unscreened aliens to flood across our northern and southern land borders, and prevents orderly apprehension and prevention of such illegal immigration, with its dangerous components of subversive, diseased, and criminal elements.

Our bill would remove the intolerable barriers which now keep renowned scientists, scholars, and men of letters from coming to our shores as visitors; and also businessmen and tourists. Our bill would remove this particular stigma of shame from our statute books.

Our bill would eliminate racism and national discrimination from our immigration laws.

Our bill would eradicate the status of second-class American citizenship which now is fastened on millions of naturalized Americans.

American citizenship, which was once inalienable, both for the native-born and for those who acquire citizenship by naturalization, has become, in the McCarran-Walter Act, a temporary license—subject to revocation on a score of grounds—many of them unsubstantial and even capricious.

Our bill would limit immigration, but would not stifle it. Our bill would permit immigration to be used, as it should be, as one of the tools and expressions of our foreign policy—meeting our national need at home, and the particular need of aliens abroad.

Our bill would help restore America to the role it has traditionally occupied—as the hope of the oppressed and the persecuted everywhere, an asylum for the brave, the venturesome and the freedom-seeking abroad—within the limits of our conservative capacity for assimilation.

Our bill recognizes that a limited amount of immigration, carried out in an orderly way, with due regard for selection, resettlement, and integration, is of benefit to America, not a danger to America.

All decent-minded Americans, if they knew the facts about present law, would join in demanding that Congress promptly remove the many boobytraps for citizens, for resident and immigrant aliens, and for visitors, now secreted in the McCarran-Walter Act. The law is a mess which must be cleaned up without delay.

DETAILED SUMMARY

A. NEW ADMINISTRATIVE AGENCY; APPEALS AND REVIEW PROCEDURES

(Titles I and III, secs. 103 through 111, 304)

Our present immigration and naturalization laws are administered by the Immigration and Naturalization Service in the Department of Justice, and by the consular service in the Department of State. Obviously, the administration of the immigration laws is remote from the major concerns of the Attorney General and of the Secretary of State. In fact, the Secretary of State has but nominal control over the immigration functions of the consular service.

This two-headed system is, in itself, the end product of a long series of transfers, consolidations, and separations which have accomplished little except to confirm the relative immunity of the Immigration and Naturalization Service and of the consular service to cabinet-level direction. Both services have tended to become imbued, through the years with an anti-alien spirit. The predominant attitude is one of suspicion of the alien rather than of service to the immigrant.

For this, and other reasons to be cited, the proposed act terminates the major responsibility of the Department of Justice and the Attorney General and of the Secretary of State for immigration and naturalization, and vests this responsibility in a single new and independent agency, called the Immigration and Naturalization Commission (sec. 103).

Another outstanding defect of present law is the absence of adequate statutory appeals and review procedure. Under the McCarran-Walter Act, the alien overseas seeking admission to the United States has no assurance of uniform justice * * * no right of appeal from the decision of a consular officer. The alien who has landed in the United States has only limited rights of appeal and review and these rights are far from being either adequate or uniform.

In addition to eliminating the duplication between the Department of State and the Justice Department, the proposed act provides an orderly system of fair procedure and adequate review, by an independent quasi-judicial tribunal, of all administrative actions and decisions (secs. 107–111).

The desirability of the consolidation of all immigration and allied functions in one agency was recognized by the Hoover Commission. That body recommended outright transfer of the visa-issuing function from the State Department to the Justice Department.

Upon close study, however, it becomes clear that neither the State Department nor the Justice Department is equipped to discharge the full responsibility for this complex and highly sensitive operation. The business of the State Department is foreign affairs. That of Justice is legal counseling and the conduct of criminal and civil litigation. The best solution is the establishment of a separate independent agency concerned solely with immigration and naturalization.

The new Commission set up in the proposed act is a bipartisan body of three members appointed by the President, subject to confirmation by the Senate (sec. 103). Tenure is at the pleasure of the President. Provision is made for an administrator and a general counsel, both to be appointed by the Commission (sec. 104).

Under the McCarran Act a person seeking admission to the United States, whether as an immigrant or a visitor, applies to a State Department official, namely, a consul, for a visa. The consul's decision as to admissibility is final and unreviewable. At the port of entry, an official of the Immigration and Naturalization Service of the Department of Justice independently redetermines the alien's admissibility. This duplication is expensive to the Government and needlessly burdensome to the applicant. It precludes, moreover, uniform and reasonably predictable application of the law.

Under the proposed act, the functions of the Commission would include: the admission of aliens into the United States; the prevention of illegal entry; the deportation of aliens; the adjustment of status of aliens; the investigation of citizenship applicants prior to the presentation of the applications to the naturalization courts; and the institution of appropriate proceedings in various citizenship matters including denaturalization for fraud (sec. 105). Authority over the issuance of visas to diplomats and to U. N. officials would be retained in the State Department.

The proposed act empowers the Commission to establish its own field offices in foreign countries, after consultation with the Secretary of State, to take over the job of issuing visas to immigrants, visitors, and others desiring to go to the United States. But the Commission is authorized to delegate the visa-issuing authority to consular officers in areas where visa-issuing is not a full-time function. In such cases, the consular officer would work under the direction of the Immigration Commission, insofar as his immigration duties were concerned.

Under present law, administrative review in deportation and exclusion cases is not assured by statute; it exists at the pleasure of the Attorney General in the form of a Board of Immigration Appeals set up by executive order of the Attorney General. Nor is the Attorney General bound by the decisions of his Board. Under the proposed act, adjudicative functions within the Commission framework would be performed by hearing officers and finally by a Board of Immigration and Visa Appeals (sec. 108). The Board's independence is assured by a statutory grant of jurisdiction and by provision for fixed terms for Board members who would be appointed by the President, confirmed by the Senate, and who would be removable only for cause (sec. 107). This Board is empowered to hear appeals and to review the decisions of Commission officers, including decisions on the denial of visa applications.

The membership of the Board is set at nine. The Board may act through panels of three or more members. (The present Board has a backlog of over 12,000 cases.) The Board is empowered to sit, in panels, in any part of the country or abroad.

As is generally true of other independent agencies, the Commission, under the proposed act, would be governed by the Administrative Procedure Act (sec. 109). This assures a separation of prosecuting and adjudicative functions, and fair and open hearings. At the same time, the proposed act is sensitive to the needs of national security. Thus, in the case of the exclusion of an alien, evidence need not be revealed which the Attorney General certifies would seriously impair the security of the United States or a source of confidential information (sec. 304).

The provisions of the proposed act with respect to hearings are designed to afford fair treatment under clear and uniform procedures. The present law is subject to the objections that it contains complex provisions for different types of hearings in various situations affecting aliens. The proposed act provides uniform hearings on adequate notice. The proposed act requires that an alien be informed of his right to be represented by counsel. Hearings under the proposed act would be open and public, unless it is determined by the examiner or the Board that national security requires a closed hearing (sec. 108).

The proposed act would require that all decisions be based upon a record, be in writing, and state the reasons therefor.

Under the McCarran Act the alien may suffer lengthy confinement during any proceedings questioning his right to enter or remain in this country. The proposed act guarantees the privilege of reasonable bail. It would permit the denial of bail in cases involving the national health or security, or in the cases of aliens ordered deported but who have not left the country.

The Commission would have the power to impose reasonable conditions upon an alien released from custody, designed to assure his availability and to protect the public interest (sec. 111).

Board decisions, except in the case of visa denials, would be subject to limited review at the court of appeals level (sec. 110). This would be a significant change; the decisions of the present Board are, in legal effect, no more than recommendations to the Attorney General. The only recourse from a decision of the Attorney General is the writ of habeas corpus which is available only in a limited number of cases.

The proposed act gives the Commission authority to prescribe by rules and regulations many of the administrative details for the enforcement of the various provisions relating to immigration, exclusion, deportation, and naturalization. The Commission is given investigatory powers, and is required to report at least annually to the President and to Congress.

B. THE UNIFIED QUOTA SYSTEM—A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE NATIONAL ORIGINS SYSTEM

(Titles I and II, secs. 102 (a) (32), 102 (a) (19) (A), 201–204)

The proposed act abolishes the long-criticized and discredited national origins quota system of selecting immigrants.

This system has been described by religious leaders as an affront to the conscience of the American people. As pointed out in the report of the President's Commission on Immigration and Naturalization, "the test it applied was not the individual worth of the immigrant, but rather the presumed superiority of people from certain areas of the world. Place of birth, not individual capacity or cultural background, was the test."

The national origins quota system has failed. It contemplated that 81.6 percent of quota immigration would come from northern and western Europe, and that 16 percent would come from southern and eastern Europe. Actually only 55.8 percent has come from northern and western Europe and 42.4 percent from southern and eastern Europe. One reason for this is that the countries of northern and western Europe have not wanted and have not used the immigration quotas assigned to them. Since the time the national origins quota system went into effect, only 44 percent of the total quotas available have been used, and 56 percent have remained unused, despite the existence in some countries of long waiting lists of applicants, some of whom have been waiting for 10 or 15 years for a quota number.

The total number of quota visas available under existing law is approximately 154,200 annually, derived from a formula of one-sixth of 1 percent of our 1920 population (excluding Negroes and Indians).

The proposed act, in establishing the new unified quota system (title II), uses the same basic percentage formula as in present law, except that the percentage of one-sixth of 1 percent is applied to the last decennial census (1950) and includes all our inhabitants. Calculation on this basis results in a total immigration quota of approximately 251,100 annually. This means an annual increase of approximately 97,000 in the total quota.

The number 251,000 based on one-sixth of 1 percent of our 1950 population, was not haphazardly arrived at. It represents the consensus of the most outstanding experts in regard to the number of immigrants who can be easily absorbed into our population and into the labor force. The American Federation of Labor and the CIO have supported this estimate. And it is, of course, based on the same percentage now written into the McCarran Act, except that the one-sixth percent is applied to our present population instead of to our population in 1920. The use of the 1920 population figure has no basis in logic or reason.

The McCarran Act took a few halting steps toward the abolition of racial barriers in our immigration laws, but at the same time erected new barriers. The McCarran Act created the so-called Asiatic-Pacific triangle, openly discriminating against so-called orientals. The McCarran Act established small maximum quotas for colonial areas, such as Jamaica, thus discriminating against Negroes.

The proposed act makes no radical departures from the traditional pattern of immigration flow to the United States, but sets up a completely nondiscriminatory framework, flexible enough to meet the changing needs of American policy requirements.

The unified quota system is, in fact, chiefly characterized by its flexibility. It is built around the seven following principles:

(a) The establishment of a series of preference groups whose detailed allocation to areas, nations, and classes of individuals, although made by the Commission, and subject to the approval of the President, is guided by a definition, written into the law, of four objectives sought to be served by immigration:

1. To provide for the reuniting of families, and the admission into the United States of close relatives of United States citizens and of alien residents of the United States.

2. To provide for the admission of persons of outstanding technical and professional skills whose services are urgently needed in the United States.

3. To provide for the admission of aliens whose coming will serve American foreign policy requirements of the United States by helping to solve economic and other problems of friendly nations.

4. To provide for granting haven and asylum in the United States for victims of racial, religious, and political persecution.

(b) The reservation of a portion of the total quota for new and self-initiated immigration, for persons without special ties to the United States, on a first-come-first-served basis for those otherwise qualified.

(c) The assurance of a minimum quota to all nations and areas.

(d) The assurance that no one nation will get a preponderant share of the total quota.

(e) The abolition of barriers to immigration based on race or national origin.

(f) The use of the concept of citizenship and residence as a fundamental qualification, rather than national origin in cases where it is found necessary to allocate visas by nations.

(g) The election of individuals on the basis of personal qualification and need rather than national origin.

Based on these 7 principles the unified quota system provides for the division of the total quota into 5 components. Four of these are preference groups; one is a nonpreference group, the so-called newcomer group.

The four preference groups, and the percentage range of the portion of the total of the quota allocated to each are:

1. Family unification: Not less than 25 percent nor more than 35 percent.

2. Occupational: Not less than 5 percent nor more than 10 percent.

3. Asylum: Not less than 15 percent nor more than 25 percent.

4. National interest: Not less than 20 percent nor more than 25 percent.

The newcomer group is allocated a minimum percentage of 20 percent of the total, plus such additional amounts as are not allocated to the four preference groups.

This is the total limit providing for quota immigration—the ceiling—adjustable every 10 years on the basis of the decennial census.

All quota allocations are required to come within this total limit. But the present deceptive system whereby a large proportion of the total available quota remains unused is abolished. As long as there are would-be immigrants who qualify and desire to come, the quota remains available. Unused quota visas are made available for use in the succeeding year.

For years some of the apologists for the national origins quota system have defended it—even while conceding its national and racial bias—with the argument that no better plan or system had been worked out and was available.

The unified quota system, as formulated in the proposed act, is such a plan. It sweeps away racial and national discrimination, substituting a scheme which assures a regulated and controlled flow of immigration from those areas of the world which logically look to the United States as a haven, and which are capable of contributing useful citizenship material to this country. The proposed act grants the Commission the necessary leeway to adjust immigration to actual needs; but statutory guides are laid down designed to insure a fair and equitable distribution of immigration, and a varied flow.

A major feature of the proposed act is its consolidation, within the quota, of all general immigration, including immigration from the Western Hemisphere. This has been done in order to put all foreign countries on the same basis consistent with the best interests and needs of the United States. Thus the proposed act does not give nonquota status, as present law does, to aliens born in the Western Hemisphere, with the right to immigrate to the United States without limitation as to number.

Under the proposed law, all immigrants, except those in special classes defined as nonquota, will be required to qualify for 1 of the 5 groups, already described, into which the total annual quota is divided.

The first and largest of the five groups, the family unification preference group, includes the blood relatives of citizens of the United States, and the spouses and blood relatives of resident aliens—in both cases through the third degree of consanguinity as computed under civil law (sec. 202 (a)).

The occupational preference group (sec. 202 (b)) includes persons whose admission is especially advantageous to the United States because of their education, technical training and skill and ability to contribute to the national security, health, and welfare.

The asylum preference group (sec. 202 (c)) includes persons oppressed or persecuted because of their race, color, creed, national origin, or opposition to totalitarianism. This perference group will provide a special priority for 2,500 war, occupation or refugee orphans (as defined in sec. 102 (a) (32); also see the special section of this summary, p. 14, dealing with children and orphans).

The national interest preference group (sec. 202 (d)) is designed specifically to advance the foreign-policy interests of the United States by strengthening those areas of the free world whose acute political and economic problems may be alleviated by some emigration. This preference group will also include a priority for orphans.

Finally, the newcomer group (sec. 202 (e)) will consist of aliens who do not qualify for admission under any of the preference groups, but who desire to immigrate to the United States, and who possess all the other qualifications which are required of quota immigrants. The basis of the admission of qualified aliens in the newcomer group is first-come-first-served (sec. 204).

Annual allocations of the total quota among the five groups are to be made by the Commission, subject to the approval of the President. Any unused quota visas are to be reallocated from year to year among other groups (sec. 203).

Although priority in the issuance of visas within the newcomer group is to be determined in the order of application, it is provided that one-half of 1 percent of the number of visas assigned annually to the newcomer group shall be assigned to each nation having a population of 200,000 or more. This provision assures each nation with a population of 200,000 or more of an annual newcomer quota of no less than 250 visas (sec. 204 (c)).

It is further provided that no more than 10 percent of the newcomer group shall be assigned to any one nation. Inasmuch as the minimum in the newcomer group (20 percent of the total) would be about 50,000 annually, the maximum for any nation under such an arrangement would be 5,000. This figure could increase somewhat in proportion to the additions to the newcomer group authorized by the Commission and approved by the President.

A nation, as used in this connection, is defined to mean a colony, a possession or a dependency, all of which are given similar status. But the Commission is given the power to group individual nations into a single quota area (sec. 204 (c)). (See chart.)

Another major feature of the proposed act, to be considered in connection with the unified quota system, is the provision dealing with nonquota immigration. The McCarran Act adopted the main features of pre-McCarran law, except for a new grant of nonquota status to husbands as well as wives of United States citizens, while at the same time withdrawing nonquota status from college and university professors. Under the terms of the proposed act, professors coming to the United States to teach at acknowledged colleges, universities, etc., are restored to their traditional nonquota status.

The unified quota system based on one-sixth of 1 percent of the 1950 United States Census (150 million) provides for the annual issuance of 250,000 immigration visas to be allocated as follows:

Family unification preference, 25 to 35 percent—62,000 to 87,000 visas	Occupation preference, 5 to 10 percent—12,000 to 25,000 visas	Asylum preference, 15 to 25 percent—37,000 to 62,000 visas	National interest preference, 20 to 25 percent—50,000 to 62,000 visas	Newcomer group, 20 percent—50,000 visas
1. Children [1] 2. Parents [1] 3. Grandparents 4. Brothers and sisters 5. Uncles and aunts 6. Other close relatives —of citzens and resident aliens.	Persons especially selected because of their— 1. Special skills. 2. Technical knowledge. 3. Education. 4. Potential contribution to national security. The Commission to consult with Secretaries of State, Defense, Commerce, and Labor in making allocations.	1. Persons threatened with persecution or oppression. 2. Refugees from persecution or oppression. 3. May include up to 2,500 visas for orphans.	1. Visas to be allocated to areas of the world to alleviate acute political and economic problems. 2. May include "surplus population" and persons displaced by war or its aftermath. 3. Allocated after consultation with Secretaries of State and other Government agencies. 4. May include up to 2,500 visas for orphans.	1. To be allocated on first-come, first-served basis throughout the world. 2. Designed to take care of general immigration. 3. Every nation of the world over 200,000 population assured one half of 1 percent of visas in this group. 4. No nation can be issued more than 10 percent of visas in this group. 5. Nations geographically or culturally related may be grouped as one "nation."

Unused quota visas occurring at the end of each year may be allocated to the various groups for the following year under rules and regulations of the Commission.

All immigrants under the unified quota system would be required to meet the health, education, economic, security, and other standards of the basic immigration laws.

In addition—and this is a vital feature—a nonquota status is given to parents as well as to children and spouses of American citizens (sec. 102 (a) (19) (A)).

At the same time that nonquota status is given to parents of American citizens, the proposed act deprives aliens born in the Western Hemisphere of their nonquota status, as already described.

The effect of these changes is to confine the nonquota status to very special classes of immigrants—children, spouses, and parents of citizens, professors, ministers, and 1 or 2 other technical categories—and to place all general immigration, including immigration from the Western Hemisphere, under the quota system.

Under present and preexisting law it is theoretically possible for all the 130 million natives of Latin American to apply for immigration to the United States without numerical restriction. The fact that immigration from Western Hemisphere nations has been kept within manageable limits in the past has been due largely to arbitrary refusal by consular officials to grant more than a limited number of visas in each country. Such a procedure is obviously unjustified in law and discriminatory in practice. The nonquota status for natives of the Western Hemisphere has thus been largely mythical rather than actual. Under the terms of the proposed act, Western Hemisphere nations would fare better than under the present nonquota status but would at the same time be placed on the same footing with all other nations, subject to the total numerical limitations and to all the other qualifications of quota immigration.

The abolition of the national origins quota system and of national quotas per se results in the wiping out of existing mortgages on the quotas of many small countries—mortgages left over from the operations of the Displaced Persons Act. Under that act, displaced persons who were admitted to this country were charged against the future quotas of the countries in which the aliens happened to be born. The practical result was to cut in half the future quotas of these countries. In the case of Latvia, for instance, one-half of its quota is used up until the year 2274; in the case of Estonia, until 2146; in the case of Poland, until 2000; in the case of Yugoslavia, until 2014; in the case of Turkey, until 1964. With the termination of the national origins quota system all these mortgages are brought to an end and immigration would begin, after the enactment of the proposed act, with a fresh start.

The proposed act would, in general, enable the United States to make its contribution toward a solution of European population and refugee problems, without the necessity of repeated emergency measures. The proposed act is designed to establish a permanent immigration policy based on world conditions which show no likelihood of alleviation for a long time to come.

The enactment of the proposed act will bring renewed hope to hopeless, persecuted, and distressed people in many lands. Enlightened immigration policies adopted by the United States will provide leadership for other countries which can absorb immigration. Millions of victims of war and of the aftermath of war may thus find opportunity for rehabilitation, to the benefit of the entire free world.

C. SPECIAL PROVISIONS FOR CHILDREN, ADOPTED CHILDREN, AND ORPHANS

(Titles I, II, and III, secs. 102 (a) (32), 202 (c), (d), and 303 (c))

The proposed act gives special attention to children—natural-born, adopted, and orphans. The proposed act facilitates the admission into the United States of alien children of American citizens and of resident aliens, treating adopted children on the same footing as natural-born children.

In recent years there have been many appeals by both private and public agencies, and by thousands of individual citizens, for special legislation to permit alien orphans to be admitted to the United States for adoption.

There has also been a demand for legislation permitting orphans who are adopted abroad by our citizens, especially by our GI's, to be brought back to this country without securing in almost every case, as is now required, the enactment of a private bill.

And finally there has been increased agitation for "doing something" about the many illegitimate children, born abroad to GI fathers—children whose mothers cannot care for them, and who could be made available for adoption by childless couples in the United States.

All these demands have been met in the proposed act by a series of special provisions dealing with adopted children and with orphans.

The proposed act provides, in the first place, that children adopted abroad by American citizens shall be considered as nonquota immigrants, the same as natural-born children, and be admitted freely without being charged to any quota.

The proposed act then makes special provision for the annual entry of up to 5,000 war, refugee, or occupation orphans (as defined in sec. 102 (a) (32)). This is accomplished by providing a priority within the asylum preference group (sec. 202 (c)) and within the national interest preference group (sec. 202 (d)), for 2,500 orphans each, annually.

Thus permanent statutory authority is provided to allow the admission of 5,000 orphans annually—if that many are demanded for adoption and qualify. This should do much to eliminate the flourishing "black market" in babies, and at the same time help solve a critical social problem in many countries of Western Europe.

"War occupation, or refugee orphans" are defined (sec. 102 (a) (32)) as children under 10 years of age who have been orphaned by the death or disappearance of both parents, or who have been abandoned or deserted by, or separated and lost from both parents. The definition also includes a child who has only one parent due to the death or disappearance of the other parent where there is reasonable ground to believe that such other parent was a member of the Armed Forces of the United States. If the remaining parent is unable to care for the child and agrees to release the child for immigration and adoption, the child can be admitted into the United States for adoption.

All these orphans must be coming either to be adopted by American citizens or alien residents, on the basis of assurances given by such citizens or residents, or be coming under the sponsorship of a public or private agency approved by the Commission, with assurances that adoption or guardianship proceedings will be initiated for such orphans.

The provisions of the proposed act and the rules and regulations to be adopted by the Commission would adequately protect not only the American families who might wish to adopt these orphans, but would also protect the orphans' health and safety.

The McCarran-Walter Act makes no provision for an infant child whose birth occurs at a time when it is inconvenient or impossible for the parents to obtain the proper documents necessary for the child's admittance into the United States. Sometimes the children are born en route to the United States, or are born prematurely during a vacation trip to Canada or Mexico. The proposed act (sec. 303 (c)) would prevent the exclusion of any child under 1 year of age accompanied by his parents, one or both of whom are citizens of the United States. This protection would also extend to a child under 1 year of age who has been born to alien parents after their visa or reentry permit has been issued. These safeguards are designed to prevent arbitrary barring of infant children from admission into the United States with their parents.

D. SPECIAL PROVISIONS FOR VICTIMS OF PERSECUTION; THE GRANTING OF ASYLUM

(Titles I, II, and III, secs. 102 (a) (18) (B) (vi), 202, 302 (a) (4))

One of the new features of the proposed act is a series of special provisions designed to translate into legislative effect the traditional United States policy of providing asylum for victims of political, racial, and religious persecution.

This undertaking is reflected, first, in the basic quota provisions (sec. 202), in which one of the preference groups is reserved for persecutees as defined (in sec. 202): "persons whose coming will further the traditional policy of the United States of offering asylum and refuge to persons oppressed or persecuted, or threatened with oppression or persecution, because of their race, national origin, color, religion, adherence to democratic beliefs, or their opposition to totalitarianism or dictatorship."

An additional innovation of the proposed act is an arrangement whereby the Secretary of State is given authority to certify for temporary admission into this country "executive, legislative, or judicial officials or leaders of national opinion of any foreign state who seek political asylum in the United States." [Sec. 102 (a) (18) (B) (vi).] This provision requires the Secretary of State to certify that the admission of such persons is "in the interest of the United States." Under these terms, officials of foreign governments who escape, for instance, from behind the Iron Curtain or are forced to flee from a Latin American country because of an armed uprising, may be granted, on the certification of the Secretary of State temporary haven in the United States as nonimmigrant visitors. Thus, the United States will be able to provide political asylum as Switzerland does.

In regard to this special class of refugees, there is no fixed requirement that they must satisfy all the standards established for other immigrants or even nonimmigrants. All such requirements may be waived at the discretion of the Secretary of State if the Secretary of State finds that the entry of these individuals is in the interest of the United States.

A further provision dealing with asylum from persecution (sec. 302 (a) (4)) authorizes the Commission to grant to a person fleeing for his life from political, religious, or racial persecution special permission to enter the United States, even though he may not have a visa. Such a fugitive must be otherwise eligible, in all respects, to receive a visa, and must have been unable to obtain the visa because he fled in imminent danger of his life from political, racial, or religious persecution.

(Titles I and III, secs. 102 (a) (18), 305)

With respect to various classes of nonimmigrants, such as visitors, diplomats, students, and treaty merchants (sec. 102 (a) (18)), it has always been necessary to vest power to waive what might otherwise be grounds for exclusion. Under the proposed act that power is vested in the Commission (sec. 305) in regard to all aliens except those in diplomatic categories (102 (a) (18) (A), (B), and (C)) who receive their visas at the direction of the Secretary of State. Waivers may be granted on such terms and conditions as the Commission deems appropriate to protect the national health and security, and all waivers of more than 30 days' duration must be reported annually to Congress.

The McCarran-Walter Act has been administered as though there were no logical basis for differentiation between an immigrant for permanent residence and a visitor seeking to enter the United States for business or for pleasure; or to lecture, to take part in a scientific seminar or conference, or a gathering of scholars or artists or for consultation with other specialists in the sciences or the arts.

Scientific research in a variety of fields, for instance, has suffered significantly in the United States, because of the inability of foreign scientists and scholars to enter after being invited here to attend such meetings and conferences. Many international conferences on science and technology which might otherwise be held in this country are now being scheduled elsewhere, to our great loss in scientific knowledge, business, and prestige.

Admission for permanent residence is properly denied to actual or potential subversives, but the privilege of even a temporary visit to the United States is now also being denied in the cases of persons whose political thinking appears to deviate in any marked way from orthodox political concepts. Were such a criterion to be applied on a reciprocal basis by other countries, no American citizen devoted to the principles of free speech, free press, and free worship would be admissible even as a tourist to totalitarian countries or to any countries with basic political concepts different from our own.

The purpose of the waiver provision in the proposed act is to restore reason and flexibility in the case of the nonimmigrant, subject only to measures necessary for the protection of the national health and security.

F. ENTRY, EXCLUSION, AND DEPORTATION OF ALIENS; PROVISIONS TO PROMOTE THE SECURITY AND WELFARE OF THE UNITED STATES

(Titles I, III, and IV, secs. 102 (a) (15), 102 (a) (28), 301, 302, 323, 333–336, 341 et seq., 361 et seq., 367, 413, 414, and 422)

One of the major goals of the proposed act is to eliminate discriminatory and unnecessarily harsh provisions contained in the McCarran-Walter Act relating to exclusion and deportation; to guard against abuse of administrative discretion; and to provide adequate safeguards against the admission or retention in the United States of subversives or other undesirable aliens. This objective is sought to be achieved in various sections of title III.

It is recognized that the American people rightly desire that our immigration laws contain all provisions necessary to insure us against infiltration by subversive elements. Self-defense and commonsense require that every possible and reasonable precaution be taken to prevent the admission of individuals whose purpose is to subvert or overthrow the Government of the United States and our democratic way of life. The same strictures are pertinent in regard to the admission of criminal elements or other undesirables. In the proposed act every practical protection has been provided for our national security. Comprehensive and workable standards are established so that genuine subversives and anti-democratic elements are barred from admission. Provision is made for the deportation of those who, despite all precautions, obtain entry to this country.

In fact, the antisubversive provisions of the proposed act are designed to be more effective than those in the McCarran Act.

The McCarran Act erects such a confused and contradictory network of antisubversive provisions that it catches many anti-Communists in its web while allowing true subversives, both Fascist and Communist, to slip through.

Thus, while the McCarran Act erects a Maginot line of defense against all individuals guilty of dangerous thoughts or associations, who seek to come to the United States through the conventional channels of immigration, the McCarran Act establishes virtually no safeguards against the surreptitious entry of spies and saboteurs across the Mexican and Canadian borders. Nor does the McCarran Act contain any barriers against the admission of Nazis.

The proposed act (sec. 301) sets forth 15 categories of aliens defined as ineligible to receive visas. A valid visa is, of course, a prerequisite for admission. Exceptions from the rigid standards of eligibility and the right to waive some of the grounds of ineligibility are duly provided for, where an admission would not be contrary to the best interests of the United States. Generally speaking, aliens who are mentally defective, who have contagious diseases, who are criminals or subversive, or who are otherwise undesirable for the reasons enumerated in section 301 are ineligible to obtain visas.

Among the classes of aliens most clearly ineligible for admission are those who have advocated or taught subversive doctrine, or who have been members of or affiliated with any organization which advocates or teaches subversive doctrine. Aliens ineligible under these provisions may be admitted if their activities or affiliations were terminated at least 5 years prior to the application for a visa, and their entry would not be contrary to the best interests of the United States (sec. 301 (i) (2)).

The term "subversive doctrine" is defined in section 102 (a) (28) (A) to (F) inclusive, and under the three subsequent subsections (G) to (I) inclusive. In accordance with these provisions, certain organizations are defined as subversive per se. These are: The Communist Party of the United States or of the Soviet Union; or any other Communist Party in any other country, affiliated with either the Communist Party of the United States or of the Soviet Union; the National Socialist Party of Germany or any of its paramilitary affiliates; and any successor parties to the abovenamed which advocate or teach subversive doctrine.

The definition of "subversive doctrine" is so written as to bar aliens who advocate: (a) Opposition to all organized governments or forms of law; (b) the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force, violence, or other unconstitutional means; (c) the establishment of a totalitarian dictatorship in the United States (which is itself defined in sec. 102 (a) (29)); (d) the duty, necessity, or propriety of the assassination of public officials; (e) the unlawful destruction of property, or the extermination or persecution of persons because of race, religion, or ancestry.

Membership in or affiliation with an organization which advocates or teaches subversive doctrine (sec. 102 (a) (15)) means voluntary membership or affiliation when over the age of 16 with knowledge that the organization advocates or teaches subversive doctrine. "Voluntary" membership or affiliation does not include joining a "subversive" organization when required to do so by law, without personal belief in the subversive doctrine taught or advocated, or solely for the purpose of obtaining employment, education, food, or other essentials of life.

The classes of undesirable applicants for admission also include those who seek to enter the United States for the purpose of engaging in commercialized vice, who are paupers, professional beggars, vagrants, or who are likely to become public charges; and also aliens who have been convicted of violating laws relating to traffic in narcotic drugs (sec. 301 (c), (d), (e), and (k)).

Except where a charge of crime is made for political purposes, aliens who have been duly charged with committing a crime involving moral turpitude are ineligible for visas (sec. 301 (1)), as are those who desert from the Armed Forces or remain abroad in order to avoid military service (sec. 414).

Aliens who have assisted any other alien to enter the United States illegally are themselves barred, as are, of course, all aliens who have attempted to enter by willful and material fraud (sec. 301 (o) and (p)).

The proposed act makes improvements in the present system of keeping a check on undesirable aliens. All investigative agencies are directed to keep the Commission advised of relevant information they may gather regarding any alien who may apply for admission, or who may enter the United States, so that all such information will eventually be concentrated in one place, where it can be acted upon promptly and effectively, thus avoiding duplication, waste, and delay (sec. 116).

The proposed act is generally more uniform than the McCarran Act in its application of similar standards to all aliens. Substantially the same provisions relating to eligibility for visas are to be found in the sections relating to deportation and to naturalization (secs. 341, 413, 422).

As pointed out elsewhere, the proposed act, by creating a single agency to administer the immigration laws, minimizes the chances of cruel and unnecessary loss and injury to would-be immigrants, who, under the McCarran Act, may be granted a visa abroad by the consular service and denied admission at the port of entry by the Immigration Service (sec. 302).

Under the proposed act, visa-granting officers of the Commission are bound to exercise great care before issuing a visa (sec. 322), and the alien whose eligibility for admission is established is then assured that, except for one or more of several contingencies provided for in the proposed act (sec. 302 (b)), his trip to the United States will not be in vain, and he will be admitted.

The idea of making a visa a virtually certain guaranty of admission into the United States is also applied to reentry permits. Under existing law, a resident alien, duly admitted and about to leave the country for a temporary visit abroad, may apply for and receive a reentry permit. But the permit is of no practical validity. When the alien returns to an American port, he is treated as if he had never before been admitted, and he may, and frequently is, denied admission on any one of a wide variety of grounds. This is the notorious new-entry doctrine which the proposed act would abolish. Under the proposed act an alien having his home in the United States and desiring to go temporarily abroad may be denied a reentry permit on security or other grounds (sec. 323). But if he is granted a reentry permit, he is guaranteed a return to the United States, except under certain few and clearly defined circumstances (sec. 302).

The proposed act would nullify the effect of a visa or reentry permit in those cases where it was procured by willful and material fraud; or where new evidence, discovered after the issuance of a visa, would, if it had been known, have made the alien ineligible for a visa; or where he fails to meet other specified conditions contained in the proposed act (sec. 302 (b)).

As a general rule an alien previously admitted to the United States but who has gone abroad for a temporary stay is to be excluded only if, while he was abroad, he was convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude; or if he seeks to reenter to engage in criminal activities; or if, while abroad, he has advocated or taught subversive doctrine, or joined with or become associated with a subversive organization; or if he has for gain assisted any other alien to enter the United States in violation of law (sec. 303).

In these respects, the provisions of the proposed act in regard to reentry permits are similar to those governing visas: Aliens who are undesirable for security or for other reasons set forth in the proposed act are not admitted or allowed to enter the United States, even if they have a visa or reentry permit (sec. 302 (b)).

On the other hand, the possibilities for arbitrary, capricious, and otherwise unfair treatment of aliens is greatly minimized. Procedures are created for hearings and for appeals from adverse rulings, and all proper precautions are taken to provide safeguards against discrimination and other injustices, and to assure humane and impartial consideration to all who come to the United States to visit or to stay.

The proposed act requires the examination and inspection of all arriving aliens, other than those who are not excludable, and the prompt deportation of those who are not entitled to enter (secs. 333–336).

Nine classes of aliens who are or may become deportable are defined in the proposed act (sec. 341). These include aliens who are (1) found to have obtained admission through fraud; or (2) enter the United States without inspection; or (3) violate a condition of admission; or (4) became public charges within 5 years after entry for reasons not shown to have arisen after entry; or (5) are sentenced and confined in prison for a term of at least 1 year upon conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude, committed within 5 years after entry; or (6) within 10 years after entry, are sentenced more than once for such offenses; or (7) are convicted at any time after entry of any crime involving commercialized vice; or (8) are convicted at any time after entry of violating laws relating to narcotic drugs; or (9) within 5 years prior to the issuance of a warrant of arrest in deportation proceedings, advocated or taught or were members of or affiliated with organizations which advocated or taught subversive doctrine.

It is provided that conviction, as used in this connection, shall not apply to crime committed by aliens under 16 years of age, or those which have been pardoned, or to convictions where the court recommends that deportation is not warranted. In addition, the Commission is given authority to waive deportation for a single crime where serious hardship would occur and where continued residence in the United States would not be undesirable (sec. 301 (b)).

No alien who has been admitted for permanent residence before his 14th birthday may thereafter be deported, nor an alien who has lived as a permanent resident of the United States for 20 years or more (except as a fugitive from justice) (secs. 341, 342).

The proposed act contains detailed provisions for the arrest and detention of aliens believed to be deportable (secs. 343 et seq.). Ordinarily, the Commission is given a period of 6 months within which to effect the alien's departure. Aliens ordered to be deported are given an opportunity for judicial review, but meanwhile remain subject to supervision by the Commission.

Aliens who are to be deported may select the country to which they wish to go, if the country in question will receive them, unless prejudicial to the interests of the United States. If a deportable alien is unable to or fails to arrange to be received in the country of his choice, his deportation is then to be arranged by the Commission (sec. 344).

Appropriate provision is made to defray the expenses of deportation. Deportable aliens who can prove good moral character for the preceding 5 years are permitted to leave at their own expense without the stigma of deportation (sec. 345).

All aliens who remain in the United States for more than 30 days are required to be fingerprinted and registered, and to notify the Attorney General of any change of address (secs. 361 et seq.). But failure to carry a registration card or to notify the Attorney General of a change of address, while a misdemeanor if it is a willful failure, is not made, ipso facto, a ground for deportation, as such a failure is under the McCarran Act.

The proposed act contemplates that all information with respect to registration of aliens will be kept in a central place, and the Attorney General is given full authority to administer and enforce the registration provisions (sec. 367).

Scattered through the proposed act are provisions imposing maximum penalties, some giving the Commission authority to assess and collect fines, and other provisions defining offenses punishable by the courts. In addition, chapter 8 of title III contains general penalty provisions, in which a number of offenses are defined and appropriate penalties provided. This chapter also provides for the detention and prompt deportation of alien stowaways.

In general, the proposed act is much more definite than the McCarran Act in its treatment of aliens who apply for visas, who are admitted or excluded, and those who, if admitted, thereafter become deportable and are ordered to be deported. Full recognition is given to the gravity of the issues involved in the decisions to grant, revoke, or deny visas, or to exclude or deport.

The proposed provisions under which children admitted prior to the age of 14 and aliens who have resided in the United States for more than 20 years are made immune to deportation reflect tested principles long recognized in our general body of laws covering criminal offenses and civil liabilities.

The deplorable tendency in recent immigration legislation to remove limitations of time within which the Government is required to act in order to deport an alien is reversed in the proposed act. Under the McCarran Act an alien living in the United States who joined the Communist Party at any time in the distant past—perhaps 20 or 30 years ago—is subject to deportation even though he may have left the party soon after joining, and may have subsequently become a strong anti-Communist.

Under the McCarran Act the Government is required to deport such an individual, thus causing great distress and hardship on members of his family. At the same time, the McCarran Act admits aliens who, 5 years or more previous to their admissions to the United States, may have been active members of the Communist Party.

It should be emphasized that the present provision for deportation of resident aliens who have, in the past, belonged to subversive organizations is retroactive and penalizes persons whose acts were not proscribed at the time the actions were taken. The proposed act eliminates this inconsistent retroactivity.

Banishment or exile is a severe penalty, the relic of another day and age. In many cases it is a much greater punishment than any provided by the criminal laws, and should not be imposed under conditions where no criminal prosecution could be brought. That goal has not quite been reached in the proposed act but the new proposals are a marked improvement, at the same time containing adequate provisions to guard the security, the health and the welfare of the United States.

G. ALIEN CREWMEN

(Title III, secs. 352, 354–357)

The provisions of the McCarran-Walter Act (secs. 251–257) which deal with the admission and exclusion of alien crewmen have been widely criticized as unworkable and unfair. The press of the major maritime countries of the world has been filled with reports of the abuse and unfairness involved in the procedures for handling alien crewmen who wish to land temporarily in the United States during the stay of their vessel, or while awaiting assignment to another vessel.

Under the terms of the McCarran-Walter Act, alien crewmen are for the first time required to fulfill the same requirements as immigrants coming to live permanently in the United States. Arriving at the port of entry, they are cross-examined concerning every detail of their past lives and political beliefs and affiliations. This questioning is neither appropriate nor necessary for crewmen who are coming here for only a few days.

Under the proposed act an alien crewman can be prevented from landing in the United States on any ground that would make him ineligible to receive a visa (sec. 352). However, unlike the McCarran Act, the proposed act gives the Commission the power to waive any provision barring the temporary landing of an alien crewman if it determines that the health and safety of the United States would not be thereby endangered.

The McCarran Act makes no provision for informing the excluded crewman of the reasons for denial of a permit to land, and it provides him with no administrative appeal from the decision of minor immigration officials.

The proposed act would not extend to alien crewmen the broad hearing and appeals procedures provided for aliens coming here as permanent immigrants, but the proposed act would provide for expeditious hearings under special rules and regulations, in cases where landing permits for alien crewmen are denied or revoked (sec. 352 (b)).

The proposed act retains all the necessary safeguards to prevent the landing of diseased alien crewmen, and to prevent alien crewmen from illegally remaining in this country by jumping ship, or by being discharged or paid off in the United States without permission of the Commission (secs. 354–357).

The McCarran Act sets an absolute time limit of 29 days for temporary landing permits. This restriction has worked considerable hardship on alien crewmen who have become subject to arrest as a result of sailing delays, or failure to obtain assignment on another ship. The proposed act would leave to the determination of the Commission the time limitation on a valid permit. All waiver cases for stays exceeding 30 days are required to be reported to Congress.

H. ADJUSTMENT OF STATUS

(Title III, sec. 346)

Reasonable and flexible provisions for the adjustment of the status of an alien from that of a nonimmigrant to an immigrant or vice versa without the time-consuming and expensive necessity of leaving and reentering the country have long been needed in our immigration laws. Prior to the McCarran-Walter Act, this was possible only through the suspension of a warrant of deportation, a suspension which could be secured only in the case of an alien who had resided here for 7 years or who had lived here for 5 years and could prove to the Attorney General (a) good moral character and (b) that his deportation would result in serious economic detriment to a citizen or to a legally resident alien spouse, parent, or minor child.

The McCarran-Walter Act (sec. 247) established direct procedures for adjustment of status, permitting a resident alien to adjust his status from that of immigrant to nonimmigrant, and appearing to make it possible (sec. 245) for a nonimmigrant to adjust his status to that of an immigrant. The latter provision, however, seems to be more of a trap for the unwary than a grant of grace. The adjustment may be granted only in the discretion of the Attorney General when, both at the time of the application and at the time of the Attorney General's approval of that application, an immigrant visa is immediately available. The McCarran-Walter Act defines a visa as being immediately available only if the quota is not filled at the time the application for adjustment of status is filed. The McCarran Act provides, moreover, that the very act of filing an application for adjustment of status automatically ends the nonimmigrant status of the applicant. Thus, an alien who files such an application may become immediately subject to deportation if, all unknown to the alien, an immigration visa is not immediately available.

This is a clear illustration of the undue harshness of the McCarran Act, under whose terms broad discretion is granted to the Attorney General to exclude aliens from admission to the United States, or to deport them, but whose discretion to suspend deportation or to permit change of status is severely limited.

With respect to suspension of a warrant of deportation, the McCarran Act (sec. 244 (a)) drastically cuts down the rights existing under prior law. Under the McCarran Act the procedure is restricted to applications filed not more than 5 years after December 24, 1952, by aliens who last entered the United States more than 2 years prior to June 20, 1952. It requires a 7-year residence in the United States, and the Attorney General must be convinced that the alien's deportation would "result in exceptional and extremely unusual hardship to the alien, or to his spouse, parent, or minor child who is a citizen or legally resident alien."

The proposed act (sec. 346) simplifies and combines the two procedures and makes it possible for any legally resident alien, as a matter of right, upon application and appropriate showing to the Commission, to adjust his status. If the adjustment sought is to the status of an immigrant, the alien need merely show that (1) if he were applying abroad, he would be eligible for admission, and (2) a visa is reasonably available in the group for which the alien is eligible. In a case where those facts cannot be shown, the alien may nonetheless obtain the adjustment if he proves good moral character for the preceding 5 years, and that he has resided in the United States for 7 years, or that his departure from the United States would cause "serious hardship to himself or to a citizen or a previously admitted alien who is his spouse or child."

I. CITIZENSHIP AND NATURALIZATION

(Title IV)

The corresponding title of the McCarran-Walter Act was presented to the American people as an advance, because it abolished racial barriers to naturalization. But at the same time the McCarran Act riveted into law a rigid second-class status for naturalized citizens of the United States and, under this title as elsewhere, vested tremendous power in the unreviewable discretion of the Attorney General. The proposed act grants to naturalized citizens full equality with natural-born citizens, except in cases where naturalization was procured by actual fraud. The proposed act makes other changes to simplify and clarify the law and to bring naturalization and denaturalization procedures back into line with traditional American standards of justice.

J. WHO IS A CITIZEN?

Citizenship is acquired either at birth or by naturalization. The proposed act (sec. 401) slightly broadens the category of citizens of the United States at birth, abolishing the undemocratic distinction between citizen and national (now applicable to persons born in American Samoa and Swains Island), and (sec. 408) extending citizenship to persons born in Puerto Rico before 1899 (sec. 402).

K. REQUIREMENTS AND PROCEDURES FOR NATURALIZATION

Except in certain special cases, noted below, a 5-year residence in the United States is required for naturalization. The proposed act returns to pre-McCarran law by abolishing the McCarran Act's conclusive presumption (sec. 316 (b)), that absence from the United States for a period of 6 months or more breaks the continuity of residence for naturalization purposes. An alien absent for less than 1 year will, under the proposed act (sec. 422), be able to show that he had reasonable cause for not having sooner returned to the United States. Absences longer than a year without breaking the continuity of residence are permitted by the McCarran Act only in the case of a person absent in connection with the performance of religious duties (sec. 317). Under the proposed act (sec. 423) this exemption is extended to alien employees of specified types of United States organizations who may be sent abroad in connection with their jobs.

In view of the obvious desirability of having all members of a family group acquire United States citizenship as soon as reasonably possible, our law has always reduced the residence requirement in the case of the spouse of an American citizen and has permitted the naturalization of minor children through the naturalization of their parents. The proposed act reduces the required residence of a spouse of a United States citizen from 3 years to 1 year (sec. 431) and increases the maximum age for derivative naturalization from 15 to 17 (secs. 432, 433). Also the proposed act extends this privilege to legally adopted children (sec. 434). Abuse of these provisions, as through short-lived marriages entered into for the purpose of acquiring citizenship, is guarded against by the provision for revocation of any naturalization procured by fraud (sec. 447).

Subversive activity will bar naturalization. But instead of the vague and general language of the McCarran Act (sec. 313), the proposed act gives a clear and definite test—precisely the same as that applied in an exclusion or deportation case—namely, no alien may be naturalized if at any time within 5 years of filing his petition for naturalization, or at any time prior to naturalization, he has either advocated or taught subversive doctrine or been a member of or affiliated with a subversive organization (sec. 413).

The proposed act retains the literacy requirement for naturalization, but restores it to the form in which it was prior to the McCarran Act, requiring that the petitioner be able to read. No writing requirement is provided (sec. 421).

In accordance with the modern trend in all fields of law, the proposed act permits naturalization on an affirmation rather than an oath in the case of a person whose religion forbids the taking of an oath (sec. 444).

No basic change is proposed in the procedure for obtaining naturalization. The proposed act does, however, restore the law to what it was prior to the McCarran Act in two important respects:

First, it eliminates the mandatory requirement of the so-called neighborhood check of the petitioner, leaving to the discretion of the Commission the scope of the investigation in any particular case.

Second, it deletes the provision of the McCarran Act (sec. 335 (d))—completely foreign to American concepts of proper administrative procedure—which permits the naturalization examiner, a subordinate employee of the Attorney General, to be represented in court by separate counsel, in cases in which the Attorney General has overruled the examiner.

Under the proposed act the court would have before it the complete record of the Commission's action on the naturalization petition, including, as a part of the record, the examiner's decision.

L. SPECIAL NATURALIZATION PROCEDURES FOR GI'S; EXPEDITED NATURALIZATION FOR WARTIME SERVICE IN KOREA

The privilege of accelerated acquisition of United States citizenship through wartime service in the Armed Forces of the United States is granted, as in present law, to veterans of World War I, World War II, and the Korean conflict. Ninety days of such wartime service is required. In the case of Korea, the service must be during the period June 25, 1950, through July 1, 1955 (sec. 437 (b)).

Service in the Armed Forces during peacetime or other than in the Korean conflict is required to amount to 3 years in order to qualify the alien for citizenship (sec. 437 (a)). Arrangements for naturalization in the field and standards for determination of honorable service are also included (sec. 438) in the proposed act. A much simpler procedure is provided than under present law.

The proposed act reverts to the law as it was prior to the McCarran Act in restoring a simplified procedure for the naturalization of persons who lost their United States citizenship by serving in the armies of the allies of the United States during World War II (sec. 436).

M. LOSS OF CITIZENSHIP AND REVOCATION OF NATURALIZATION

Loss of United States citizenship, whether acquired by birth or by naturalization, is a drastic penalty. The McCarran Act (sec. 349) contains a long list of acts which automatically cause loss of citizenship. If citizenship was acquired by naturalization, those acts may include mere residence abroad for as little as 3 years (sec. 352). Moreover, the effect of these provisions in every case is to place upon the person whose citizenship is thus forfeited the burden of proving that he did not, in fact, commit he act on the basis of which our Government now strips him of citizenship.

Under the proposed act, two basic changes are made:

First, the list of acts which automatically would cause loss of citizenship is limited to (1) renunciation of United States citizenship, (2) obtaining naturalization in a foreign nation, (3) desertion in time of war, (4) leaving the country to avoid military service, (5) conviction for treason, or (6) an attempt to overthrow our Government by force of arms (sec. 451).

The McCarran Act (sec. 349) specifies additional grounds, e. g., taking an oath of allegiance to a foreign state, serving in its armed forces, accepting or serving in an office under a foreign government if foreign nationality is thereby acquired, and voting in a foreign political election. Under the proposed act only the taking of an oath of allegiance, or service in the armed forces of a foreign state after having acquired its nationality, in each case without compulsion, will result in a loss of citizenship. In such a case, as in a proceeding for revocation of naturalization, loss of citizenship would result only from a decree of a United States court in a proceeding brought by the Commission for forfeiture of citizenship, in which the Commission would have to sustain the burden of proof, e. g., to show that by swearing allegiance to a foreign state the defendant acted without compulsion (sec. 452).

All distinctions between native-born and naturalized citizens are abolished by the proposed act so that mere residence abroad, even in the country of birth or former citizenship, will not, as it does under the McCarran Act (sec. 352), forfeit United States citizenship.

With respect to revocation of naturalization, the proposed act would restore the law to what it was prior to the McCarran Act. The basic ground for revocation of naturalization has always been fraud in its procurement. However, the McCarran Act (sec. 340) contains a broad definition of fraud which may include an unintentional concealment of a material fact, even where the petitioner for naturalization did not think it was material or had forgotten it. The McCarran Act also has provisions under which such things as refusal to testify before a congressional committee (sec. 340 (a)), residence in the country of birth (sec. 340 (d)), or joining a subversive or front organization (sec. 340 (c)), after naturalization, may give rise to a conclusive presumption that the naturalization was procured by fraud. These provisions are of doubtful constitutionality as they stand in the McCarran Act. However, the proposed act (sec. 447), eliminates them as un-American. It leaves naturalization revocable only for an act found by the courts to constitute fraud in its procurement. Action for revocation of naturalization must be brought within 10 years after citizenship was granted, an extension of the statute-of-limitations concept to the field of naturalization.

N. NO PROTECTION OF THE RIGHTS OF CITIZENSHIP

(Sec. 455)

Both under the McCarran Act and under prior law, a person denied a right or privilege of citizenship on the ground that he is not a citizen must seek confirmation of his status by suit for a declaratory judgment in the United States courts. However, under the McCarran Act, despite the fact that the Government may assert citizenship to be lost while the individual is abroad, the suit to confirm the citizenship status may be brought only if the plaintiff is within the United States (sec. 360 (a)).

Under the proposed act (sec. 455), the action could be instituted while the plaintiff is outside the United States and the court may, if it finds that the suit was instituted in good faith, order the issuance of a certificate of identity to the plaintiff, permitting him to come to the United States while the suit is pending. If he loses the case, the plaintiff is made immediately deportable.

O. JOINT CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE

(Title V, sec. 501)

The McCarran-Walter Act established a joint congressional committee which was given broad—far too broad—powers in connection with the administration of our immigration and naturalization laws. The basic idea of a Joint Committee on Immigration and Naturalization is a useful one. But the provisions of the McCarran-Walter Act setting up this committee are violently inconsistent with sound Government practices.

Under the McCarran-Walter Act power is given to the joint committee to participate in the administration of the act. Subordinate administrators are required to report directly to the joint committee, a gross violation of the concepts of sound government and of the doctrine of the separation of powers as between the legislative and executive branches of Government.

Moreover, under the terms of the McCarran-Walter Act, membership on the joint committee is reserved to members of the Judiciary Committees of the House and Senate. This reflects the basic philosophy inherent in the McCarran-Walter Act that immigration policy is solely and entirely a matter of police powers, of investigation, apprehension, prosecution, and punishment, and is of only legal concern.

The proposed act is based on quite another philosophy, namely, that immigration and naturalization policy has much wider ramifications, involving foreign policy, economic policy, and the public welfare generally.

Consequently, in the proposed act (sec. 501), the joint congressional committee is first of all confined in its jurisdiction and functions to matters of legislation and legislative inquiry; secondly, the committee is broadened to include representation of the Foreign Relations and the Labor and Public Welfare Committees, as well as of the Judiciary Committee. The joint committee is, of course, retained as a bipartisan committee. The distribution of membership in each House is as follows: 3 from the Judiciary Committee, 2 from the Foreign Relations Committee, and 2 from the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

Such a joint committee, with broad representation and clearly defined legislative functions, can usefully operate to keep a vigilant eye on the administration of our immigration laws and the effect of those laws and policies upon our relations abroad, upon our economy at home, and upon the welfare of the country as a whole.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, on this vote we shall be judged by many American citizens and by many persons outside America as to our attitude toward the national origins quota system, toward the distinction between naturalized and native-born American citizens, and toward the many other evils in the present law to which I have barely alluded in these remarks.

For the sake of America and for the prestige of America abroad, I hope that the pending amendment will be approved.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I favor the enactment of the pending bill. The bill was reported by the Judiciary Committee with the understanding that I would not offer any amendments to it, and that I would oppose any amendments to the bill. I am, therefore, in opposition to the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from New York. I call attention to the fact that the amendment consists of 214 pages and 510 sections.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WATKINS. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. The Senator does not want to leave the impression, does he, that the substitute was reported by the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. WATKINS. No; I am talking about the amendment which is offered to the bill.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WATKINS. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. Does the Senator desire to leave the impression that the committee even looked at the amendment?

Mr. WATKINS. I will say some members did look at the amendment, yes, but I cannot say the whole committee did. It must be remembered that the Judiciary Committee is one of the busiest committees in the Senate. It has several thousand bills referred to it, and it is impossible for everyone on the committee to study everything before the committee.

Mr. PASTORE. Was there any study made of the amendment by the committee? Does the Senator want to leave the impression that the amendment was studied by the committee?

Mr. WATKINS. No, I do not want to leave that impression. I do not think it was.

Mr. PASTORE. Can the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee give us any illumination—I think that is the proper word—on the question whether or not the amendment was studied at all by the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. EASTLAND. No, it was not.

Mr. PASTORE. I think the Senator has answered my question.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WATKINS. I have only 5 minutes, but I yield for a question.

Mr. LEHMAN. I wonder if the Senator will not agree with me that a bill, on which the amendment is based, was submitted to the Congress nearly 2 years ago, and no action was taken on it?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes; it was submitted in 1952, substantially in the same form as the amendment now is.

Mr. LEHMAN. It was submitted in 1952, 1954, and in 1955, and no attention was paid to the bill or to the amendment which I now propose.

Mr. WATKINS. I wish to point out that the amendment is very comprehensive in nature. It attempts to revise completely the Immigration and Naturalization Act of 1952. Much study would be required before a measure of this sweeping character could be adopted. I think it would be very unwise to do so at this time, and I think the Senator himself has indicated he does not expect to have the amendment adopted. However, I think the orphans bill should pass the Senate, even though there may be a proposal to take care of the same situation offered to a measure which will come before the Senate in a few minutes.

Therefore, I urge the Senate to reject the amendment of the Senator from New York. There are many provisions in the amendment of which I approve, but I urge Senators to vote against the amendment for the reasons I have given. It really cannot be considered on its merits at this juncture, with the limited time of 15 minutes to a side which has been allotted. Adequate consideration could not be given to the amendment in that time, and it would be very unwise to adopt it.

Mr. PASTORE. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WATKINS. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. Do I understand correctly that the distinguished Senator from Utah introduced a bill which would carry out the recommendations of the President of the United States with reference to the amendment of the so-called Walter-McCarran Act?

Mr. WATKINS. I introduce four bills which would have carried out the President's recommendations. Hearings were held not only on those four bills, but also on a bill introduced by the distinguished Senator from New York, which bill is represented by the amendment he is now offering to the pending bill.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WATKINS. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Of how many pages does the amendment consist?

Mr. WATKINS. 214 pages and 510 sections. It is a complete rewriting of the Walter-McCarran Act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question or two about the bill. I want to know what the bill does with respect to the German quota.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Is the Senator from North Dakota speaking about the bill or the amendment of the Senator from New York?

Mr. LANGER. I refer to the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I think the Senator from North Dakota should address his question to the Senator from New York. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from North Dakota, so he may ask the question.

Mr. LANGER. What does the amendment do about the German quota?

Mr. LEHMAN. This is an amendment to the bill.

Mr. LANGER. What does the amendment do with respect to the German quota?

Mr. LEHMAN. The amendment does away with the national origins quota entirely, and allows persons to come into the country on the basis of their merit and usefulness to the United States. It seems to me that is the best way to legislate on the question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield back the time remaining to him?

Mr. LEHMAN. No.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the Senator from New York has used up all his time, had he not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the Senator from New York has used 14 minutes.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, we seem to be in a great hurry. I have another amendment to offer, so I shall yield back the time remaining to me on the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I call up my amendment in the nature of a substitute, identified as 7–25–56—A.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator refer to the 13-page amendment?

Mr. LEHMAN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it satisfactory to have the amendment printed in the RECORD, rather than read?

Mr. LEHMAN. Yes.

Mr. LEHMAN'S amendment is as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That (a) subsection (a) of section 2 of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended (67 Stat. 400; 50 U. S. C. App., sec. 1971 (a)), is amended to read as follows:

"'(a) "Refugee" means any person in a country or area which is neither Communist nor Communist-dominated, who because of persecution, fear of persecution, natural calamity, military operations, or events subsequent to September 1, 1939, is out of his usual place of abode and is unable to return thereto.'

"(b) Subsection (b) of section 2 of such act is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 2. Section 3 of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended (50 U. S. C. App., sec. 1971 (a)), is amended—

"(1) by striking out 'two hundred and five thousand' and inserting in lieu thereof 'two hundred and fifteen thousand'; and

"(2) by striking out 'if accompanying them' and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'and to the dependent parents, stepparents, and adoptive parents (if the adoptive parenthood relationship existed prior to July 1, 1953) of such aliens and the spouses of such aliens, if accompanying or following to join them.'

"SEC. 3. (a) Subsection (a) of section 4 of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended (50 U. S. C. App., sec. 1971b (a)), is amended by—

"(1) striking out in paragraph (2) the word 'escapees' and inserting in lieu thereof 'refugees'; and

"(2) striking out all of paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"'(3) Not to exceed 20,000 visas to refugees residing within the European continental limits of the member nations of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization or in Turkey, Spain, North Africa, Sweden, Iran, or the Free Territory of Trieste and who are not nationals of the area in which they reside. Such visas shall be issued only in the area in which such refugees reside.'

"(b) Subsection (b) of section 4 of such act, as amended (50 U. S. C. App., sec. 1771b (b)), is amended to read as follows:

"'(b) The allotments provided in subsection (a) of this section shall be available for the issuance of immigrant visas to—

"'(1) the spouses and unmarried sons or daughters under 21 years of age, including stepsons or stepdaughters and sons or daughters adopted prior to July 1, 1953, and the dependent parents, stepparents, and adoptive parents (if the adoptive parenthood relationship existed prior to July 1, 1953), referred to in section 3 of this act, of persons referred to in subsection (a) of this section; and

"'(2) the dependent parents, stepparents, and adoptive parents (if the adoptive parenthood relationship existed prior to July 1, 1953), referred to in section 3, of the spouses of such persons referred to in subsection (a) of this section.'

"(c) Section 4 of such act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"'(d) Not more than 1,200 aliens in Austria, Germany, Greece, and Italy, may be issued visas and be admitted to the United States under the terms and within the numerical limitations of this act, irrespective of the fact that they are found ineligible to receive visas or inadmissible to the United States under section 212 (a) (6) of the Immigration and Nationality Act insofar as it relates to aliens afflicted with tuberculosis. No alien shall be issued a visa under the provisions of this subsection unless (1) it is shown that arrangements satisfactory to the Attorney General and the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service have been made that such alien, when admitted to the United States, will not become a public charge, and will not endanger the public health, and (2) such alien is a member of a family unit, consisting of qualified applicants for a visa under the provisions of this act, which he intends to accompany or follow to join in the United States. The provisions of section 7 (a) of this act shall not apply to any alien receiving a visa under the provisions of this subsection, but the Administrator shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary for a special assurance to satisfy the requirements of the provisions of this subsection.'

"SEC. 4. (a) Subsection (a) of section 5 of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended (50 U. S. C. App., sec. 1971c (a)), is amended to read as follows:

"'(a) Not to exceed 9,000 special nonquota immigrant visas may be issued to eligible orphans as defined in this act who are under 14 years of age at the time the visa is issued. No more than two such special nonquota immigrant visas may be issued to eligible orphans adopted or to be adopted by any one United States citizen and spouse, unless necessary to prevent the separation of brothers or sisters.'

"(b) Subsection (b) of such section as amended (50 U. S. C. App., sec. 1971c (b)) is amended to read as follows:

"'(b) When used in this act, the term "eligible orphan" shall mean an alien child (1) who is an orphan because of the death or disappearance of both parents, or because of abandonment or desertion by, or separation or loss from, both parents, or who has only one parent due to the death or disappearance of, abandonment or desertion by, or separation or loss from the other parent and the remaining parent is incapable of providing care for such orphan and has in writing irrevocably released him for emigration and adoption; (2) (A) who has been lawfully adopted abroad by a United States citizen and spouse while said citizen is or was serving abroad in the United States Armed Forces, or is or was employed abroad by the United States Government or has resided for not less than 30 days in the country in which the orphan has been adopted, or (B) for whom assurances, satisfactory to the consular officer to whom a visa application on behalf of the orphan is made, have been given by a United States citizen and spouse that if the orphan is admitted into the United States they will adopt him in the United States and will care for him properly; and (3) who is ineligible for admission into the United States solely because the nonpreference portion of the quota to which he would otherwise be chargeable is oversubscribed by applicants registered on the consular waiting list at the time his visa application is made. No natural parent of any eligible orphan who shall be admitted into the United States pursuant to this act shall thereafter, by virtue of such parentage, be accorded any right, privilege, or status under the Immigration and Nationality Act. In no case shall an adoption by proxy be considered to be an adoption for the purposes of this section.'

"SEC. 5. Section 6 of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended (50 U. S. C. App., sec. 1971d), is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 6. (a) Any alien resident who (1) establishes that prior to July 1, 1953, he lawfully entered the United States as a bona fide nonimmigrant and that he is unable to return to the country of his birth, or nationality, or last residence because of persecution or fear of persecution on account of race, religion, or political opinion, or (2) establishes that if he were outside the United States he would be eligible to receive a special nonquota immigrant visa under the provisions of this act, or (3) was brought to the United States from other American Republics for internment, may, not later than June 30, 1956, apply to the Attorney General of the United States for an adjustment of his immigration status. In meritorious cases under clauses (1) and (2) of this subsection, the Attorney General may, in his discretion, waive the requirement that such aliens establish lawful entry.

"'(b) If the Attorney General shall, upon consideration of all the facts and circumstances of the case, determine that any such alien, provided for in subsection (a) of this section, has been of good moral character for the preceding 5 years and that such alien was physically present in the United States on the date of the enactment of this act and is otherwise qualified under all other provisions of the Immigration and Nationality Act, the Attorney General shall report to the Congress all the pertinent facts in the case. If, during the session of the Congress in which a case is reported or prior to the end of the session of the Congress next following the session in which a case is reported, the Congress passes a concurrent resolution stating in substance that it approved the granting of the status of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence to such alien, the Attorney General is authorized, upon the payment of the required visa fee, which shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the account of miscellaneous receipts, to record the alien's lawful admission for permanent residence as of the date of the passage of such concurrent resolution. If, within the above-specified time, the Congress does not pass such a concurrent resolution, or, if either the Senate or the House of Representatives passes a resolution stating in substance that it does not approve the granting of the status of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, the Attorney General shall thereupon deport such alien in the manner provided by law.

"'(c) The provisions of this section shall not be applicable to any aliens admitted into the United States under the provisions of Public Law 584, 79th Congress, 2d session (60 Stat. 754), Public Law 402, 80th Congress, 2d session (62 Stat. 6).

"'(d) The number of aliens who shall be granted the status of aliens lawfully admitted for permanent residence pursuant to this section shall not exceed 10,000.'

"SEC. 6. (a) Subsection (a) of section 7 of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended (50 U. S. C. App., sec. 1971e (a)), is amended to read as follows:

"'(a) Except as otherwise herein provided, no visa shall be issued to any alien under this act unless an assurance, in accordance with regulations promulgated pursuant to this act, shall first have been given by a citizen or citizens of the United States that such alien, if admitted into the United States, will be suitably employed without displacing some other person from employment and that such alien and the members of such alien's family who shall accompany or follow to join such alien and who propose to live with such alien will not become public charges and will have housing without displacing some other person from such housing. The spouse and unmarried dependent sons and daughters under 21 years of age, including stepsons and stepdaughters and sons or daughters adopted prior to July 1, 1953, of such alien, and the dependent parents, stepparents, and adoptive parents (if the adoptive parenthood relationship existed prior to July 1, 1953) of such alien and of such alien's spouse shall not be required to have such assurances made in their behalf. The assurances shall be submitted to the Administrator and it shall be the duty of the Administrator to verify the authenticity and bona fides of such assurances and such assurances shall be subject to final acceptance and approval by the consular and immigration officers. Blanket assurances, or assurances not submitted by a responsible individual citizen or citizens, or assurances not submitted by an organization recognized by the Administrator for the purpose of submitting such assurances, shall not be considered as satisfying the requirements of this section. The assurances for employment and housing shall be indexed and filed in such manner so as to show the specific address or addresses in the United States in which both the employment and housing are available, the type of employment and housing which are available, and the conditions and terms of the employment. This subsection shall have no applicability to the alien eligible under paragraph (6), (8), or (10) of section 4 (a) of this act, if such alien provides satisfactory evidence that he will not become a public charge.'

"(b) Subsection (d) of section 7 of such act (50 U. S. C. App., sec. 1971e (d)) is amended to read as follows:

"'(d) No alien shall be issued a visa under this act or be admitted into the United States unless he shall present to the consular officer at the time of making application for a visa or to the immigration officer at the time of application for admission a certificate of readmission guaranteeing for a period of 5 years (from the time of leaving the country where the visa is issued) his readmission to the country in which he obtains a visa under the provisions of this act if it is subsequently found that he obtained a visa under the provisions of this act by fraud or by misrepresenting a material fact.'

"SEC. 7. Subsection (c) of section 11 of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953 (50 U. S. C. App., sec. 1971i (c)) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'(c) No person shall be issued a visa or be admitted into the United States under the provisions of this act unless the consular officer and the immigration officer, after an inspection and examination of such person abroad, are entirely satisfied upon the basis of affirmative evidence adduced by the applicant that the applicant has established his eligibility for a visa and his admissibility into the United States under the immigration laws and regulations. The eligibility of an applicant under the provisions of this act shall be the exclusive responsibility of the consular officer. No person to whom a visa shall be issued shall be exempt from inspection and examination at a port of entry.'

"SEC. 9. Section 12 of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended (50 U. S. C. App., sec. 1971j), is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 10. Section 20 of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended (50 U. S. C. App., sec. 1971q), is amended to read as follows:

"'TERMINATION

"'SEC. 20. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, no immigrant visa shall be issued under the provisions of this act after December 31, 1956.

"'(b) If any of the special nonquota immigrant visas authorized to be issued under section 3 of this act remain unissued on December 31, 1956, such unused visas shall be redistributed among those categories in section 4 (a) of this act that have (1) unfilled applications for visas, and (2) no visas remaining available for issue on December 31, 1956. Each such category shall be allotted a percentage of such unissued visas (to the extent necessary to fill applications remaining unfilled on December 31, 1956) equal to the percentage of the visas authorized under section 3 which is allotted to such category under section 4 (a). Any unissued visas remaining unallotted after the allotment provided by the preceding sentence shall be allotted among those categories which are not allotted sufficient visas under the preceding sentence to fill the applications remaining unfilled on December 31, 1956, until (1) all such unissued visas have been allotted or (2) all categories have been allotted a number of such unissued visas equal to the number of its applications remaining unfilled on December 31, 1956. No immigrant visa made available to the categories under section 4 (a) of this act by virtue of this subsection shall be issued after December 31, 1960.'

"Amend the title so as to read: 'A bill to amend the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended.'"

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I shall speak very briefly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, may we have a unanimous-consent agreement on a time limitation on this amendment?

Mr. LEHMAN. Yes. In accordance with the request of the majority leader, who is always courteous, I shall be glad, indeed, to limit my remarks to 5 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time on the pending amendment and on the bill be limited to five minutes to each side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I have already submitted my amendment to the pending bill. I now call up the amendment.

This amendment would revise and liberalize the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, in order to carry out the intent of Congress and of the American people in regard to the admission of refugees and escapees into the United States.

I now ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a summary analysis of my refugee relief act amendment, a statement made by me before the subcommittee, and remarks prepared in support of the amendment.

There being no objection, the analysis, statement, and remarks were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APRIL 23, 1955.

ANALYSIS OF REFUGEE RELIEF ACT AMENDMENTS

1. The term "refugee" is broadened to include persons who are displaced from their country of birth or nationality as a result of events prior, during, or subsequent to the outbreak of World War II, and as a result of present political conditions, fear of persecution, military operations, etc., are unable to return to their natural place of abode. The term "refugee" is made to include escapees from behind the Iron Curtain obviating the necessity for two separate categories, which in the present law, have contributed to administrative delay and confusion.

2. The overall number of visas available for issuance is increased from 209,000 to to 224,000. The 15,000 increase is added to the present 10,000 allotment of visas (sec. 4 (a) (3)) for refugees residing in the NATO countries. New areas included within the purview of the act would be Spain and North Africa.

3. The restrictive and opprobrious term—"ethnic"—is struck from the act.

4. The maximum age for orphans eligible to be admitted under section 5 of the act, is increased from 10 to 14.

5. The provision for adjustment of status of aliens presently residing in the United States is broadened and liberalized.

6. The requirement for employment and housing assurances for qualified refugees has been modified to provide that these assurances may be given by individuals or by voluntary agencies recognized by the Department of State for the purpose of giving such assurances. One of the major problems arising under the present assurance requirements is that a specific job and housing facility must be underwritten by a specific individual prior to the time a refugee can be declared eligible for immigration. Authorizing the acceptance of such assurances from duly recognized voluntary agencies would greatly simplify the entire program.

7. The requirement of section 7 (d) of the present act that an alien, before being admitted into the United States must obtain a certificate of readmission into the country from which he departs for the United States is eliminated. It is felt that the requirements of the basic immigration law covering necessary travel documents and clearances are more than sufficient to protect the interests of the United States.

8. The requirement of subsection (d) of section 11, that a completely documented 2-year history of the alien be submitted as a condition of eligibility is repealed. This provision has resulted in interminable delays in the admission of escapees from behind the Iron Curtain. The security requirements of the basic immigration law, as well as the additional requirements of this act, are deemed more than adequate to protect the security interests of the United States.

9. The final termination date of the act is extended from December 31, 1956, to December 31, 1960. Provision is made that after December 31, 1956, those visas which have not been issued in the various categories established in the act shall be reallocated to those categories which have exhausted their visa allocations and in which there is still a demand for visas.

10. Section 12 of the act which establishes a system of priorities for the issuance of visas is repealed. These provisions have proven to be largely unworkable and meaningless in actual practice.

STATEMENT OF SENATOR HERBERT H. LEHMAN BEFORE THE SENATE SUBCOMMITTEE ON REFUGEES AND ESCAPEES, IN SUPPORT OF S. 1794 — AMENDMENTS TO THE REFUGEE RELIEF ACT OF 1953

Mr. Chairman, I am extremely pleased to appear before this subcommittee on the critical matter now pending before you, namely, the question of amending the Refugee Relief Act of 1953.

As I understand it, the hearings today and tomorrow are to be devoted primarily to S. 1794, the bill introduced by myself in association with Senators HUMPHREY, KEFAUVER, and DOUGLAS. But there is also pending before this subcommittee S. 2113, introduced by Senator WATKINS and others, consisting of the proposals submitted by President Eisenhower. There has also been introduced within the past 2 days a bill by the chairman of this subcommittee, S. 2149.

Mr. Chairman, I have not had the opportunity or the time to study the bill you introduced, the Langer bill. I am sure that it contains constructive proposals. However, not having been able to study it, I shall direct my remarks today to my own bill, S. 1794, and the Watkins bill, S. 2113.

Although I am well aware of the fact that these hearings are on S. 1794, I am sure the subcommittee would want me to include reference to S. 2113 also and to compare the two bills. If I had had the time to study it, I would have liked to make detailed reference to the Langer bill as well.

Mr. Chairman, I know of your personal interest—and I am sure of all the members of this subcommittee—in the subject matter at hand. This subcommittee has conducted hearings in the recent past on the manner in which the Refugee Relief Act and the refugee relief program have been administered. You have heard a number of witnesses and have compiled a most useful record.

I am sure it is plain to you—as it is plain to the majority of the American people—that the refugee relief program, hopefully inaugurated with the passage of the Refugee Relief Act in the summer of 1953, has gone very badly. In my judgment, it has been a failure. It has brought heartbreak and disappointments to thousands and even hundreds of thousands. This program has floundered on the rocks of administrative redtape, of administrative obsession with so-called security, and of primary defects in the law itself.

Almost 2 years have gone by since the Refugee Relief Act was approved by this Congress and signed by the President. In those 2 years, only a small percentage of the authorized number of 209,000 refugees and escapees have been admitted to the United States. Under this act, which was passed for the primary purpose of admitting refugees and escapees from behind the Iron Curtain, only a handful—some say about 1,000—the official figure is about 6,000—of actual refugees and escapees have received visas for entry into the United States.

This discrepancy in figures is due to the fact that some of these refugees and escapees are also relatives of persons already legally resident in the United States, including citizens. Under the terms of the law, it is much easier for relatives to enter the United States than for refugees and escapees who have no relatives. I am heartily in favor of admitting relatives of American citizens and of permanently resident aliens into this country, but that isn't what we set out to do when we passed the Refugee Relief Act. We told the world that we were going to do a great and humanitarian act. We were going to do our part to provide haven and asylum for those who had fled and might yet flee from behind the Iron Curtain, and for those who constituted the flotsam and jetsam of war and political upheaval in the Old World.

We were going to receive a fair number of these into America.

But the record shows that we have not. We have failed. Shame has been cast upon the prestige of the United States. While exhorting people from behind the Iron Curtain to take flight from tyranny, we have turned our backs upon them, once they have escaped. We have herded them into concentration camps in Western Germany, Australia, and Italy. There they live, I am told, under the most incredible conditions of hardship—behind barbed wire fences—not so very much different from the conditions from which they fled.

As far as coming to the United States is concerned, we tell them we are sorry, but the refugee relief program has such high standards of security and eligibility that they cannot come in. We have closed the door in their faces.

I have heard accounts of what goes on in those refugee camps, how the individuals and their families, wives and children live and subsist. I hope some of the witnesses who appear before this committee, in the course of these hearings, will tell you what they have seen, so that your heart may be wrenched, as mine was.

At this point, Mr. Chairman, I should like to read from a bulletin sent out by the Americans Friends Service Committee, the great humanitarian voluntary agency of the Quakers, reporting on some of the conditions in the refugee camps in Germany. I should like to quote an excerpt from a report submitted by a Miss Gwen Gardner, a Friends Service Committee field worker, who has been working among and with these refugees, trying to find jobs for them in Germany, while they are waiting for permission to emigrate someplace, anyplace.

I am quoting from the report by Miss Gardner:

"Those of you who are cudgelling your consciences because you wonder if we ought to move DP's who prefer to stay where they are, come with us and visit Landshut. We'll show you things that will tear your heart and put your doubts to rest. Perhaps, as on my second visit with Doris Borrusch, the men will mob us in the dark corridor. They've got wind of our purpose. There is a man with an amputated arm. 'Aren't you the American Quakers finding jobs for people? Look, I'm a painter, too. Can't you get me a job?' and the tall thin man with pleading brown eyes: 'I'm a cook. I've worked with the Americans * * *' and the burly man with the working overalls: 'I'm a metal worker * * * you said you wanted metal workers. I'm 53, but I'm healthy. I can work.' But the whole camp is coming. There are rows of men advancing down the corridor. It's the same in the rooms. This gray-haired, square-built, honest looking man, follows us. 'I've got a trade. I'm a carpenter. I want work, too. I'm strong. I'm 55. But I'm stronger than that young man. He's sick. Don't help the young ones * * * they can get work. The employers take them. It's we older men who need your help. We'd work if they'd let us. Look at that chap. He's a welder. He's strong. He's fit. He doesn't drink. He wants to work. But he's nearly 60. Help him to get out of here.'

"Two young men, both too slightly built to be suitable for the iron foundry that Doris Borrusch has come to offer, pursue us out of the room after we've filled in the questionnaire and seen their papers. 'Please get us out of there. Please help us. Don't leave us. We'll rot if we have to stay here,' says the one who has had a 2 months' prison sentence for fighting. * * *

"We have 3 jobs to offer among 400 men. Which shall we choose? Whom must we reject? The ones who need our help most are the ones with handicaps, the ones who are sliding down * * * but the employers don't see it that way.

"Herr Marton, who has been filling in forms and interrogating since 7 a. m. looks tired and drawn, but he looks at me with a smile as we pack up our day's work as it gets dark, and says: 'I'm glad you've given me this to do. It's very worthwhile work. I don't think we shall do it in vain. We've got to get these people out of here * * * Some of them can be saved."

There is more, much more to this report, but I am not going to read any more. I wanted only to indicate the nature of our obligation * * * and the enormity of our failure thus far to contribute significantly to its solution.

Oh, Mr. Chairman, descriptions like this one should haunt our dreams and bedevil our consciences, until we do something about it.

Thanks in part—in very large part—to the hearings held by this subcommittee on the administration of the refugee relief program some weeks ago, which in turn were largely inspired by the Corsi incident—and I hope Mr. Corsi is going to testify on the legislative proposals now pending before you—national attention was focused on the failure of the refugee relief program.

As a result—and belatedly, if I must say so—President Eisenhower, just 2 weeks ago, sent a message to the Congress proposing certain amendments to the Refugee Relief Act. Even he admitted that "The purposes of the act are not being achieved as swiftly as we had all hoped." President Eisenhower said further in his message that "a number of the provisions of the act require amendment, if the act's objectives are to be fully achieved."

Mr. Chairman, I and other Senators, including members of this committee and Members of the House of Representatives, have been talking about the failure of this program for a long time. Regularly, for the last 18 months, we have been making speeches on the floor of Congress and elsewhere, warning against the collapse of the refugee program, decrying its frustration and urging its rescue, both by administrative improvement and by amendments to the law. Our voices were not much heeded in the past but now, at last, the President of the United States has taken cognizance of the situation, he has recognized it, and has proposed to the Congress a set of amendments to the Refugee Relief Act. He has also pledged that changes would be made—some of them have possibly already been made—in the administration of the act.

Let me say at this point that the amendments proposed by the President are, for the most part, sound ones. Some of them were proposed by Representative WALTER in the House early this year, and some by Representative CELLER. Other proposals for changes in the law, as contained in the President's message, are new and reflect both the experience of the administrators of this act, and a new-born anxiety on their part to make this program work. They know that they are going to be held to account before the bar of public opinion.

In any event, the President's proposals have been submitted to Congress and they have been introduced as S. 2113 by Senator WATKINS and others. The Watkins bill was introduced on May 31, just a week ago.

I introduced my set of amendments, S. 1794, on April 25, in association with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], and the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS]. I shall explain in some detail the purport of our proposals.

I want to say, however, that I have no pride of authorship in the language of our bill. I would be glad to have S. 1794 amended, where appropriate, by this subcommittee, on the basis of either the President's recommendations or the Langer bill, in order that the best bill possible may be reported to the Senate and acted upon by both the Senate and the House.

I shall append to my testimony a detailed comparison between the President's proposals and those contained in S. 1794. I want to say, however, that, in my judgment, the President's proposals do not go far enough in several major respects. I do not think that the Watkins bill, S. 2113, would fully accomplish what we all want to accomplish—and I am sure that the distinguished members of this subcommittee, including Mr. WATKINS, share with me a desire to make the refugee relief work. I have no doubt of that whatsoever. While the Watkins bill, in its present form, would certainly improve the act, it would not do the job altogether.

There are several provisions recommended by the President, however—and one especially—which are not included in my bill and which I think are very good indeed. I will mention one of these provisions particularly at this point.

I refer to section 3 of the Watkins bill, which amends section 4 of the Refugee Relief Act by authorizing the admission of up to 1,000 aliens who are members of family units eligible to enter the United States under the Refugee Relief Act but who would otherwise be prevented from entering on account of tuberculosis.

I think this feature of the Watkins bill is an excellent, a very humane and forward-looking one. If my bill is reported out by this committee, I hope it will be amended by adding to it section 3 of the Watkins bill. I commend the administration and Senator Watkins for having proposed it. I will refer to the other sound feature in the Watkins bill, not covered in my bill, later on in my remarks.

Mr. Chairman, before going into further detail about my bill or S. 2113, I would like to refer to my personal interest in this general subject. I have been concerned with the problem of American policy toward immigration—toward displaced persons and refugees—for many years—indeed, since World War I.

Even before I became a Government official, I took a very active part in the work of the Joint Distribution Committee, which, as most of you know, has played an important role as a voluntary agency in arranging for the immigration and resettlement of persons of the Jewish faith who have been subjected to persecution, or who have been uprooted and displaced by war and political unheaval.

When I became a public official of New York State, I took, of course, a special interest in what the Government was doing and should be doing about the problem. New York City is the place where most aliens and immigrants arrive. We have a higher percentage of naturalized citizens and of first-generation citizens in New York than in any other State in the Union. In my judgment, this has been a major factor, perhaps the most important single factor, in the tremendous growth and development of New York State, not only in population, but in industry, commerce and individual enterprise.

I would like to say at this point that I consider New York State to be in a way the most typical State in the Union in the sense that it represents in essence one of the basic ideas which have made America great—the idea of the melting pot.

It is natural, therefore, for New York State to have a special interest in the subject before us. And New York State has such an interest, I assure you.

I would also like to recall that I served for some years as Director-General of the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration—UNRRA. I was the first Director-General, and in that capacity I was responsible for the program to relieve the hunger and sufferings of millions of refugees and dislocated persons during and following World War II. We set up refugee camps all over Europe and the Middle East. We fed people by the millions. We arranged for their migration to other parts of the world which were ready to receive these displaced persons.

I have seen countless thousands of refugees with my own eyes. I think I know, to some extent, what it means to be a refugee. There is nothing more heartrending and more appealing to the humanitarian instincts in all of us, than the sight of a refugee camp.

So let us look at the legislation before us in human terms. It should not be just a matter of statistics, of visas issued, or aliens admitted. No, it should be a question of succoring hundreds and thousands of homeless persons—of persons who have gone through the hell of war and of displacement, of individuals who have survived slave labor camps and who have escaped from the unbelievable tyranny and indignity of Communist rule.

I would like to digress at this point from the subject of the refugee relief program and say a few words concerning our basic immigration and citizenship laws. To me the question of the refugee program is collateral to the more fundamental question of amending the McCarran-Walter Immigration and Naturalization Act. As you know, the refugee program must work within the framework of the restrictions and regulations of our basic immigration law. In my opinion, this is one of the reasons—not the only one, by any means—why the refugee program has not been more effective. I hope that we can make the refugee program work by amending it—and then get on with the major problem—that of amending our basic immigration laws.

There is one major administrative action which I believe must be taken to achieve the major purpose of the refugee program. The President and the Secretary of State can and should direct the responsible officials to turn the present cumbersome program into a "crash" program. Such a directive from the President would do a great deal to change the attitude of many of the officials connected with this program who have, until now, insisted that this legislation was merely permissive and really did not mean that refugees had to be admitted into the United States.

Yes, some changes in administrative attitude are necessary, if this program is to be snatched from the brink of failure. It is a fact that until the recent furor over the firing of Mr. Edward Corsi, no one in the administration seemed particularly concerned with the failure or success of the program.

Fortunately for our Nation, and for the refugees, Mr. Corsi had the courage to stand up and call attention to the failure of the program.

I do not know that in the last few weeks there has been an unusual flurry of activity on the part of the officials responsible for the operation of this program.

Mr. Chairman, one of the spokesmen for the administration who came before this committee some time ago and tried to explain the delays which have occurred in carrying out the operations of the Refugee Relief Act compared the processing of the applicants under the act as an automobile production line. The analogy with automobile production seems to come easily to the officials of this administration, for some reason or other.

It was explained that the slowness in issuing visas was due to the fact that it took time to establish a production line.

Mr. Chairman, I, for one, feel that this figure of speech, comparing the handling of human beings with the production of automobiles, was a most unfortunate one. Human beings are not automobiles and cannot be assembled or disassembled as such.

No, Mr. Chairman; I do not believe that there is or was any excuse for the roadblocks thrown in the way of this program by the negative attitude of those who were in charge of it. Their attitude was, in my judgment, completely unjustifiable.

I have taken note of the assurances which have recently been given me that this attitude, on the part of the administrators of this program, has changed, at least on the part of the top administrators, and that they are now determined to carry out the program in the spirit in which it was originally intended.

I am willing to accept these assurances at something less than their face value, but still to accept them and to hope for the best if the Congress decides, in its wisdom, to continue to vest the administration of this program in the same hands which have held it up to now.

Even the administrators of this program now concede that amendments are necessary to the act. A year ago they said that no amendments were necessary. Now the President proposes some amendments and those in charge of the administration of this program are urging the Congress to follow the President's recommendations. Their conversion is tardy—and has been costly to the United States. And who can say what the cost has been to the human beings who have been forced to endure so much longer the sufferings and privations which have been experienced by the refugees and escapees from behind the Iron Curtain. That cost cannot be measured. It can only be felt.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I come to the details of the legislation before us. I address myself to S. 1794, and also to the Watkins bill, S. 2113. As I said before, I have not had a chance to study the bill introduced by you Mr. Chairman, the Langer bill, S. 2149.

Comparing S. 1794 and S. 2113, Mr. Chairman, I would say that there are several good provisions in the Watkins bill which are not included in my bill. I have already referred to one of these, namely, section 3 of the Watkins bill, which authorizes the admission of 1,000 tubercular members of families otherwise eligible under the terms of the act.

There is also language in section 2 of the Watkins bill which permits members of family groups to follow rather than to accompany senior members of the family group who have been found eligible under the act and have been granted visas. Thus, under the terms of this provision, children, wives, and spouses could follow later, if for one reason or another they were not ready or not yet found eligible to accompany the member of the family who has been granted a visa under this program. There is no comparable provision in my bill. I strongly urge that the bill that is reported out include such a provision.

There is also a good provision in the Watkins bill which provides that the eligibility of the applicants under the refugee relief program shall be determined solely by the consular officer and shall not be subject to review by the immigration officer. This means that the consular officer will be given the authority to decide whether the applicant fulfills all the special requirements of the Refugee Relief Act, as distinct from the general requirements of the McCarran-Walter Act. Under the present Refugee Relief Act provisions, both the consular officer and the immigration officer have separate authority to determine whether an applicant is an eligible refugee or escapee. This has resulted in much confusion, delay, and contradiction between the rulings of the consular officer and the rulings of the immigration officer. I believe this is a very sound provision. There is no comparable provision in my bill.

Otherwise, and in general, Mr. Chairman, I believe my bill is broader and better in its terms, although there are a few provisions which are virtually identical in their effect. One such provision is in section 7 of my bill and section 10 of the Watkins bill, which would eliminate the present requirement of a 2-year security check on escapees and refugees—a provision which virtually defeats the whole purpose of the act and the program.

Under present law each applicant must provide documentation covering 2 years of his past life, showing everything that he has been doing during those 2 years, and that he is anti-Communist, among other things. For those who have just escaped from behind the Iron Curtain, this is an obvious impossibility, in all but rare cases. Both the Watkins bill and my bill recognize this fact and both bills would repeal this requirement which is found in subsection 11 (d).

The first major difference between the two bills is in the definitions. The Watkins bill relaxes somewhat the presently unworkable definition which requires an escapee also to be a refugee, under the very strict definition in section 2 (a) of the present law. My bill would combine the two definitions and eliminate entirely the term "escapee." I provide a simple, workable definition for "refugee," which would cover both refugees and escapees.

Under my amendment the term "refugee" would include persons who are displaced from their country of birth or nationality as a result of events prior, during, or subsequent to the outbreak of World War II, and as a result of present political conditions, fear of persecution, military operations, etc., are unable to return to their natural place of abode. This would cover both refugees and escapees. There is no reason to make a distinction between refugees and escapees. Any distinction is only cumbersome and contributes to delay and confusion in interpretation. I believe in this respect my bill is preferable to the Watkins bill.

In my bill the definition of expellee—those of German descent who were forced to flee when the Communists approached—is left the same as in present law. In the Watkins bill this definition is modified somewhat—in an obscure way, in my judgment. I do not understand the reason for it.

In both bills the requirement for a valid passport is eliminated, and this is a good thing. Many refugees and escapees cannot obtain passports. They are stateless. Obviously, it is difficult for an escapee to get a passport from the officials of the country from which he has fled. This has been a great source of difficulty in the administration of the program. Both bills relax this requirement.

There is a related requirement in present law which has also been a source of frustration, confusion, and delay, and that is the requirement for a certificate of readmission to the country from which he migrates for each individual who is admitted under the refugee relief program. This has required agreements with other countries and resulted in endless delay. Some countries will not give certificates of readmission. My bill eliminates this requirement. The Watkins bill also eliminates it, but not quite as plainly, in my judgment, as S. 1794.

S. 1794 increases the quota for refugees now residing in North Atlantic Treaty countries by 15,000 and adds Spain and North Africa to the list of countries from which such refugees are eligible to be admitted into the United States. There are a number of Yugoslav refugees in Spain and a number of refugees of assorted national origins in North Africa whom we should surely include in the refugee program. They are as needy and as deserving as the others in the same group. This change is found in section 2 of S. 1794, amending paragraph 3 of section 3 (a) of the present law.

My bill would strike out the word "ethnic" wherever it appears in the bill, except in the definition of German expellees. I believe that this is an odious term, at best. It has no use and no place in those parts of the bill, other than in section 2 (c) of the act, in connection with German expellees. The term is repugnant to our national concepts. It should be eliminated. It serves no purpose but to obstruct and delay this program.

My bill would raise the age of eligible orphans from 10 to 14. There is no real reason to limit the definition of orphans to children of 10 years or under. All the responsible voluntary organizations working in this field are agreed on this fact. An orphan is just as appealing, just as desirable, and just as adaptable to the United States at the age of 14 as at the age of 10. The Watkins bill raises the age limit to 12.

It has been brought to my attention that there may be some difficulty in raising the age limit to 14 because of the requirement, by regulation, that persons of 14 years of age or older must undergo full security clearance. Setting the age limit at 13 years would obviate this difficulty. I am sure the committee will act justly in this regard.

My bill also repeals outright section 12 of the present act, a section which sets up a completely unworkable system or priorities for the issuance of visas. As far as I can learn, nobody has been able to understand thoroughly what Congress meant by section 12. This provision has been ineffective and it has caused delay and confusion without any constructive benefits for the United States or for the program. I propose the outright elimination of this section. I think it would speed things up considerably.

The provisions of both the Watkins bill and S. 1794 are similar in their effect in the important matter of agency assurances. The present act prohibits the use of agency assurances. This has been one of the chief barriers to the orderly operation of this program. The voluntary agencies have been ready, willing, and anxious to cooperate with this program and to help make it a success, but they have been severely handicapped in doing so by the language of this act—and by the administrative interpretation of it—which has prevented the voluntary agencies from providing the assurances and from assuming the responsibility for placing these immigrants in suitable housing and jobs.

There has been very bitter feeling about this provision and I believe it should be repealed and agency assurances should be accepted. These agencies are fine, upright, and reputable organizations. They did a marvelous job with the displaced-persons program. They can be trusted to perform similarly with the refugee relief program. The agency assurances worked with the displaced-persons program—and they will work with the refugee relief program.

The provision covering this matter in S. 1794, namely, section 6 (a) is, in my judgment, preferable to that in the Watkins bill.

Both bills have a provision relaxing present restrictions for individuals already in the United States who qualify under the terms of the Refugee Relief Act. The Watkins bill increases the number who will be so eligible from 5,000 to 10,000. I strongly approve of this increase in the number. It is not included in my bill.

Both bills relax the present requirement that an alien, to be eligible to have his status adjusted, must have entered the United States legally. I propose to eliminate that requirement, presuming that the alien has conducted himself in a proper manner while he has been in the United States, and has otherwise conformed to the requirements of admission as a legally resident alien. The Watkins bill would specifically authorize the Attorney General to waive this requirement in cases where he finds such a waiver justified. My bill would accomplish the same purpose and in a simpler way. In the case of both bills the Attorney General would be required to rule on whether the alien in question should, in fact, be considered a suitable person to have his status adjusted.

Finally, we come to two major differences—the most vital differences—between S. 1794 and the Watkins bill, S. 2113.

These two differences pertain in the first place to the administrative setup, and in the second place to the use of unused visa numbers under the program.

My bill proposes that the present provision of the law dealing with the administration of the program—a legislative monstrosity, in my judgment—be changed to make the Administrator of the program responsible directly to the Secretary of State and only to him, and to free the Administrator from subservience to any bureau in the State Department.

At the present time, under the present law, it is required that the Administrator be the Director of the Bureau of Security and Consular Affairs—an incredible confusion of functions. The Director of the Bureau of Security and Consular Affairs has enough to do. His is a police and review function. The Administrator of the refugee program should have no other job and no other responsibility. His is a humanitarian mission, not a police function.

I strongly urge upon this subcommittee the approval of my section 10, which sets up the Administrator of this program in direct line of responsibility to the Secretary of State. The President or the Secretary of State can redesignate the present Administrator, if they so desire. That is their responsibility. But the administration of this program should not be tied to the Bureau of Security and Consular Affairs.

I challenge anyone who believes in sound governmental and administrative principles to justify such an association.

I don't want to interfere with the orderly progress of the program. I can see that it would require quite a readjustment to break in a new Administrator in the middle of the program. But I think that this provision of my bill should be adopted. I am sure that the President of the United States will do what is necessary to keep the program going without interruption or delay. I think this change in the law will greatly accelerate the program.

Finally, Mr. President, my bill envisions, as the Watkins bill does too, the strong probability that many of the visa numbers in some of the categories established under section 4 of the present law will not be used up. I would hope this would not be true, but it is most likely to prove true. My bill would extend the life of the program until 1960 and provide that persons eligible under the act can be admitted until 1960.

My bill provides for the reallocation of unused visas among those groups which have the greatest need for visas.

In those categories under section 4 where there are long lists of applications which cannot be granted, the unused visa numbers would be distributed among the various categories in section 4 in proportion to the numbers of applications which have been filed and which have not been acted upon, due to the exhaustion of available numbers in those categories.

The Watkins bill would make these unused numbers available for a worldwide orphan pool. I do not think that such a pool would use up the unused numbers, nor do I think that this is especially the way to handle the orphan problem.

I want to point out, Mr. Chairman, that President Eisenhower, in his message to the Congress, referred to the need for a provision for the use of unused numbers. He did not recommend the worldwide orphan pool as the only solution to this problem. He suggested it merely as an example of what might be done with the unused numbers. I refer you to the text of his message, the pertinent sentences from which I quote:

"I recommend that there be a provision for the use of unused numbers. Such unused numbers might well be used, for example, for orphans on a worldwide basis * * *."

The Watkins provision on this subject is not necessarily the last word on this matter, even as far as the President of the United States is concerned.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have completed my summary of the differences and similarities between the two bills. I am going to submit for the record a detailed comparison between the two bills and a detailed analysis and justification for each provision of my bill.

I ask your permission, Mr. Chairman, that these two documents appear in the record at the completion of my remarks, to be made available to all the members of this subcommittee. I will file them subsequently.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like for a moment in conclusion to refer to the experience we had with the displaced persons program.

When the displaced persons program was launched in 1948, there was no staff. The displaced persons program was organized as an independent governmental agency, faced with the vast problem of creating a completely new organization. But with all these handicaps, and with a law which in many aspects was even more unworkable than the present refugee law, the record of the displaced persons program in bringing refugees to our country is so far superior to that under the refugee relief program and it defies comparison.

The Displaced Persons Commission worked out many of the techniques which have been followed by the Administrator under the present act. The Refugee Relief Administrator has belatedly followed the precedent established in the displaced persons program of stimulating the organization of State commissions to aid in the resettlement of the newly arrived immigrants. Under the displaced persons program there were 36 such State commissions. I would point out that these commissions were started 1 week after the displaced persons program got under way One year went by after the passage of the Refugee Relief Act before President Eisenhower wrote to the governors of the States requesting similar commissions to be created.

Under the displaced persons program 4,182 orphans were brought to the United States. The Displaced Persons Commission pioneered in working out arrangements with welfare agencies in the United States and with the various European governments to expedite and safeguard the adoption of these orphans. It is my information that the experience of the Displaced Persons Commission in this field has greatly aided the orphan program under the Refugee Relief Act.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, for the record, I would like to correct a serious error which has cropped up at various times in discussions of the comparison between the displaced persons program and the refugee program. This error relates to the thoroughness of the security checks utilized by the Displaced Persons Commission. Individuals under the displaced persons program were checked by the following governmental security agencies—the FBI, the CIA, the CIC, the CID, the Provost Marshall's office of the Army, the DP investigative staff, the Consul's investigative staff, and the investigative staff of the Immigration and Naturalization Service. Certainly the security program under the Refugee Relief Act could hardly be more thorough.

In light of these facts it is appalling to me that in terms of comparative length of operations under the displaced persons program and the Refugee Relief Act, 152,528 visas were issued under the displaced persons program after 20 months of operation while over a similar period, only 34,810 visas have been issued under the Refugee Relief Act.

Mr. Chairman, I hope I have not belabored this point too much. I hope I have not spent too much time reciting the past failures of the program. I had not intended to deal disproportionately with the mistakes of the past, which are, of course, irretrievable.

Now we face the problem of rescuing this program, of salvaging it, and of making the best we can of it.

I assume that this subcommittee will report out some kind of a bill. I am sure that this is your purpose. I am sure that from all the proposals that have been made, a very constructive bill can be put together. I hope this will be done by appropriate changes in S. 1794.

My purpose in appearing here, however, is not only to explain my bill, but to appeal to you to speed action on a set of amendments to revise the Refugee Relief Act in a way that will permit the refugee program to be carried forward to completion and to make it truly possible for the authorized number of refugees, escapees, and relatives to be admitted into this country.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR LEHMAN

The Refugee Relief Act is due to expire at the end of this year. Under present operations, there will be remaining some 40,000 unused visas authorized under the terms of this act. It is my firm belief that the expiration date of the act should be extended, and amendments adopted which will make the act more effective and its administration more liberal.

The amendment which I am proposing would authorize a reallocation of the Refugee Relief Act visas which remain unused on December 31, 1956, and would make certain additional benefits available for orphans, similar to the provisions in S. 3570.

My substitute would redefine the term "refugee" to broaden it to include persons who are displaced from their country of birth or nationality as a result of events prior, during, or subsequent to the outbreak of World War II. It is also designed to broaden the term "refugee" to include the term "escapee" in order that the program can more fully work to help those escapees from behind the Iron Curtain—the group which has benefited least from this act.

Let us recall that this act is entitled "The Refugee Relief Act of 1953." The message from the President recommending this program described at length the plight of those who had escaped from behind the Iron Curtain—of those who had been driven from their homes by war and disaster. That was the keynote of this program.

Unfortunately, the program has not worked to help escapees and refugees, but in its original form, and as a result of subsequent amendment, it has become primarily a bill for the relief of relatives of American citizens.

I am in favor of the reunification of American families, and the bringing together of relatives. I am also for assisting refugees and escapees under the terms of this act. It is for this reason that I feel that the proposed amendments should be adopted.

Hearings have been held on a bill containing the proposals now before the Senate in the form of the pending amendment. The Judiciary Committee has seen fit to recommend in S. 3570 proposals to assist in bringing orphans to the United States. I am for this bill and its provisions are incorporated in the substitute which I am proposing.

I hope that the amendments which I have proposed will be adopted. Many organizations throughout the Nation have wired and sent letters to Members of the Congress in recent weeks urging that there be an extension of the Refugee Relief Act, and a revision of some of its harsher terms.

I firmly believe that the American people support the full authorization to admit the 209,000 refugees under this act. Additional time is needed to accomplish this stated legislative purpose, and to complete the cases presently in the pipeline of the administration of the act.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I shall not press for the consideration of this amendment at this time because I understand that some of the basic provisions of my amendment are contained in another amendment to another bill which is soon to be called up by the leadership.

At the time when that bill is called up, I may have a few words to say about it. In the meantime, since I understand that some of the fundamental purposes sought by my amendment have been included in a proposal which the leadership is going to offer, I withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from New York is withdrawn.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time; and I understand that the amendment of the Senator from New York has been withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from New York has been withdrawn.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12350) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1957, and for other purposes; agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. CANNON, Mr. KIRWAN, Mr. GARY, Mr. TABER, and Mr. PHILLIPS were appointed managers on the part of the House at the further conference.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 1140. An act for the relief of the Southwest Research Institute;

H. R. 6185. An act for the relief of the E. B. Kaiser Co.;

H. R. 7824. An act for the relief of Goon Shee (Goon Ju Hai);

H. R. 9384. An act for the relief of Evelyn Albi;

H. R. 9579. An act for the relief of Nicola Marcello;

H. R. 9640. An act to require the Secretary of Agriculture to release certain restrictions on the real property heretofore conveyed to the West Marks Baptist Church of Quitman County, Miss.;

H. R. 9679. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Army to dispose of a certain parcel of land, a part of Fort Belvoir Accotink Dam site military reservation;

H. R. 10622. An act to amend section 2011 (c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 and section 813 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939;

H. R. 11515. An act to amend section 7 of the Administrative Expenses Act of 1946, as amended, to provide for the payment of travel and transportation cost for persons selected for appointment to certain positions in the continental United States and Alaska and for other purposes;

H. R. 11709. An act to amend Public Law 506, 84th Congress, 2d session, to increase the authorization for appropriations to the Atomic Energy Commission for acquisition or condemnation of real property or any facilities, or for plant or facility acquisition, construction, or expansion, and for other purposes;

H. R. 11720. An act creating the city of Saint Francisville Bridge Commission, defining the authority, power, and duties of said commission; and authorizing the commission and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Wabash River at or near Saint Francisville, Ill., and Knox County, Ind., to purchase and operate a ferry at such location, and for other purposes;

H. R. 12006. An act to provide for the reconveyance of certain lands in the Benbrook Reservoir project, Texas, to former owners of such lands where such lands are not required for public purposes, including public recreational use; and

H. J. Res. 685. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to sell certain warbuilt vessels.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 218. An act for the relief of the town of Clayton, N. Mex.;

S. 898. An act to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, with respect to the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission to regulate the use by motor carriers (under leases, contracts, or other arrangements) of motor vehicles not owned by them, in the furnishing of transportation of property;

S. 985. An act to establish an Alaska International Rail and Highway Commission;

S. 1135. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to establish Civil Air Patrol as a civilian auxiliary of the United States Air Force and to authorize the Secretary of the Air Force to extend aid to Civil Air Patrol in fulfillment of its objectives, and for other purposes";

S. 1456. An act to amend sections 212, 219 (a), 221 (a), and 410 (a) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended;

S. 1637. An act to extend the time limit within which awards of certain military and naval decorations may be made;

IMMIGRATION VISAS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2249.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 6888) to amend the Act of September 3, 1954.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6888) to amend the Act of September 3, 1954, which has been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 3 (a) of the act of September 3, 1954 (68 Stat. 1145), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. (a) There shall not be issued more than 385 special nonquota immigrant visas under this act; except that there may be issued not more than an additional 350 such special nonquota immigrant visas during a period beginning on the effective date of this act, as amended, and ending July 1, 1957: Provided, That special nonquota immigrant visas, without regard to the numerical limitations of this section, shall be issued to the wives and minor, unmarried children of the aliens who are found eligible for special nonquota immigrant visas under the provisions of this act or who were admitted under the provisions of the act of June 30, 1950 (64 Stat. 306), or the act of April 9, 1952 (66 Stat. 50), if they are accompanying or following to join such aliens, and are otherwise eligible to receive immigrant visas and admissible to the United States under the Immigration and Nationality Act: Provided further, That the marriage is found to have occurred prior to July 1, 1955."

SEC. 2. A new section 5 is hereby added to the act of September 3, 1954 (68 Stat. 1145), to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. The quota deductions required under the provisions of the Act of June 30, 1950 (64 Stat. 306), and the Act of April 9, 1952 (66 Stat. 50), are terminated, effective July 1, 1955."

SEC. 3. A new section 6 is hereby added to the act of September 3, 1954 (68 Stat. 1145), to read as follows:

"SEC. 6. The provisions of law relating to the deportation of aliens on the ground that they were excludable at the time of entry as aliens who had obtained visas by fraud or misrepresentation or as aliens who were not of the nationality specified in their visas shall not apply to an otherwise admissible alien, admitted to the United States between December 22, 1945, and November 1, 1954, both dates inclusive, who misrepresented his place of birth, identity, or residence in applying for a visa if such alien shall establish to the satisfaction of the Attorney General that the misrepresentation (a) was predicated upon the fact that the alien had reasonable grounds to fear repatriation to his former residence or homeland where he would be persecuted because of race, religion, or political opinions, and (b) was not committed for the purpose of evading the quota restrictions of the immigration laws or an investigation of the alien at the place of his former residence or elsewhere."

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. We have a unanimous-consent agreement in regard to the consideration of this measure; and I should like to inquire how much time is allotted on amendments to the bill. Are 30 minutes allotted to each side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous consent agreement, 1 hour is available on each amendment, and 2 hours are available on the bill—to be equally divided.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the distinguished majority leader yield to me?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, if I may yield now to the Senator from Illinois, then I shall yield again to the Senator from New York.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the pending bill. The amendment is offered on behalf of myself, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CLEMENTS], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BUSH].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I should like to ascertain the parliamentary situation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will permit me to yield to one Senator at a time, no Senator will have to wait more than 30 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois desire to have the amendment printed in the RECORD, instead of having it read at this time?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment in the nature of a substitute will be printed at this point in the RECORD.

The amendment submitted by Mr. DIRKSEN (for himself, Mr. CLEMENTS, and Mr. BUSH) is as follows:

AMENDMENT PROPOSED BY MR. DIRKSEN, ON BEHALF OF HIMSELF, MR. CLEMENTS, AND MR. BUSH, TO THE BILL H. R. 6888, AMENDING THE ACT OF SEPTEMBER 3, 1954

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 (a) of the act of September 3, 1954 (68 Stat. 1145), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 3. (a) There shall not be issued more than 385 special nonquota immigrant visas under this act; except that there may be issued not more than an additional 350 such special nonquota immigrant visas during a period beginning on the effective date of this act, as amended, and ending June 30, 1957: Provided, That special nonquota immigrant visas, without regard to the numerical limitations of this section, may be issued to the wives and children of the aliens who are found eligible for special nonquota immigrant visas under the provisions of this act or who were admitted under the provisions of the act of June 30, 1950 (64 Stat. 306) or the act of April 9, 1952 (66 Stat. 50) if they are accompanying or following to join such aliens, and are otherwise eligible to receive immigrant visas under the Immigration and Nationality Act: Provided further, That the marriage is found to have occurred prior to the effective date of this act.'

"SEC. 2. Section 4 of the act of September 3, 1954 (68 Stat. 1145), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 4. An alien shall not be ineligible to receive a visa and excludable from admission into the United States under the provisions of section 212 (a) (9) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (66 Stat. 182) (a) solely by reason of a single conviction of an offense or offenses each of which, if committed in the United States, would be a misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment not to exceed 1 year, and for which the aggregate penalty actually imposed was imprisonment not to exceed 6 months or a fine not to exceed $500, or both; or (b) solely by reason of the admission of the commission of an offense or offenses or the commission of acts constituting the essential elements of an offense or offenses each of which, if committed in the United States, would be a misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment not to exceed 1 year: Provided, That the determination whether an offense or offenses committed outside the United States would, if committed in the United States, be classifiable as a misdemeanor or misdemeanors punishable by imprisonment not to exceed 1 year shall be based not on the applicable foreign law but on the provisions of the United States Code, and whenever such code fails to define an offense or offenses comparable to those committed, on the provisions of the criminal code of the District of Columbia: Provided, however, That no alien who was convicted of more than one offense or has admitted the commission of more than one offense or the commission of acts constituting the essential elements of more than one offense shall be eligible to receive a visa and admissible to the United States unless in the opinion of the consular officer at the time of application for a visa, and in the opinion of the Attorney General at the time of application for admission, the entry of such alien into the United States would not be contrary to the public interest.'

"SEC. 3. A new section 5 is hereby added to the act of September 3, 1954 (66 Stat. 1145), to read as follows:

"'SEC. 5. On and after July 1, 1956, the quotas proclaimed under the Immigration and Nationality Act shall not be subject to the provisions of the act of June 25, 1948, as amended (62 Stat. 1009; 64 Stat. 219; 65 Stat. 96) or Sec. 201 (e) (2) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (66 Stat. 176), or of the Act of June 30, 1950 (64 Stat. 306), or the act of April 9, 1952 (66 Stat. 50).'

"SEC. 4. A new section 6 is hereby added to the act of September 3, 1954 (68 Stat. 1145), to read as follows:

"'SEC. 6. The provisions of law relating to the deportation of aliens on the ground that they were excludable at the time of entry as aliens who had obtained visas by fraud or misrepresentation or as aliens who were not of the nationality specified in their visas shall not apply to an otherwise admissible alien, admitted to the United States between December 22, 1945, and November 1, 1954, both dates inclusive, who misrepresented his place of birth, identity, or residence in applying for a visa if such alien shall establish to the satisfaction of the Attorney General that the misrepresentation (a) was predicated upon the fact that the alien had reasonable grounds to fear repatriation to his former residence or homeland where he would be persecuted because of race, religion, or political opinions, and (b) was not committed for the purpose of evading the quota restrictions of immigration laws or an investigation of the alien at the place of his former residence or elsewhere.'

"SEC. 5. (a) Notwithstanding any provisions of the Immigration and Nationality Act (66 Stat. 163), the total of all quota numbers established under section 201 of that act (66 Stat. 175) which remain unused at the end of each fiscal year shall be distributed among the several quota areas in the proportion which the quota for each quota area bears to the annual quota of all quota areas combined.

"(b) No quota numbers distributed under subsection (a) of this section shall be distributed to quota areas which, under the proclamation of the President of the United States issued on July 1, 1952, have been allocated an annual quota in excess of 7,000 quota numbers.

"(c) The Secretary of State shall, at the end of each fiscal year, determine the amount of quota numbers available for distribution under subsection (a) of this section for each quota area. The Secretary of State shall proclaim the number thereof on or before October 1 following the end of each fiscal year. The quota numbers so determined and proclaimed by the Secretary of State shall be available for use in accordance with all the provisions of the Immigration and Nationality Act (66 Stat. 163) relative to the eligibility for and the issuance of immigrant visas during the ensuing 12-month period, beginning October 1, and ending September 30, of the year immediately following.

"SEC. 6. The Secretary of State and the Attorney General are hereby authorized, in their discretion and on a basis of reciprocity, pursuant to such regulations as they may severally prescribe, to waive the requirement of fingerprinting specified in sections 221 (b) and 262 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (66 Stat. 191, 224), respectively, in the case of any nonimmigrant alien.

"SEC. 7. A new section 8 is hereby added to the act of September 3, 1954 (67 Stat. 1145), to read as follows:

"'SEC. 8. Not more than 1,200 aliens who are otherwise eligible to receive visas and admissible under the Immigration and Nationality Act may be issued visas and be admitted to the United States. Irrespective of the fact that they are found ineligible to receive visas or inadmissible to the United States under section 212 (a) (6) of that act as far as it relates to aliens afflicted with tuberculosis: Provided, That the admission of each such alien shall be under such conditions and controls which the Attorney General, after consultation with the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare may deem necessary to impose and that in the case of each such alien a suitable and proper bond or undertaking, approved by the Attorney General, be deposited as prescribed by section 213 of the said act: Provided further, That such alien is the spouse, child, or adopted child of a United States citizen, or is a member of a family unit consisting of persons previously admitted to the United States for permanent residence, or qualified applicants for visas under the provisions of section 5 (b) of this act or the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended (67 Stat. 100; 68 Stat. 1044).'

"SEC. 8. Section 323 of the Immigration and Nationality Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"'(c) Any such adopted child (1) one of whose adoptive parents is (A) a citizen of the United States, (B) in the employment of the Government of the United States, or of an American institution of research recognized as such by the Attorney General, or of an American firm or corporation engaged in whole or in part in the development of foreign trade and commerce of the United States, or a subsidiary thereof, or of a public international organization in which the United States participates by treaty or statute, or of a religious denomination having a bona fide organization with the United States, and (C) regularly stationed abroad in such employment, and (2) who is in the United States at the time of naturalization, and (3) whose citizen adoptive parent declares before the naturalization court in good faith an intention to have such child take up residence within the United States immediately upon the termination of such employment abroad of such citizen adoptive parent, may be naturalized upon compliance with all the requirements of the naturalization laws except that no prior residence or specified period of physical presence within the United States or within the jurisdiction of the naturalization court or proof thereof shall be required.'

"SEC. 9. (a) Section 5 (a) of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended, is amended (1) by striking out '4,000' and inserting in lieu thereof '9,000,' and (2) by striking out '10 years' and inserting in lieu thereof '14 years.'

"(b) Section 5 of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"'(d) Any visa issued under this section to any eligible orphan who has been lawfully adopted abroad by a United States citizen and spouse while such citizen is serving abroad in the United States Armed Forces, or is employed abroad by the United States Government, or is temporarily abroad on business, shall be valid until such time as the adoptive citizen parent returns to the United States in due course of his service or business.'

"SEC. 10. Section 101 (b) (1) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (66 Stat. 171; 8 U. S. C. 1101 (b) (1)) is hereby amended by adding an additional subparagraph reading as follows:

"'(D) an illegitimate child, by, through whom, or on whose behalf a status, privilege or benefit is sought by virtue of the relationship of the child to its natural mother.'

"SEC. 11. Section 203 (a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (66 Stat. 178; 8 U. S. C. 1153) is amended by striking the last word of paragraph 1 of said subsection and inserting in lieu thereof, the following: 'or following to join him.'

"SEC. 12. (a) Special nonquota immigrant visas allotted for issuance to aliens specified in sections 2, 4, and 5 of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended (67 Stat. 400; 68 Stat. 1044), which remain unissued on January 1, 1957, may be issued to such aliens by consular officers as defined in section 101 (a) (9) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (66 Stat. 167), within the numerical limitations prescribed in each of the several paragraphs of section 4 and in section 5 (a) of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended, except that geographical limitations pertaining to residence of such aliens and to the place of issuance of visas as such limitations appear in paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 4 (a) of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended, shall not apply to the aliens specified therein: Provided, That such alien is found to be eligible to be issued an immigrant visa and to be admitted to the United States under the provisions of the Immigration and Nationality Act: Provided further, That all special nonquota immigrant visas authorized to be issued under this act, shall be issued in accordance with the provisions of section 221 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (66 Stat. 191): And provided further, That a quota number is not available to such alien at the time of his application for a visa.

"(b) Nothing in this act shall be held to extend the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended (66 Stat. 174; 68 Stat. 1044), and nothing in this act shall be held to authorize the issuance of special nonquota immigrant visas in excess of the number provided in section 3 of that act.

"(c) Aliens receiving visas under this act shall be exempt from paying the fees prescribed in paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 281 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (66 Stat. 230).

"SEC. 13. Notwithstanding any other provision of law—

"(a) any alien admitted to the United States as a nonimmigrant under the provisions of either section 101 (a) (15) (A) or 101 (a) (15) (G) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, who has failed to maintain a status under either of those provisions, and who has not been required to depart from the United States under the authority of section 241 (e) of said act, may apply to the Attorney General for adjustment of his status to that of an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence.

"(b) if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Attorney General that the alien is a person of good moral character, and that such action would not be contrary to the national welfare, safety, or security, the Attorney General, in his discretion, may record the alien's lawful admission for permanent residence as of the date of the order of the Attorney General approving the application for adjustment of status is made.

"(c) a complete and detailed statement of the facts and pertinent provisions of law in the case shall be reported to the Congress with the reasons for such adjustment of status. Such reports shall be submitted on the 1st and 15th day of each calendar month in which Congress is in session. If, during the session of the Congress at which a case is reported, or prior to the close of the session of Congress next following the session at which a case is reported, either the Senate or the House of Representatives passes a resolution stating in substance that it does not favor the adjustment of status of such alien, the Attorney General shall thereupon require the departure of such alien in the manner provided by law. If neither the Senate nor the House of Representatives passes such a resolution within the time above specified, the Secretary of State shall, if the alien was classifiable as a quota immigrant at the time of his entry, reduce by one the quota of the quota area to which the alien is chargeable under section 202 of the Immigration and Nationality Act for the fiscal year then current or the next following year in which a quota is available. No quota shall be so reduced by more than 50 percent in any fiscal year.

"(d) the definitions in section 101 (a) and (b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (66 Stat. 166, 171; 8 U. S. C. 1101 (a) and (b)), shall be applicable in the administration of this section.

"Amend the title so as to read: 'An act to amend the act of September 3, 1954, and for other purposes.'"

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, is the Senate now considering House bill 6888?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, the majority leader speaks in a rather low voice, and it was difficult to hear.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, this is the situation. We are considering Calendar No. 2249, H. R. 6888. Furthermore, there is at the desk the unanimous-consent agreement, which has been entered into, regarding the consideration of House bill 6888. In addition, the Senator from Illinois has offered an amendment in the nature of a substitute to House bill 6888. We have a unanimous-consent agreement regarding consideration of the bill, namely, 30 minutes to each side on each amendment or motion, and 1 hour to each side on the bill. Is not that correct, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I understand that the distinguished minority leader, the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], will control the time in opposition to the amendment; and the Senator from Texas will control the time available to those who favor the amendment, inasmuch as the Senator from Texas favors the amendment. Is not that correct, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, there are on the calendar two bills dealing with this subject matter, one of which was introduced by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER]. That bill contains two provisions, one relating to orphans, and the other relating to misrepresentation cases. That bill was pending; and it was to that bill that the Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN] submitted his 200-page amendment and also another amendment.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield for a question?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. Has the amendment the Senator from Illinois submitted been printed?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No; it is in mimeographed form.

Mr. EASTLAND. In other words, it is something cooked up, and not even printed, and not given committee consideration, but just offered on the last day, here on the floor; is that correct?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I shall comment on that in a moment, Mr. President.

Mr. EASTLAND. Very well.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, there is another measure dealing with this subject matter, namely, House bill 6888, which is commonly known as the sheepherders bill. When that bill was passed by the House of Representatives some time ago, it contained not only a provision with respect to an increase in the number of nonquota sheepherders and their wives and children, but also quite a number of amendments to the Refugee Act and the Nationality Act. That is the bill the majority leader has called up at this time; and to that bill I have offered the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The substitute embraces both of the provisions of the bill of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], which has been laid aside. The substitute also embraces both of the provisions of House bill 6888; and, in addition, there are some other provisions which I shall undertake to explain.

By way of prelude, let me say that I am not insensible to the fact that this whole immigration problem is highly controversial, and that the cleavages are sharp, indeed. I was not the initiator of this effort; it has been going on for some time.

There have been quite a number of conferences, both formal and informal, with respect to some kind of an immigration bill.

Mr. President, I am a realist; and I am sensible of the fact that there are certain things the House of Representatives will accept, and there are certain things the House of Representatives will not accept. So the question is, Should we, in our efforts to get a whole loaf, finally reject any bread if we can get it?

Mr. President, I shall not let the figures stand in the way. I know that an argument can be made on figures on the Nationality Act and on the Refugee Relief Act. But I am also sensible of the fact that there are some human values involved, and I wish to be helpful, if I can.

The distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS] has at one time or another offered the President's program. I have grave doubt—and I think others have grave doubt—that that program can at this session, and ostensibly on the last day, be consummated.

So the substitute now before us is the work which has been done by quite a number of persons. I sat in on some of the conferences; the Senator from Utah sat in; the distinguished Senator from Mississippi sat in.

Mr. EASTLAND. Yes. Let us get the facts on that matter. It was the day before yesterday, was it not?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; I think it was.

Mr. EASTLAND. That is right.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I brought up the matter on one or two occasions in the Senate Judiciary Committee, and I had some doubts that any action would be taken on any matter relating to immigration.

But, as I have indicated, in view of the difficulties of the bills which have been reported by the House committee and by the Senate committee, the desire to have some legislation in this field enacted, in order to meet certain emergency situations, is finally reflected in the substitute which now is before the Senate.

The substitute contains 13 sections. Let me see whether I can, within brief compass, explain each one of the sections.

The first section of the substitute is the sheepherder section. It would add an additional 350 nonquota numbers for sheepherders, and then also would make provision for their wives and children.

Mr. President, I know nothing about sheepherders. I understand that the Basques, who are identified here, are excellent sheepherders; and the people from the Western States have made clamor, month in and month out, that something be done to ease the restrictions, so that an additional number of these experienced, professional sheepherders can be brought into the country.

Section 2 is commonly referred to as the "loaf of bread" section. That simply means this: What is a felony in a foreign country might be a misdemeanor here. But if it is a felony under foreign law, it would preclude anyone from coming into the United States. This section provides that the case shall be decided on the basis of what our law defines as a felony or a misdemeanor; and if there has been a misdemeanor, such as a traffic violation, it would not stand in the way of issuance of a visa to someone who might make application in a foreign country.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I would rather continue this description. When I conclude it I shall be glad to yield. I wish to describe the various sections.

Mr. THYE. My observation relates to the question of the "loaf of bread." I thought I could make a contribution which would clinch the argument.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am delighted to yield.

Mr. THYE. There was a case in which a displaced person was refused entry into the United States. She was qualified in every other respect, except that she had been known to take a loaf of bread when her babies were starving, and because of that fact of taking a loaf of bread she was denied the right to enter the United States. That is what is meant by the "loaf of bread" section.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is entirely correct, and eloquently expressed. There may have been occasions when there were two misdemeanors under our law, but this section provides that the American consul and the Attorney General shall determine, in such cases, whether the applicant may come into the country.

The third section of the amendment is the one which lifts the mortgages on the quotas under the Displaced Persons Act. When the Displaced Persons Act was passed a number of years ago it provided that one-half the quotas of the countries affected should be mortgaged, so that the number who came in would be charged to the quota. The net result was that the Greek quota under the Displaced Persons Act was mortgaged up to the year 2017. The Lithuanian quota was mortgaged up to the year 2090. The Latvian quota was mortgaged up to the year 2274.

Section 3 simply lifts that mortgage. Its net effect would be that an additional 8,000 quota numbers would be available.

The fourth section is what is known as the misrepresentation section.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. The Senator means 8,000 a year, does he not?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is correct.

The fourth section deals with the cases of misrepresentation. Certain persons got into this country, perhaps as refugees, escapees, expellees, or displaced persons, and then it was discovered that they had falsified the data in connection with their passports in order that they might not be sent back to a country or an area where they would be under persecution. There are a good many thousands of such people here, and they are subject to deportation.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. The Senator stated that the Senator from Mississippi was in conference with respect to this amendment day before yesterday.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is correct.

Mr. EASTLAND. The fact is that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] and the Senator from Mississippi were called in and shown, for the first time, this substitute, and we were informed that it would be offered as an amendment to the sheepherders' bill. We were not conferred with. We were not asked what our opinion was. There was no negotiation. We were simply called in and notified of what was to be done. Is not that correct?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think so. I was in the same situation. That was the first time I saw the amendment. I think we can call those meetings conferences. There was no negotiation. It was all done on a very informal basis. I am in the same position as is my distinguished friend from Mississippi.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Speaking of conferences, is it not a fact that the items in the substitute were discussed by Members on both sides of the aisle, not merely for 2 days, but discussed informally over a period of weeks?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes. As a matter of fact, I so advised the Judiciary Committee one morning, after I had left the Appropriations Committee. I advised the committee that there was under consideration something in the nature of an omnibus bill, which would include a good many of these emergent provisions.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. What the Senator informed the committee was that a bill would be agreed to by the chairman of our Subcommittee on Immigration and by the Judiciary Committee. Is that correct?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not know whether or not the Senator from Illinois was guilty of an inadvertence at that time in his rather feeble choice of language. But I did say that there were discussions in progress, in the hope that some kind of an agreement could be arrived at.

Mr. EASTLAND. I want the RECORD to show that the Senator from Mississippi has never agreed to this proposal, and has never been consulted about the wisdom of it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think that is correct. I never consulted him about it. If others did, that is something that would not be known to me.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. CLEMENTS. In order that the RECORD may be clear, is it not a fact that these discussions have been going on all during the 84th Congress, in an effort to arrive at some sound basis on which agreement could be reached, to clarify the law and remove some of the inequities which exist in the present immigration law?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think that is correct. It is only a good-will effort on the part of everyone to try to find something on which we can agree. If we cannot agree here, or if there can be no agreement as between the House and Senate, obviously nothing will be consummated.

Section 5 relates to the redistribution——

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. BUSH. The Senator was discussing section 4. I do not think he quite finished his description.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Section 4 relates to cases of misrepresentation. In every such case, in which documents and data are misrepresented, the Attorney General must be satisfied.

Section 5 deals with redistribution. It deals with the unused quota numbers at the end of the fiscal year, under the Nationality Act. It applies to those countries whose quotas are less than 7,000 a year.

The total number involved here would be, roughly, 18,224. There is no mystery about that number. It is arrived at in the following manner:

In the year 1955, the whole number of immigrants who might come in for permanent residence under the Nationality Act was estimated at 154,657. However, 61,629 of those numbers were not used. That is roughly about 40 percent. So in the case of countries which have quotas of less than 7,000, we take 40 percent of their quota, and that is the number they can get out of the whole reservoir of unused numbers.

Take Italy as an example. Italy would normally have a quota of 5,645. Forty percent of that number is 2,249. So out of the new quota numbers, she would be entitled to 2,249 if she undertook to use them. So when we put the figures together and apply them to all the countires involved we arrive at a figure of 18,224.

I should point out, Mr. President, that this is a permanent addition to the Nationality Act. This is not for 1 year; this will go on; there will be a continuous redistribution of the quota numbers which are not used. Actually it will apply to 82 quota areas. Fifty-nine of those areas would get only 40.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the hour of 12:30 having arrived, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate continue with the consideration of the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The country which would get the largest number out of this arrangement would be Poland, with 1,285. The second would be Italy, with 1,247. The third would be Sweden, with 1,313. The Netherlands would be fourth, with 1,250. That is section 5.

I know that there is controversy about it. However, I wanted to explain how the figure was arrived at and what the total number would be so far as the persons involved were concerned.

Section 6 is the fingerprint section. Many countries are extremely sensitive about the fingerprint requirement. When it was first drawn, it was quite different from the section that appears in the present act. What the proposal does is to give the Secretary of State and the Attorney General the right, on a reciprocal basis, to prescribe regulations with respect to fingerprinting.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am sorry I cannot yield at the moment. I must go forward until I have finished.

Section 7 relates to tubercular cases, but only where they involve a family unit, or where a family might be torn asunder if one member were afflicted with tuberculosis. The number that can come in is 1,200. The application of the section would be controlled by the Attorney General and by the Surgeon General, and a bond must be given. There is a proviso in that section to the effect that it will apply only in connection with a family unit. A father and mother and two children might want to come to this country, but one child might be tubercular, or the mother might be tubercular. Obviously the others would not come here and let one member of the family remain over there. This matter has been under consideration for a long time. I talked about it to the officials in Europe when I was over there last year. They pointed to a good deal of hardship that is involved because of the rather restrictive provision of the existing law.

Section 8 related to adopted children, and provides for their more expeditious naturalization, so that no prior residence would be required. To be sure, they must be identified with people who are over there for an American institution or corporation, or an international organization recognized by us, or on some other basis which gives some justification for the action.

Section 9 relates to orphans under the Refugee Act. It would add 5,000 to the number and increase the age from 10 to 14.

Section 10 relates to illegitimate children. The statute today contains a definition of a child. The child must be either a legitimate child or a stepchild or a child who might be legitimatized by law. Section 10 adds to the definition in the basic act the wording "illegitimate child as it relates to the natural mother."

Section 11 refers to what I would call preferred cases. Section 203 of the basic act, in referring to spouses or children of an immigrant, requires that they accompany him. This section adds the words "or following to join him."

Section 12 relates to the unissued nonquota visas under the Refugee Act. There are some 40,000 of those, as I recall, and this section would make it possible to take care of them, and to eliminate the geographical limitation, but those numbers would still be available for issuance.

Section 13 was suggested in committee by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER]. It relates to diplomatic personnel who may have lost their status under existing law. This section provides that such personnel may apply to the Secretary of State and then to the Attorney General for an adjustment of status, with the requirement that there be a report to Congress, and that Congress may, by resolution of either House, reject any report the Attorney General may submit.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Those are the 13 sections of the substitute bill we have before us. I first yield to the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS].

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I noted what the Senator said with respect to the conferences which were held. They were very informal conferences; were they not?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is correct.

Mr. WATKINS. They were held for the purpose of determining if it was possible to get some legislation out of the situation which had developed.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WATKINS. I had introduced the President's program in four bills, which have been printed and are at the desk. I had proposed at that time that I might offer them to a pending measure, the so-called sheepherder's bill. However, I wanted to make sure that the conferences were informal and that they occurred on both sides, in an attempt to get something out of the situation that would help a human being. It may not be good politics, but it is good for people who are waiting to come to this country under the Refugee Act, and we should remove some of the restrictions which have proved to be rather impractical in administering the so-called Walter-McCarran Act. We wanted to do it in the interest of people. Is that not correct?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The Senator is correct. I may say, in behalf of my distinguished friend from Utah, that he made a valiant and heroic attempt to advance the President's whole program. I believe he was forebearing indeed, when we take into account, in the late days of the session, the difficulties that develop in connection with adjustments which must be made in the Senate and between the Senate and the House. Therefore, to meet some of the emergency situations the distinguished Senator from Utah has made a great contribution, indeed.

Mr. WATKINS. Later I shall discuss some of the phases of the proposed legislation which I have offered, and compare them with the pending proposed legislation.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, I am very happy that the Senator from Illinois has permitted me to be a cosponsor of the amendment, and I wish to congratulate him upon his very able presentation of this complicated subject. I regret very much that it has been necessary to omit many of the reforms in the immigration laws which have been so strongly urged by the President of the United States ever since he has been in office. I supported all the reforms which he has recommended and for which the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Illinois have so ardently fought. There is comfort in this bill for families, many of whom are in my State. I was glad to hear the Senator from Illinois point out the favorable effect of section 5 of the bill upon immigration from Poland and from Italy and from Sweden, for example. I am very happy that, while the pending proposal does not provide nearly the amount of relief which should be provided in connection with the unused-quota problem, it does definitely——

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. Senators who desire to converse will retire to the cloakroom. Senators will take their seats.

Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BUSH. I merely wish to complete my sentence by saying that this is a modest but a definite step in the right direction, and I am very happy that we can have the feeling, at the close of Congress, that we have taken some action to relieve the harshness of existing law. I hope we can come back and continue the fight for reasonable and proper changes in the McCarran-Walter Act, so as to get rid of the quota problem and enrich our population by uniting families and bringing families together which have been separated by the harshness of the existing law.

I thank very much the Senator from Illinois for his great contribution.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from Illinois will explain further the practical application of section 12 with reference to a number of other laws. Will the Senator explain what it means as to applicants from Greece, Italy, and Spain? I mean, with reference to unused quotas.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The general effect of the provision would be to permit the issuance indefinitely of visas to eligible aliens under the various categories of refugees, escapees, and so forth, within the numerical limitations set for each category, but such issuance would be by consular officers under the regular provisions of the act.

Mr. KEFAUVER. With reference to section 5 which reallocates a portion of the unused visas, what is the practical effect when it is considered in respect to section 12?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Section 5 is actually an amendment to the nationality act and is permanent legislation. It would increase in accordance with the unused quota numbers, so that the number would reach doubtless the total allowed under the origins act, namely, 154,000-plus, if all the numbers were used.

Mr. KEFAUVER. As has been pointed out, a large number of visas are now pending in Greece and Italy. What application would this have in the case of Greece?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Taking the 1955 figures, about 40 percent of the quota numbers were unused. They would be distributed among those countries that have a quota of less than 7,000.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I have a list of the additional immigrants who would be able to come to this country under section 5. Is the Senator familiar with this document, which is entitled "Explanation of the Effect of the Proposed Section 5—Redistribution of Unused Quotas"?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I mentioned a moment ago that it applies to 89 areas, 59 of which would get 40, and some others, of course, would get a larger number.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Would the Senator have any objection if I should ask unanimous consent that this list be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Not at all. I should be glad to ask such consent myself.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the list to which I have just referred.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXPLANATION OF THE EFFECT OF THE PROPOSED SECTION 5 (REDISTRIBUTION OF UNUSED QUOTAS)

In the fiscal year 1955, for which complete statistical data are available, 61,629 quota numbers remained unused.

The sum total of all quotas under 7,000 is 45,726 annually.

Under the formula devised in the proposed section 5, the additional numbers will be arrived at by calculating the percentage in which each quota under 7,000 participates in the total annual quota. Consequently, only 18,224 visas would be available for redistribution in the fiscal year 1956, and the effect, in numbers, will be as follows:

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, does the Senator from Illinois understand that the figures are correct with respect to the additional numbers set forth opposite the names of the various countries involved?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I understand so. I did not make the compilation, but I understand that it is correct.

Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, I wish to compliment the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Utah. I personally favor the recommendations originally proposed by President Eisenhower. I was opposed to the McCarran-Walter Act; I am sorry the bill before us does not go further than it does; but I wish to say that we are at least moving toward the kind of corrections in the act that are so badly needed. I am grateful to the two Senators for what they have done in bringing out this compromise, and I shall be glad to support the measure.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I listened to the colloquy between the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Connecticut. I agree with the Senator from Connecticut that this is a very complicated matter we have before us at this time, and I think the Senator from Illinois agreed with that statement.

We have an entirely new bill presented on the floor of the Senate, on the last day of the session, something which our committee has not gone into at all, so far as the amendment is concerned.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is correct. In justice to the chairman of the committee, I wish to say that the two sections of the Langer bill and the two sections of the sheepherder bill did have consideration by the committee.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, this substitute has not been printed and has not been distributed to the Members of the Senate for their information. Is not that correct?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is correct.

Mr. EASTLAND. The staff of the Immigration Subcommittee had nothing to do with the preparation of it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Not so far as I know.

Mr. EASTLAND. The Immigration Subcommittee and the Judiciary Committee had nothing to do with considering it; did they?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Officially, I am sure they did not.

Mr. EASTLAND. Does the Senator from Illinois think that is the proper way to legislate?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I have drawn freely, however, on staff members of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Illinois has expired.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I am in a peculiar position today. I control the time in opposition to the bill, although I expect to support the bill and to support the amendment. I believe I have a priority of obligation to those who may be opposing either the bill or the amendment, and after they have had time in which to present their views, I shall be glad to yield to those on the other side.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield such time as the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PASTORE] may desire.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I should like to make an observation to the Senator from Mississippi. I realize that the course of action now being pursued is not in conformity with the usual procedure which we have known and recognized in this body, but it is equally true that the question of immigration and the adjustment of our immigration and naturalization laws have been with us ever since I came to the Congress, which has been a period of about 6 years. The subject was discussed before I came to the Congress.

I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi if the staff of his committee is wholly unfamiliar with the provisions of the proposed amendment.

Mr. EASTLAND. The staff is here. It was not discussed with me until the day before yesterday.

Mr. PASTORE. I realize that.

Mr. EASTLAND. It was discussed with me the day before yesterday, and I was told that this bill would be introduced.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Rhode Island yield?

Mr. PASTORE. I yield for a question.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I could hardly hear what the Senator from Mississippi was saying, but I have discussed the subject with staff members many times.

Mr. PASTORE. I did not say what I said in any spirit of criticism at all. I hope the chairman of the committee will find it in his heart to look with a sense of tolerance upon what we are trying to do this afternoon. We recognize the fact that only a certain number of persons can come into our country from some other countries. There is a limit as to how far we can go. We realize that it is a complicated proposition and that it takes a great deal of time, but the problems raised by the amendment are nothing strange or new to the members of the Judiciary Committee. It is a very modest measure. It is not wholly acceptable to me, but I am perfectly willing to accept it and even to become a cosponsor of it, because I think it is a wholesome step in the right direction.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PASTORE] may be permitted to become a cosponsor of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PASTORE. If this is such an intricate matter, such a complex matter, such a wholly strange matter; if we cannot find it in our hearts and in our consciences to accept it; then I shall not be too critical. But I do not think that is the reason at all. Let us look at the matter objectively.

Eighty different countries are involved. Let us begin with the Nation at the top of the list—Afghanistan. Afghanistan is entitled to 100 as an annual quota. It is being allowed an additional 40 of an unused quota. If Senators will merely examine the list, within a period of two minutes they will understand the entire purpose of the amendment.

I plead with the distinguished Senator from Mississippi to look upon the amendment with tolerance and to see if in his heart and mind he cannot accept it and go along with it.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, this is a matter which the Senate will determine.

Mr. PASTORE. I know; but the Senator from Mississippi, I understand, is aiming to oppose it on the ground that he has not had time to study it.

Mr. EASTLAND. No; I have a speech I will make in my own time, in which I shall state the grounds on which I oppose the amendment. The Senator's understanding is not one of them. I have had time to study the amendment.

Mr. PASTORE. Does the Senator from Mississippi oppose the amendment because his committee has not studied it, or because he disagrees with the amendment in substance?

Mr. EASTLAND. I shall speak to the amendment in my own time.

Mr. PASTORE. I realize that, but I have asked the question of the distinguished Senator from Mississippi as respectfully as I can ask it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PASTORE. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The President has made certain recommendations in the field of modernizing, liberalizing, and reforming the immigration laws. A number of Democrats have introduced bills along the same line. Bills are pending in the House which would correct some inequities inadvertently created by the McCarran-Walter Act.

In an attempt to find a solution, in an attempt to find a meeting ground, the majority leader some time ago asked the staff of the policy committee to review the situation with the members of the staff of the House committee. Subsequently the subject was reviewed with the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, in order to shape our thoughts, our views, and our proposals in this field.

The distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS] was quite reluctant to withdraw from the program which he embraced. The distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN] had very strong feelings concerning his own bill. The distinguished Senator from Mississippi and the distinguished Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] had their own views on proposed immigration legislation.

Finally, after meeting with each group individually, it was my opinion—and the minority leader shared the opinion—that it would be agreeable to all concerned for the pending proposal to be brought before the Senate. It was the feeling of the majority leader and the minority leader that the proposal would appeal to a majority of the Senate.

I must frankly say that until this morning I thought it was agreeable to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary. Apparently we are in complete misunderstanding about that.

Mr. EASTLAND. No; the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] agreed that the bill should be brought up; but we certainly have not agreed to support it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. A unanimous-consent agreement was entered the other day. Some time was spent by the staff, with the chairman of the committee, with the Senator from Indiana, the minority leader, the majority whip, and the majority leader. After reviewing all the problems and going over the bill with the members of the committee who were present, it was agreed that the sheepherders bill would be brought up, that this amendment would be offered, and a vote would be taken on it.

This morning I learned that there is objection to a certain section. I understand the Senator from Indiana intends to offer an amendment to strike from the bill the section which permits the redistribution of the quotas.

Mr. EASTLAND. We are in full agreement that, with the exception of section 5, the bill should pass.

Mr. JENNER. Absolutely.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I was informed by the Senator from Indiana a few minutes ago that he intended to insist on doing so. I urged him not to do so. He has told me that he intends to offer an amendment to strike from the bill the section which permits the distribution of unused quota. We shall have to vote on that.

I hope that amendment will not be offered. I hope that if it is offered, it will not be accepted. If it is accepted, I think we shall have practically no legislation.

I trust that a majority of the Senate will go along with the very modest, moderate approach which is made in this proposal.

I may say to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PASTORE] that until a few minutes ago I had entertained the thought that even the chairman of the committee would go along with the bill.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Mississippi will give some reconsideration to that thought. The very crux of the bill is section 5. Without it, the bill would be nothing more than a shell or a mockery. After all, the purpose of bringing up the bill was to bring about a moderate liberalization of the law, within the quotas which are already permitted under existing law, which are unused by certain nations, and then only to the extent of 40 percent.

I had nothing to do with the negotiations and knew nothing about the bill until this very morning, when I was given a copy of it. I am not wholly satisfied with the liberality of the bill, but I am willing to go along and become a cosponsor of it.

I may say to the Senator from Indiana that I have strong feelings on the subject, as I know he has in the opposite direction. But he must understand that many of us who are asking a liberalization of the law are now coming forward with a proposition which is moderate and reasonable.

I hoped we would not meet with obstinacy on the floor, to the point that either the bill would be gutted completely, or we would not have a bill at all. I do not think that is fair, under the circumstances. I think we have made our case.

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PASTORE. Yes; I am glad to yield.

Mr. JENNER. Section 5 strikes out the very basis of the national origins quota system which has been followed by the United States since 1925.

Congress has only recently passed a new law, which required 5 years of study. The bill under consideration has never been considered. It has not been printed. It strikes at the very basis of the national origins quota system, our whole immigration structure.

The Senator from Rhode Island says there would be nothing in the bill with section 5 deleted from it. The Senator is wrong. The bill would take care of sheepherders, orphans, tubercular persons, the fingerprint question, the education and crime aspects, and many other phases. It is a good bill; it should be passed; I am for it. At this late hour, in the session, this is the only kind of legislation which should be enacted. At this late hour the whole immigration system should not be destroyed. I object to section 5. That is the only section to which I object.

I am reliably informed that unless section 5 is stricken from the bill, the House will not act on the measure.

Mr. PASTORE. I cannot speak for the House. I gained the impression this morning that the matter had been discussed with the leadership of the House, and that apparently there may be some likelihood of agreement on this point.

But I come back to the argument made by the Senator from Indiana that the bill would destroy the very basic policy of our quota system.

Mr. JENNER. Yes, it would.

Mr. PASTORE. I challenge that statement. We are not changing the figures in the origins formula; all we are saying is that if certain nations are not using their quotas, we will take 40 percent of those who are invited to come but do not come and add them to the numbers of the desperate people who would very much like to come to the United States.

What is so un-American about that? What is so inhumane about it? What is there about it which distorts the basic concept of freedom that we enjoy in this country?

Mr. JENNER. I will try to to explain it to the Senator when I obtain the floor.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Rhode Island yield?

Mr. PASTORE. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I recall the Senator's attention to a fact, concerning which I think he will agree with me. The quota this year is still based on the 1920 census. Where the Senator from Rhode Island and I come from, the census figures have changed so much that if the 1950 census were used, it would help us.

Mr. PASTORE. I respectfully suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that even that situation is not being disturbed. We are not saying it is necessary to add to the quotas of countries that want to send their nationals to the United States. If such nations have filled their quotas, the law does not apply. For those who are eligible to come and who do come, section 5 does not apply. It applies only in the instances where the quotas are not used by certain nations to the extent of 40 percent. I think it is a very moderate improvement. I do not see why there should be so much objection to it.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PASTORE. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. The Senator from Rhode Island and I are in agreement, I am sure, that the 1950 census is a much fairer and more up-to-date census, from our point of view, than is the 1920 census. The law is based on the 1920 census, not on the 1950 census. Therefore, section 5 is of help to us and our communities, because of the great change in the status of the population which has taken place between 1920 and 1950.

Mr. PASTORE. I wanted to resolve the proposition of the amendment without going into the aspect which the Senator from Massachusetts has mentioned. Otherwise, I think we would get into a controversy where there are differences, and sincere differences, on both sides, and we would not get anywhere. But I say the amendment is harmless, and I do not think its rejection could be predicated upon the argument that we have not had a chance to study it. I do not think the amendment is that difficult. I think fundamentally it is a question of whether a Senator is or is not in favor of it.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PASTORE. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. Under the proposal it would not be possible for any more persons to come into the country than we are willing to accept. Is that correct?

Mr. PASTORE. That is true.

Mr. KENNEDY. It also provides that if Great Britain or Ireland do not use their quotas, their quotas would be assigned to countries in which there are long waiting lists, and particularly where there are relatives of persons in this country waiting to come here.

Mr. PASTORE. Such persons would be admitted only in proportion to the amount of unused quotas.

I thank the Senator for yielding to me, and I now yield the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNAMARA in the chair). The Senator will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. How much time remains on each side on the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the opposition has 30 minutes on the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Has all time been used by the proponents?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. KNOWLAND. How much time does the distinguished Senator from Mississippi desire?

Mr. EASTLAND. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield 15 minutes to the Senator from Mississippi.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, section 5 of the bill is an amendment to our basic immigration law. It is an amendment to the McCarran-Walter Act. Four or five years ago the Senate enacted that bill into law, over the veto of the President of the United States, and I cannot see any use in our marching back down the hill and taking a step that will weaken the basic immigration law of the United States.

Mr. President, our immigration and nationality laws prescribe an empirical formula to regulate the flow of aliens coming to this country for permanent residence from Europe. This empirical formula, free so far as possible from political pressures, is designed to regulate the flow of aliens from each of the European countries in a fair proportion to the number of persons in the United States from such country. May I pause to comment here, Mr. President, that this principle, known as the national origins formula, is designed not only to assure maximum assimilation of the quota immigrants whom we receive for permanent residence, but more important, it is designed to preserve and protect our American traditions, our American institutions, our American way of life, which, in the final analysis, are but reflections of the ideologies of the people who are Americans. This principle is so important, that I should like to read an excerpt from the report of the congressional committee which accompanied the law establishing the national origins formula:

> Since it is the axiom of political science that government not imposed by external force is the visible expression of the ideals, standards, and social viewpoint of the people over which it rules, it is obvious that a change in the character or composition of the population must inevitably result in the evolution of a form of government consonant with the base upon which it rests. If, therefore, the principles of individual liberty, guarded by a constitutional government created on this continent nearly a century and a half ago, is to endure, the basic strain of our population must be maintained and our economic standards preserved.

In the first place, Mr. President, the substitute provides for a redistribution of approximately 18,500 unused quotas annually to those countries having less than an annual allotment of 7,000 quotas. The net effect of this provision, Mr. President, is to change the cultural pattern of our immigration system from northern and western Europeans to southern and eastern Europeans. As a practical matter, it would also mean that quota numbers normally available only to countries of the free world would be allocated to many countries under Communist domination.

This substitute, with the exception of section 5, I think, is all right; but it must be remembered that if the amendment is adopted, the Communist countries will be the greatest beneficiaries.

The importance of this situation, Mr. President, is not merely academic. it goes to the heart of our Republic and our basic Christian ideals. Ours is a constitutional republic, built upon concepts stemming from cultures which reflect themselves in the historic composition of our population. If we transfer the pattern of our immigration to countries and peoples who have historically maintained a totalitarian concept of government, it will only be a matter of time until our Republic will veer from its traditions of freedom and democracy. But, Mr. President, the increase in our annual immigration and the transfer of the cultural pattern of that immigration would be brought about not only by the provision which I have just pointed out in the substitute bill, but also by two other provisions, namely, the provision in the substitute bill removing quota mortgages under the displaced persons law and the provisions of the substitute bill transferring unused quota numbers under the Refugee Relief Act for utilization under the general immigration law.

Mr. President, under the Displaced Persons Act of 1948, as amended, approximately one-half million persons were brought into the United States from the low-quota countries of southern and eastern Europe. In order to maintain the principle of our national origins quota system, the law provided for mortgaging of the quotas to which these people would be properly chargeable, but no quotas were mortgaged more than 50 percent for any 1 year. The substitute would eliminate these mortgages, so that, in effect, we would be increasing, in the course of the next several years, the total immigration into the United States from the southern and eastern European countries in the amount of approximately one-half million. In other words, Mr. President, the safeguards which the Congress wrote into the Displaced Persons Act, in order to maintain on a long-range basis the cultural pattern of our immigration system, would be wiped out, and an additional one-half million people from southern and eastern Europe would be admitted into the United States.

Mr. President, I do not suggest that northern and western Europeans are better than southern and eastern Europeans, or that Europeans, as such, are better than Asiatics. However, our whole immigration system is based upon the concept that for maximum assimilation and for the maintenance of our traditional concepts of liberty, it is in the public interest for us to maintain in our immigration system a pattern proportional to the cultural composition of our population. This is aside from the numerical limitations of our immigration system which would be greatly expanded by the provisions of the substitute.

Mr. President, there is a third aspect of the substitute which contributes to the destruction of the basic provisions of our immigration system, namely, the provisions relating to the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended. Mr. President, as I shall develop in the course of my remarks, the term "Refugee Relief Act" is a clear misnomer. Under the provisions of that act, some 214,000 aliens were embraced either for admission or for adjustment of status. The original act passed in 1953 included not only refugees but also nonrefugee nationals, virtually all of whom were from the low-quota countries of southern and eastern Europe.

The Senate committee report on the refugee bill contained the following language:

The committee wishes to emphasize, however, that the overall quota stated in the bill is an upper limit and is not intended as a mandate to those who will have the responsibility of administering the act requiring them to achieve the number declared by the Congress to be the maximum.

The committee is further of the opinion that the bill in its amended form allows ample time for completion of the quotas stated in the bill and it wishes to go on record as not in favor of future extensions of this legislation.

It is specifically stated by the committee that none of the safeguards provided in this legislation and in the Immigration and Nationality Act are to be sacrificed or compromised in the slightest degree in the interest of moving people for the sake of fulfilling quotas or allotments. The committee further states that if on the expiration date of this legislation the maximum number of visas authorized to be issued has not in fact been issued, the committee will not be disposed to entertain petitions for further extensions of time in order to utilize any visa numbers which have not been used by the expiration date provided for in the legislation.

The statement of the managers on the part of the House, which accompanied the conference report on the refugee bill, contained the following language:

The conferees desire further to stress that this legislation constitutes in no way a mandate to issue, within the prescribed period of time, the full number of visas allocated under this legislation. These are, in each case, maximum limitations, not quotas to be filled. It is to be clearly understood that this bill offers opportunities to enter the United States to a certain number of eligible aliens but that no special effort should be made to evade any of the provisions of this act or the Immigration and Nationality Act in order to bring in such number or any number. Similarly, it is the unanimous consensus of the conferees that no efforts should be made to induce aliens to seek entry to the United States under this bill.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. EASTLAND. I shall yield, although my time is limited. Before yielding, I should like to address a question to the minority leader. I wish to ask him whether I can have additional time.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Yes, Mr. President; I shall yield additional time to the Senator from Mississippi, either on the amendment or on the bill itself.

Mr. EASTLAND. I thank the Senator from California.

Now I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. WATKINS. The Senator from Mississippi was discussing the provisions of the Refugee Relief Act; is that correct?

Mr. EASTLAND. Yes.

Mr. WATKINS. I understand that the only provision of the pending amendment to which he objects is section 5, which he feels infringes upon the McCarran Act.

Mr. EASTLAND. I do not like some of the other provisions of the amendment, but I would go along with them.

Mr. WATKINS. That is what I understood.

Let me say that actually the bill itself provides that the administration of the Refugee Act shall cease on the day when the act expires. But some of the quotas would be given to certain groups, under certain categories, such as expellees and those of ethnic origin. Those who were expelled from behind the Iron Curtain; and also those who escaped from behind the Iron Curtain would be given additional time in which to make use of those provisions, not only in the case of those from Germany and Austria, but——

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, I yielded for a question.

Mr. WATKINS. I wished to make that point clear.

Mr. EASTLAND. Most of them would go to the nationals of those countries, of course.

Mr. WATKINS. The administration of the act ends on December 31, 1956; that is provided in the bill.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, let the Senator from Utah speak in his own time.

Mr. WATKINS. I shall.

Mr. EASTLAND. A little over a year after passage of the original Refugee Relief Act, it became increasingly obvious that even within the refugee categories prescribed by the law, there just were not sufficient bona fide eligible applicants, notwithstanding the fact that in violation of the mandate of the Congress, administration officials were undertaking to induce every possible applicant to seek entry into the United States. The law was then—on August 31, 1954—amended so that nonrefugee nationals within each ethnic group could use the visas originally allocated to so-called refugees. The practical effect of the amendment was to make the Refugee Relief Act not an act for the relief of refugees, but a general immigration act which struck at the heart of our National Origins Quota System.

Mr. President, it is now proposed in the substitute that the 50-odd thousand unused visas originally allocated under the Refugee Relief Act shall be transferred and used under the Immigration and Nationality Act.

Where, Mr. President, is the solemn pledge written into the reports of the committees which handled the Refugee Relief Act that there would be no future extensions of this legislation? Should we not tear the appealing refugee label from this legislative device to circumvent our basic immigration formula?

Mr. President, the net effect of the three provisions I have discussed is to increase immigration into the United States by about 600,000 aliens, all of whom would be coming out of proportion to the formula for the maintenance of the cultural pattern of our society.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield 5 additional minutes to me?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Yes, Mr. President; I yield 5 additional minutes to the Senator from Mississippi.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi is recognized for 5 more minutes.

Mr. EASTLAND. I thank the Senator from California.

Mr. President, the instant bill was designed to meet a particular, specialized problem, by providing for the admission of a limited number of sheepherders and their spouses, and to correct a slight administrative problem which has arisen in the administration of the law. The proposed substitute goes far beyond the original measure, for it would make drastic changes in our overall immigration laws, changes which certainly deserve more deliberation than can possibly be given by general discussion on the floor of the Senate. At least, these sweeping changes should be given calm, deliberate study by the appropriate committees of the Congress which would present each body of the Congress with detailed facts and recommendations.

Mr. President, I cannot conceive of passing a bill in the Senate on the last day of the session, in this fashion. The bill is mimeographed, and not printed. Copies are not made available to Senators. The provisions of the amendment are not available to Senators at this time. There are no copies on the desks of Senators. With the exception of section 5, the provisions are all right, but I think section 5 would emasculate the McCarran-Walter Act.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me 1 minute?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. ERVIN. Mr. President, I think this is an exceedingly poor way to legislate—to bring up a bill of this importance on what we hope will be the last day of the session, and ask Members of the Senate to vote on a proposal which they do not have the privilege of reading. I had assumed that there would be no legislation on the subject, inasmuch as it had not been brought up before this hour. I do not now even have the privilege of obtaining such information concerning the proposed substitute as I could get through my eyes, because I have no copy of the proposed substitute.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, how much time have we left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 11 minutes remaining on the amendment.

Mr. PASTORE. How much time does the Senator from Utah desire?

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I am in favor of the amendment, with the qualifications which I have mentioned. I should like to have some time on the amendment, and to have some time on the bill itself.

Mr. PASTORE. How much time does the Senator desire?

Mr. WATKINS. I should like at least 20 minutes.

Mr. PASTORE. I yield to the Senator from Utah 5 minutes on the amendment and 15 minutes on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All the time of the proponents of the amendment has been exhausted. The opponents have 11 minutes remaining.

Mr. PASTORE. How much time have we on the bill itself?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the Senator's side there are 43 minutes remaining on the bill.

Mr. PASTORE. I will yield 15 minutes to the Senator from Utah. At the end of that time we can decide how much further we can go.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, before entering into a general discussion, I should like to call attention to a statement made by the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] to the effect that the Communist nations would benefit most from section 5 of the amendment, and that the increased quotas would go to the benefit of the Communist nations.

That is not a factual statement, because if both the McCarran Act and the Refugee Act are properly enforced Communists cannot get into this country. In fact, the Refugee Act is much stronger in respect to security than is the McCarran Act.

People who can come in may be natives of Russia, but they are escapees, who escaped from behind the Iron Curtain at the risk of their lives. They may be expellees of German ethnic origin, who have been expelled from countries which have gone behind the Iron Curtain. So the statement of the Senator from Mississippi is not factually correct.

Before the pending amendment is adopted, I should like to explain to my colleagues, to the administration, and to the people of the Nation just why I am not insisting on the adoption of my amendments which lie on the desk and why I am, rather, supporting the pending substitute.

First, I wish it made clear that though this amendment does contain seven provisions similar to the President's program, they are not by any stretch of the imagination major enough to be called a fulfillment by Congress of the President's request for an effective program of revisions to the Immigration and Refugee Acts. But they do make for progress.

Mr. President, let us look at the record. Senate bill 2113 was introduced by me on May 31, 1955. It had for its purpose the amendment of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953 to make it more workable and to widen its scope. Hearings were held on the bill soon after its introduction, and it was reported to the Judiciary Committee without recommendation. Later it was recommitted to the subcommittee, and since that time there has been no action, although I have frequently urged that something be done about this matter. Anyone who knows the situation in the Judiciary Committee knows that there was very little opportunity to have it considered.

Mr. President, I voted for the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952, known as the McCarran-Walter Act. That act has been on the books since 1952. Experience within the operation of the law has revealed the necessity for some modifications. Our place in the world as the leader of the free nations has also indicated that some changes in it would seem to be desirable. However, I believe it is sound policy to consider the needs of our own country first, and then to legislate in accordance with those needs. These needs, of course, include the cooperation with free nations of the world, in order to help preserve our liberties. In this troubled world and under the Communist threat that cooperation seems essential. At least, that has been the decision of the executive department and of the Congress. That goes for both the Eisenhower administration and the Truman administration. However, I know of no responsible official at this time who desires to open wide our gates to all of those who might want to come to our shores to make their homes.

Consistent with the approach I have just outlined, I have proposed to offer amendments to H. R. 6888, which would have carried out the President's recommendations with respect to immigration made earlier this year. Those amendments were divided by subject matter into four divisions. They were, in effect, the same language I used in the bills which I introduced, namely, Senate bills 3167, 3168, 3169, and 3170.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks an analysis of those amendments, statements of what they intended to accomplish, and an explanation of them.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXPLANATION OF AMENDMENT TO H. R. 6888 (7-9-56—E), SAME AS S. 3167

SUBSTITUTION FOR PRIVATE RELIEF IMMIGRATION BILLS

The need

1. Private legislation ties up Congress and committee.

2. System inequitable because not all deserving cases are considered.

3. Congressional committee works through a staff. Staff does not investigate but obtains reports from executive agencies, chiefly Justice. Proposal gives powers to agencies, which now investigate selected cases for the Congress, to act directly on every deserving case. The proposal does not seek to cut off right of any Member of Congress to introduce a bill. It should materially reduce the number.

The bill

Classes Eligible

Veterans; husbands, wives, mothers, fathers, sons, daughters, brothers, and sisters of (a) citizens and (b) permanently admitted aliens; clergymen, missionaries, Brothers, and Sisters in religious sense of the term.

Charges Forgiven

Any ground of inadmissibility, except those relating to certain subversive classes, for aliens seeking to come to the United States; any ground of deportability for aliens already here.

How Administered

By the Attorney General in both cases. With respect to those outside the United States only upon recommendation of the Secretary of State or the United States consul abroad.

Limitations

Five thousand in any calendar year total of both classes. Reduction of a quota number for each case unless alien had previously used a quota number or was or is a nonquota alien. Attorney General must be of opinion in each case that action would not be contrary to national interest, safety, or security.

EXPLANATION OF AMEEDMENTS TO H. R. 6888 (7-9-56—D), SIMILAR TO S. 3168

TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS BILL

Amends H. R. 6888 by adding the following new sections:

Section 4: Repeals paragraphs 16 and 17 of section 212 (a) of the act which relates to aliens who have been excluded or deported or removed from the United States. It eliminates requirements that they obtain permission from the Attorney General before they may apply for visas or for entry to the United States. It would also repeal section 276 of that same act which requires prosecution of such aliens who return without having complied with the permission requirement.

The requirement is archaic. It existed in law before present quota system became a part of the law. An applicant for admission or for a visa should be judged on his present eligibility to enter and there are adequate other safeguards to protect this Government without this requirement.

Section 5: Amends section 212 (d) (4) of the act which provides for a waiver of visas and passports for nonimmigrants on conditions, one of which is "on the basis of unforeseen emergency in individual cases." Removing the word "unforeseen" permits greater administrative latitude.

Section 6: Eliminates the requirement of inspecting and of applying all grounds of exclusion to aliens coming from Alaska and Hawaii to the mainland United States. By definition, these Territories are part of the United States. Aliens who are already in these Territories are subject to all the provisions of the act. If an alien was deportable before he came to the mainland he remains deportable. An additional exclusion order avails nothing in his case; unnecessarily delays travel and ties up inspecting manpower.

Section 7: Amends sections 221 (b) and 263 (a) of the act which require the fingerprinting of all aliens applying for visas, and all nonimmigrants who came to the United States without visas who have remained for 30 days or more. The proposal would amend these sections to permit the Secretary of State and the Attorney General respectively to waive fingerprinting of nonimmigrant aliens. There would be no change in requirement that every person coming here to reside permanently must be fingerprinted. No need to gild the lily on various reasons which prompt this proposal.

Section 8: Amends section 236 (a) of the act by clarifying statutory authority for separating the role of hearing officer from that of the officer who presents the Government's case in the conduct of selected admissibility hearings. It removes any doubt as to the authority of the Immigration Service to separate these two functions where the Service deems it advisable. All are agreed on the desirability of separating them in certain contested cases. The law presently makes specific provision for such separation in deportation hearings but is silent on admissibility hearings.

Section 9: Amends section 238 (d) of the act to the extent that the Attorney General would be authorized, in his discretion, to dispense with examination-inspection in the case of aliens proceeding in direct transit through the United States, under safeguards, and subject to agreements with the aliens and carriers. Under the present law, though they may be exempted from documentary requirements, they must be inspected and examined and are subject to the exclusion and deportation provisions which apply to immigrants coming here to reside permanently. This proposal in effect creates something like the "free-port" which exists for customs purposes on goods which are merely stored in the United States waiting transshipment out of the country after they have been brought here from abroad by another carrier. The aliens involved are for the most part individuals who are traveling from Europe or the Orient destined to Canada or Latin America who are using our air gateways at New York, San Francisco, and Miami. The proposal facilitates international travel and encourages use of our own flag carriers by passengers desiring to use our more direct air routings to their ultimate destinations.

Section 10: Amends section 242 (b) of the act to furnish statutory authority for the Attorney General to commence deportation proceedings with an order to show cause, which procedure is presently in effect by regulation. Prior to the procedure now being followed, it was thought necessary to commence every deportation case by physical arrest which in most instances was not only unnecessary but frequently caused great fright and considerable anguish, particularly in cases involving infants, aged aliens, and persons who were not likely to abscond. While the authority for the new procedure under existing law is believed implicit in the statute, the proposed legislation would remove any doubt and prevent a possible challenge of a proceeding on this ground. The right to issue a warrant of arrest in the relatively few cases where it is found necessary to take an alien into custody or impose restrictions on him is not limited or restricted by this amendment.

Section 11: Amends section 245 of the act by deleting clause 5 of subsection (a). Under present clause an alien who seeks to adjust his status in the United States without reentry, as the husband or wife of an American citizen, cannot do so unless he had been in the United States for a year before such a marriage. All that the present statute accomplishes in most cases is to require the money put aside to start a new family unit in the United States to be expended on travel out of the country to obtain a piece of paper from an American consul abroad (there is no quota for these aliens—they come in extra-quota) and reenter with that document. There are ample other safeguards in the law to take care of the rare fraudulent marriage.

Section 12: Codifies several statutes relating to the naturalization of war veterans with proper safeguards to make certain that benefits are limited to those who have served honorably in an active-duty status. Veterans who have had active duty during wartime shall be eligible for naturalization regardless of length of service. Peacetime veterans shall be eligible for naturalization after 3 years. A person who was unable to serve the full 3 years because of a disability incurred during service is provided with a special exemption. The requirement that certain veterans must present proof of admission for permanent residence has resulted in many deserving veterans not being eligible for naturalization and this proposal would eliminate that requirement.

No person shall be regarded as having been separated under honorable conditions if he was separated on account of alienage, or if he was a conscientious objector, or if he performed no military, air or naval service whatever, or if he refused to wear a uniform, and will not benefit from this proposal. Citizenship granted pursuant to this proposal may be revoked if, at any time subsequent to naturalization, the person is separated from the Armed Forces under other than honorable conditions.

Sections 13 and 14: Not now required. They have been substantially enacted in Public Law 728 of July 18, 1956.

Section 15: Amends section 101 (b) (1) of the act by extending the definition of "child" to include an illegitimate child claiming benefits under the law through its mother and also to include adopted children under the age of 12 if, prior to seeking benefits under the immigration law, they have resided with the adoptive parents at least 2 years. The proposal would cover appealing and distressing hardship cases which have arisen in the case of illegitimate children and children of tender age who have been adopted.

Section 16: Amends section 202 (a) (5) of the act by removing the limitation which prevents an Asian whose quota is exhausted from coming under the quota or nonquota classification of the accompanying spouse. These privileges are presently available to aliens of other origins. There is no desire or plan here to change the requirement that a primary applicant for admission who is of Asian origin must be chargeable to the special Asian quota regardless of birthplace.

Section 17: Amends section 203 of the act to grant the same preference status to a spouse or child "following to join" an alien entitled to a preferred classification by reason of his special skills, as if the spouse and child were accompanying the alien. It is not possible for families to always travel together and the change would be desirable in order to cover the situations where the spouse or children follow the principal alien.

The proposal would also result in the fourth preference category under the quota being accorded a fixed 10 percent of the quota instead of the present undetermined portion, reducing the second category of preference immigrants from 30 to 20 percent.

The proposal would also establish the limitation wherein the immigrant would be eligible for fourth preference only on the approved petition of a United States citizen 21 years of age or over, and would include in that preference the spouse or child of a primary applicant.

Section 18: Amends section 281 of the act to give the Secretary of State wider latitude to waive visa fees for nonimmigrant aliens and to permit clarification of the existing provisions relating to the computation of such fees.

Section 19: Amends section 212 (a) (9) of the act. The proposal would have the effect of providing that in determining whether a criminal misdemeanor was committed, as a ground for exclusion of an alien, United States law shall control.

Section 20: Amends section 221 (f) of the act to eliminate the requirement for eventual individual documents for alien crewmen. The requirement for the issuance of individual documents has proved to be difficult to administer, unduly burdensome, and unnecessary. The present visaed crew list satisfies both the State and Justice Departments.

Section 21: Amends section 222 (a) and (c) of the act to eliminate the reference to "race and ethnic classification" information in applications for immigrant and nonimmigrant visas. The terms are not susceptible of definition and have served no useful purpose in the administration of the law.

Sections 22 and 23: Amend sections 353 and 354 of the act to broaden those sections by giving to veterans of the Spanish-American War and World Wars I and II, their spouses, children, and dependent parents broader foreign-residence privileges without losing United States citizenship.

Section 24: Amends the proviso to section 223 (b) of the act to give the Attorney General the right to extend the life of the reentry permit, for such period as he deems appropriate, of a wife or child of a member of the Armed Forces of the United States stationed abroad, beyond the 1 year period allowed by present law. The existing law has resulted in hardship to alien spouses and children of servicemen stationed abroad.

Section 25: Adds a new subsection to section 323 of the act which would permit the expeditious naturalization of children adopted by United States citizens stationed abroad in the Armed Forces, or abroad in the employment of the United States Government, or abroad in the employment of an American firm or international organization. The new subsection would provide that there must be a showing that the child is residing and will continue to reside with the adoptive parents. At the present time the adoptive child is required to establish 2 years' residence and 1 year's physical presence in the United States during the 2-year period immediately preceding the filing of the petition. The proposal would remove these requirements. The citizen adoptive parent would be required to declare before the naturalization court an intention to have the child take up residence in the United States as soon as the adoptive parent terminates his service or employment abroad. This worthy proposal prevents unnecessary separation of families.

JUDICIAL REVIEW BILL

The need

Repetitive court actions of administrative decisions by way of habeas corpus, declaratory judgment actions, applications for injunctive relief, etc.; enabling some of the more notorious among our deportable criminal aliens to defeat deportation for years.

The bill

Form of Review

1. Habeas corpus for any alien found deportable and held in custody or for any alien excluded from admission to the United States, or

2. Petition for review for any alien found deportable and not held in custody.

Limitations

1. Alien must not have physically departed United States after administrative order of excludability or deportability.

2. All administrative review must have been exhausted.

3. The administrative order must not previously have been determined to be valid in any judicial proceeding (unless new grounds presented or court finds prior proceedings inadequate or ineffective to test validity).

4. No action may be withdrawn without consent of both respondent and court.

5. Issue determined on administrative record and findings of fact in administrative proceeding if supported by reasonable, substantial and probative evidence shall be considered conclusive; except a trial de novo is provided when United States nationality is claimed.

6. Court action must be brought in vicinity where alien is located instead of at Washington, D. C. This will greatly serve to eliminate the delays resulting from the congestion of the court calendar in the District of Columbia.

EXPLANATION OF AMENDMENT TO H. R. 6888 (7-9-56—B) AS S. 3170

QUOTA BILL

1. Computation of quotas:

Formula	Total	Allocation
Present: ⅙ of 1 percent selected 1920 population	154,657	To each area according to its percentage of representation in United States population. (a) As at present 154,657
Proposed: ⅓ of 1 percent total 1950 population	219,461	(b) To aliens having special skills regardless of nationality 5,000
		(c) Increase of 100 for all minimum quota areas 5,000+
		(d) To each country in proportion to its share of total immigration to United States in last 3 decades 55,000+
Total		219,461

2. Cancels mortgage upon quotas resulting from Displaced Persons Act and previous sheepherder laws.

3. Permits use of unused quota numbers on basis of four geographical regional pools throughout the world: Europe, Asia, Africa, and Oceania. Unused quotas in each region would be be available for distribution each year to aliens entitled to preference status under the present law, if they were born within the region, regardless of the particular country in which they were born.

Mr. WATKINS. It should be also remembered that I introduced four bills at that time to carry out the President's recommendations. The amendments which I propose to offer to H. R. 6888 are identical in terms with the four bills which I have just mentioned. Since there has been considerable discussion of these amendments and some criticism, I think it would be helpful to highlight what my proposed amendments would not do.

First. They would not make a single change in the provisions of the law relating to the acquisition of citizenship; except for certain veterans of the United States Armed Forces and their close relatives, my amendments would make no changes as to the loss of United States citizenship.

Second. They would not add or subtract a single ground for deporting an alien from the United States.

Third. They would not lift a single one of the bars which now forbid the admission to the United States of an alien who would be a danger to the national security.

In a nutshell what the amendments seek to accomplish is the following:

First. They would transfer to the executive branch of our Government much of the discretionary powers in the enforcement of the immigration law which are now exercised by the Congress through the lengthy, inefficient, and expensive process of private legislation, without surrendering any of the powers of a Member of Congress to introduce such a bill when the executive branch cannot or will not act.

Second. They would incorporate into the law a number of technical amendments recommended by the people who administer the present law, including three provisions to enlarge the citizenship privileges of—and revise the expatriating provisions relating to—members of the Armed Forces, past and present, and their families. They would also grant legislative approval to four different administrative interpretations of existing law.

Third. They would guarantee the use but prevent the abuse of our judicial process by deportable or inadmissible aliens whose sole object is to prevent or delay their removal from this country.

Fourth. They would increase the maximum limitations upon the number of aliens who may obtain visas to come to the United States to live permanently. This does not mean that the amendments guarantee the admission of a greater number of aliens; they do increase the potential maximum number.

The four bills which I previously introduced, on February 8, 1956, were the only specific bills on which open hearings were conducted by the Subcommittee on Immigration of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Mr. President, I repeat what I have said several times on the floor, that extensive hearings were held on the bills which I had introduced to carry out the President's program. Therefore, there were hearings held on this proposal. Moves of various kinds have been made to try to get action on the bills, but we could not succeed in the Committee on the Judiciary. That is why we have sought this means of trying to get action on measures which have been properly before the committee and on which hearings have been held.

At those hearings, my bills, now represented by four of the amendments I proposed to H. R. 6888 were officially endorsed by the administration, and their enactment was urged by the Secretary of State and the Attorney General, representing the two agencies of the Government directly concerned in the administration and enforcement of the immigration and nationality laws. No other bills or legislative proposals on that subject offered by a member of the majority have that endorsement.

In addition, Congress has had several proposals to consider which would have the effect of providing for the orderly termination of the refugee relief program and the complete utilization of the visas made available under that act.

Only the bill S. 3570, dealing with the orphan provisions of the Refugee Relief Act, has been acted upon by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary.

What then of the proposal before us? What does it contain, and what portion of the President's program does it adopt?

I ask unanimous consent to insert a memorandum describing what the bill contains and giving a section-by-section analysis.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROPOSED SUBSTITUTE FOR H. R. 6888, TO AMEND THE ACT OF SEPTEMBER 3, 1954

The draft of a proposed substitute for the bill H. R. 6888, amending the act of September 3, 1954, which is now pending on the Senate Calendar (Calendar No. 2249), retains the provisions of the reported bill providing (a) for the admission of 350 sheepherders and their spouses and children; (b) for the removal of the mortgages against the Spanish quota under prior sheepherder acts; and (c) for the correction of a situation which exists in the case of certain aliens admitted under the Displaced Persons Act who are in a deportable status because of misrepresentations made with reference to their nationality or place of birth to avoid repatriation to Communist-controlled countries.

In addition, the substitute bill would add several provisions which would modify the immigration and nationality laws as follows:

1. Cancel mortgages on quotas established by the Displaced Persons Act. This will allow 8,000 new quotas annually to Eastern European countries.

2. Provide a formula for the redistribution of approximately 18,500 unused quotas annually to those countries having less than an annual allotment of 7,000 quotas.

3. Authorize the issuance under the regular provisions of the Immigration and Nationality Act after January 1, 1957, of the special nonquota immigrant visas which remain unissued under the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended, to aliens within the special categories of refugees, expellees, and escapees set forth in section 4 of that act, subject to the numerical limitations applicable to each category. In the case of escapees, the geographical limitations presently applicable are removed, as well as the present limitations in connection with the place of issuance of visas to such escapees. The Refugee Relief Act of 1953 is not extended, nor is the authorized number of special nonquota visas increased.

4. Extend the period for the admission of refugee orphans and increase the allowable age from 10 to 14 years.

5. Admit approximately 1,200 tubercular immigrants.

6. Eliminate the fingerprinting requirement of the Immigration Act.

7. Provide for the expeditious naturalization of certain adopted children of United States citizens employed abroad.

8. Amend section 4 of the act of September 3, 1954, to extend the waiver of excludability in the case of a person convicted, or who admits the commission, of a crime involving moral turpitude which is classifiable as a petty offense to include an alien convicted on one occasion only of offenses which in the aggregate would constitute no more than a petty offense as defined in title 8 of the United States Code.

9. Correct a situation which exists in the case of certain aliens admitted under the Displaced Persons Act who are in a deportable status because of misrepresentations made with reference to their nationality or place of birth to avoid repatriation to Communist-controlled countries.

10. Amend the definition of the term "child" as used in titles I and II of the Immigration and Nationality Act in such a manner as to clarify the law so that the illegitimate child would, in relation to his mother, enjoy the same status under the immigration laws as a legitimate child.

11. Modify section 203 of the Immigration and Nationality Act to accord first preference status under the quotas to spouses and children following to join principal aliens who have been granted first preference, which is the same status presently accorded to spouses and children accompanying such principal aliens.

SECTIONAL ANALYSIS OF SUBSTITUTE BILL

Section 1 of the substitute bill contains the provision for the amendment of the Sheepherder Act to permit the issuance of an additional 350 special visas to sheepherders and for the issuance of nonquota visas to the wives and children of sheepherders admitted under that act or the two previous sheepherder bills. This provision is the same as that contained in the reported bill.

Section 2 of the substitute bill would amend section 4 of the Sheepherder Act to extend the waiver of excludable grounds in the case of a person convicted, or who admits the commission of, a crime involving moral turpitude which is classifiable as a petty offense to include an alien convicted on one occasion only of offenses which, in the aggregate, would constitute no more than a petty offense as defined in title 8 of the United States Code. The provision is similar to the provision in H. R. 6888 as passed by the House.

Section 3 of the substitute bill would remove the mortgages on the quotas established under the Displaced Persons Act and the three Sheepherder Acts. This would have the effect of restoring to the future quotas approximately 325,000 numbers preempted under the Displaced Persons Act and the restoring of approximately 500 numbers to the quota for Spain, which were preempted under the Sheepherder Acts. Under H. R. 6888, as reported, the mortgages under the Sheepherder Acts are removed from the Spanish quota.

Section 4 of the substitute bill adds a provision relating to the correction of a situation which exists in the case of certain aliens admitted under the Displaced Persons Act who are in a deportable status because of misrepresentations made with reference to their nationality or place of birth to avoid repatriation to Communist-controlled countries. This provision is contained in section 3 of H. R. 6888 as reported by the committee. The provision as reported by the committee has certain refinements of language which make the section preferable to the provision contained in the substitute bill.

Section 5 of the substitute bill provides for the redistribution of certain quota numbers which remain unused at the end of each fiscal year under the provisions of the Immigration and Nationality Act. The unused numbers would be redistributed under a formula to quota areas having an annual quota of less than 7,000 in the proportion which the quota for each quota area bears to the annual quota of all the quota areas combined. For example, the annual quota of Italy is 5,645 and the total quota under the Immigration and Nationality Act is 154,657. At the end of fiscal year 1955, there remained 61,629 unused quota numbers. Thus, on the basis of the proportion of 5,645 to 154,657, 2,249 of the 61,629 unused numbers would have been available for issuance in Italy. Such numbers would be available for issuance during the 12-month period beginning October 1 and ending September 30 of the year immediately following the close of the fiscal year involved. Since quota areas with annual quotas of 7,000 or more would not participate in the use of the unused quotas, it is stated that only 18,224 of the unused visas would have been available for redistribution in the fiscal year 1956.

Section 6 of the substitute bill provides for the elimination of the fingerprinting requirements of the Immigration and Nationality Act in the discretion of the Secretary of State and the Attorney General on the basis of reciprocity in the case of aliens seeking to enter the United States temporarily. At the present time, the waiver can only be granted in the case of certain diplomats. The language of the provision was not contained in any of the versions of H. R. 6888, but is similar to the language contained in a bill, H. R. 11582, introduced by Congressman WALTER to amend the laws relating to passport review and procedure. That bill is now pending before the House Judiciary Committee.

Section 7 of the proposed substitute would add a provision to admit, under proper safeguards, 1,200 otherwise admissible aliens who are afflicted with tuberculosis and who are members of certain refugee and displaced person family groups or who are the wives or children of United States citizens.

Section 8 of the substitute bill would add a provision to provide for the expeditious naturalization of certain adopted children of United States citizens employed abroad. The provision is the same as the one which appeared in the subcommittee print No. 2 of H. R. 6888, but which was stricken when the bill was reported to the Senate. The adoption of such a proposal would take care of a number of meritorious situations which have been contained in private immigration bills, but which cannot be handled in that manner.

Section 9 would amend the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended, by increasing the number of special nonquota immigrant visas available for eligible orphans from 4,000 to 9,000 and raise the cutoff date for eligibility from 10 years to 14 years. This provision is similar to S. 3570 which is now pending on the Senate Calendar.

Section 10 would amend the definition of the term "child" as used in titles I and II of the Immigration and Nationality Act to clarify the law in such manner that the illegitimate child would, in relation to his mother, enjoy the same status under the immigration laws as a legitimate child. This change is deemed necessary because under present administrative interpretation of the definition of "child" in the act, an illegitimate child may not be considered to be the child of his mother.

Section 11 would amend section 203 of the Immigration and Nationality Act as it relates to the spouses and children of aliens accorded first preference status under the quotas. Under the existing provision, spouses and children accompanying such first-preference aliens are accorded the same first-preference status. The amendment would accord first-preference status also to spouses and children following to join aliens granted the first-preference status.

Section 12 would authorize the issuance, under the regular provisions of the Immigration and Nationality Act after January 1, 1957, of the special nonquota immigrant visas which remain unissued under the Refugee Relief Act of 1953. The special nonquota visas could be issued to aliens within the special categories of refugees, expellees, and escapees and orphans set forth in sections 2, 4, and 5 of the Refugee Relief Act, subject to the numerical limitations applicable to each category. However, in the case of escapees, as defined in the Refugee Relief Act, the geographical limitations presently applicable would be removed, as well as the present limitations limiting the place of issuance of the escapee visas. The authorized overall number of special nonquota visas under the Refugee Relief Act would not be increased and the provision would have the effect of terminating the refugee-relief program as such.

The general effect of the provision would be: (1) To permit the issuance indefinitely of the unissued visas available under the Refugee Relief Act to eligible aliens under the various categories of refugees, escapees, etc., set forth in that act and within the numerical limitations fixed for each category, but with specific provision being made that such issuance of the visas would be by consular officers under the regular provisions of the Immigration and Nationality Act; and (2) the visas presently available to escapees in Western Germany, Berlin, Austria, the NATO countries, Turkey, Iran, and Sweden would be available to any escapee falling within the terms of the definition of an escapee regardless of his place of residence, and the class of escapees to whom visas could be issued would be enlarged. Thus, the 35,000 escapee visas available to escapees in Germany, Austria, and Berlin could be issued to any qualified escapee.

Mr. WATKINS. From a reading of the memorandum, Mr. President, it can easily be seen that only seven points are similar to the President's program. They are:

SIMILARITIES TO PRESIDENT'S PROGRAM

Section 2: Exclusion from United States of aliens who have committed or admit the commission of certain crimes. Somewhat similar to President's program, section 17 of S. 3168.

Section 3: Cancels mortgage on quotas which resulted from the Displaced Persons Act and the sheepherder laws. Substantially the same as President's program, section 1 (e) of S. 3170.

It must be remembered that the original sheepherders bill as reported from the Judiciary Committee canceled the mortgages on the Spanish quota of the previous sheepherder bills which have been enacted by Congress. Therefore, the principle we are talking about has already been used by those who oppose this measure because of the mortgage waiver provisions but who favor the sheepherders bill.

Section 4: Permits Attorney General to refrain from deporting displaced persons who obtained visas by misrepresenting identity and nationality. Substantially the same as President's program, section 7 of S. 3168.

Section 6: Permits waiver of fingerprinting of nonimmigrants. Substantially the same as President's program, section 4 of S. 3168.

Section 8: Permits expeditious naturalization of certain adopted children. Substantially the same as President's program, section 23 of S. 3168.

Section 10: Changes definition of illegitimate child so as to allow it privileges under immigration law if claiming through mother. Substantially same as President's program, section 13 of S. 3168. Fails to follow President's program of including certain adopted children in the definition.

Section 11: Authorizes first preference status to spouses and children of skilled alien if they are "following to join", as well as if accompanying, him. Substantially the same as President's program, section 15 of S. 3168.

In addition, the substitute amendment proposes, with respect to the refugee act, that the unused visas in Germany and Austria, to the extent of about 40,000—and that is about the only visas we have left, because they were not used, largely due to economic conditions in those countries—may be added to and used under the regular immigration act, and in that way permit the program to go forward.

The administration by the refugee relief program is done away with as of December 31 of this year.

Mr. President, some 40,000 people who have escaped from Iron Curtain countries will be able to get relief, similar to the relief we gave to NATO countries. All the Italian visas will be used, all the Greek visas will be used, as well as those in the Near East, and those in the Far East.

About all we have left which will be taken care of by the amendment and which is generally accepted by everyone are a few in Holland as well as the ones in Germany and Austria, which have not been used, in the class of escapees and expellees. The definitions are carried over.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WATKINS. I yield.

Mr. CARLSON. The senior Senator from Utah has on several occasions presented the President's program on immigration and naturalization. I should like to ask the Senator, if we vote for the substitute offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], whether it would take care of most of the President's recommendations.

Mr. WATKINS. It will take care of seven of them. I have very reluctantly agreed to go along and to work for the substitute. As the Senator from Illinois has explained, if we cannot get it all, at least we should move in the right direction. I appreciate the cooperation of the majority leader. I regret that the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, who is a member of the majority leader's party, did not get the information with respect to the Dirksen substitute. I tried to talk to the members of the Subcommittee on Immigration on this side of the aisle. I did not feel I had the assignment to talk to anyone on the other side of the aisle, except in a general way.

The substitute was worked out under the direction of one of the staff members of the Majority Policy Committee, with whom I have conferred a great deal. Members of the staff of the Subcommittee on Immigration also helped in the work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I should like to have 1 additional minute.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, the majority leader has suggested that I have been somewhat generous on the allotment of time. However, if it is a matter of a minute, I shall be glad to yield the minute to the Senator.

Mr. WATKINS. I merely wished to say that, so far as I am concerned, while I feel that the President's proposals should be accepted, and that they represent substantial progress, nevertheless, when we come to a practical situation such as confronts us now, people should be considered first. Therefore, if we bring in even only a few thousand people who have escaped from behind the Iron Curtain, and take off restrictions which are annoying but do not do us any good, we will accomplish something, at least. If I had not agreed to that course of action, I would never have been able to get consideration of this legislation by this body. The control was in the hands of the majority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has again expired.

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out section 5.

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, I am opposed to the proposed substitute for the bill H. R. 6888, primarily in regard to section 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. How much time does the Senator yield himself?

Mr. JENNER. I believe I have 30 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. JENNER. I yield myself 15 minutes. With the exception of section 5, I am in favor of most of the bill and believe it should be passed. It contains many good features. If the bill is passed with section 5 in it, because of the situation that exists in the House, we will lose all the good, humanitarian provisions in regard to orphans, sheepherders, and the tuberculosis section.

The proposed substitute, like the substitute proposed by the junior Senator from New York, does not come to the Senate with a report. Why? It has not been considered by the appropriate subcommittee or committee of the Senate. Why? It has no departmental recommendations and it likewise makes sweeping although less drastic changes in our immigration system than did the substitute offered by the junior Senator from New York.

Mr. President, the heart of our immigration system is and has been for many years the national origins quota system pursuant to which millions of aliens have gained admission to our shores and have become assimilated in our society. The theory underlying the national origins quota system is that we should apportion immigration visas to European countries in proportion to the historic population pattern of the United States so that we can preserve the cultural background of our society.

The national origins quota system was adopted after World War I, for two important reasons. Perhaps some of the Members of this body do not know what is back of this system.

It had long been apparent to serious observers after 1900 that the United States faced a period of great social stress with problems which we should find it difficult to solve, even if we maintained our earlier immigration policy. But that policy had been violently distorted from immigration by individuals and families who chose the hardships of exile into an organized mass movement bringing a million persons a year into our country, often with little enterprise on their part.

The closing of the American frontier, at the end of the 19th century, affected all social problems in the United States. We no longer had a reserve of unsettled lands to which families could migrate, and establish themselves in economic independence. We were rapidly approaching a period in which we should be face to face with the two problems which had plagued all earlier republics—the growing shortage of land and the growing numbers and influence of people without land or capital, dependent upon employment by others.

A great literature of warning and analysis was written on these subjects, even before World War I shattered the illusion of continuous progress. President Theodore Roosevelt wrote more striking and original comments on our social problems than did his fifth cousin.

Meanwhile immigrants who had become wealthy saw the possibility of organizing mass immigration of their compatriots, and the inflow rose higher and higher. We were admitting newcomers to the number of a million a year, mostly from areas far removed from Western Europe, which shared many of our political, economic, and family institutions. The costs of adjustment, which fell on our schools, our police systems, our city governments, our marginal workers, rose higher and higher.

With the end of World War I, vast numbers of rootless people turned their eyes toward America. Every ship carried its full quota. Every port city was overcrowded, every road leading to the ports was filled with people seeking to come to America to escape the burdens of reconstruction.

Something had to be done or the United States would have been inundated. After years of careful inquiry Congress decided on the formula that we now call the national origins quota. This meant that immigrants from each nationality would be admitted in direct ratio to the numbers of their nationality in our population, not in accordance with the numbers in foreign countries seeking admission.

One powerful argument in winning assent to the quota system was the overwhelming evidence that emigration from overcrowded areas does nothing to cure population pressure. New births keep the population of the old country at the same high level. Countries with a low standard of living have difficult problems but they can be met only by hard work in dealing with social problems people prefer not to face. We were under no obligation to transfer these problems to our soil.

The compromise we call the national origins formula was accepted as a compact which would dispute and conflict our national origins.

For this, Mr. President, we owe no apology to any nation. Our country has had and still has the most liberal immigration laws in the world. We have received a greater number of displaced persons and refugees than any other country in the world and because of certain liberalizing features of the present Immigration and Nationality Act, the numbers coming into our country steadily increase every year.

The proposed substitute, while not obviously destroying the national origins quota system, is a virtual overturn of the principles, and sets a precedent for complete destruction of the system. It would transfer from northern and Western Europe 18,500 quota numbers to the countries of southern and Eastern Europe, which received lower quotas than countries with larger contributions to our population and tradition. It is a radical departure from the theory of trying to maintain the cultural pattern of our immigration in accord with the composition of our population. It is of serious consequence to our historic American institutions and our American way of life.

Remember, Mr. President, since the Second World War, this country has already opened its gates to over a million refugees and displaced persons by way of special legislation of one kind or another, all in derogation of the historic pattern of our immigration policy. I do not impugn the dignity or worth of any society when I point out that our system for admitting immigrants should be geared to the cultural background of our own people.

I know, Mr. President, from my service on the Internal Security Subcommittee, of which I had the honor of being chairman in the previous Congress, that the Communist conspiracy directs continuous overtures toward those nationality blocs in this country which have an affinity to traditions and a society alien to the concepts of freedom upon which our Nation was built.

I say it is serious business for this Senate to so drastically revise the whole underlying theory of our immigration system with so little deliberation or consideration. This departure from the basic principles of our immigration system would be further extended by that provision of the substitute bill which would remove the mortgages on the quotas of certain countries because of the provisions of the Displaced Persons Act of 1948, as amended. Mr. President, under the provisions of the Displaced Persons Act of 1948, we brought into this country approximately one-half million displaced persons, virtually all of whom came from the low-quota countries of southern and eastern Europe. The law provided that up to 50 percent of the quotas of countries from which these people came could be charged in any one year, but that they should all be charged against the appropriate quotas for some years. Now, the substitute bill would sweep away those quota charges which were made to help people who, in fact, did emigrate to the United States and who are here now as part of our society. The effect of this is not only to increase immigration to this country by approximately another one-half million, but also to further the violation of the basic policy of our country under the national origins quota system. This basic policy of our immigreation system would be further violated by the proposal of the substitute bill to transfer for use under the general immigration law some 50,000 unused quota numbers originally set up to be used under the so-called Refugee Relief Act.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield?

Mr. JENNER. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. How does the distinguished Senator from Indiana arrive at the figure of half a million?

Mr. JENNER. It is the same number that would be brought in under the Displaced Persons Act.

Mr. PASTORE. Is the Senator's amendment directed to that particular provision?

Mr. JENNER. I am going over the whole bill. I am not opposing anything except section 5.

Mr. PASTORE. Will the Senator admit that so far as section 5 is concerned, the section which he desires to strike by his amendment, it concerns an optimum of 18,000?

Mr. JENNER. The figure is 18,000.

I remember all too well, Mr. President, the deliberations of the Judiciary Committee, the numerous conferences of that committee and the House committee at the time of passage of the Refugee Relief Act. At that time, it was emphasized, and by unanimous action of both committees it was written into the reports, that there would be no extensions of the provisions of the Refugee Relief Act. The numbers prescribed in that act were to be maximum numbers and not necessarily to be used.

Of course, Mr. President, as everyone knows who has worked on that legislation, it is not and never was intended solely as an act for the relief of refugees. The fact is that most of the people who have come to our shores via this legislation are not and never have been refugees. This act was likewise an assault upon our basic immigration policy. The offense will be compounded if we now transfer, for use under the general immigration laws, quota numbers which were initially allocated under the Refugee Relief Act. Mr. President, there can be no point at which those who seek to revise our immigration laws would be satisfied. Notwithstanding the fact that the Immigration and Nationality Act is the most liberal immigration act in the history of this country and that this country is the greatest immigration receiving country in the world, the cry is always for more, more, and more. Europe's surplus population is said to be increasing by millions every year and in Asia the surpluses are of fantastic proportions. There are those, Mr. President, who apparently feel that they can solve the problems of Europe and Asia by transporting them to this country and, further, that we have some kind of duty to do so. Likewise, Mr. President, there are certain hyphenated American groups in this country whose principal allegiance and interest are in the welfare of some foreign nation and not in the interest of what is best for this country. Curiously enough, it is earnestly urged that somehow or other we will forward the interest of our foreign policy by breaking down our protective immigration system.

Suggestions are made in the corridors that we must break down our immigration system and parcel out more and more visas to certain countries, if we are to please the nationality blocs in great urban centers which control a large number of election votes. Mr. President, in my humble judgment, if this were true, it would be the strongest argument that can be posed for the maintenance of the national origins quota system, so that our immigration shall include a minimum of recruits to such blocs, whose interests are alien to those of this Nation.

Mr. President, on May 27, 1953, the Immigration Subcommittee under the then chairmanship of the Senator from Utah, Mr. WATKINS, conducted hearings on legislation dealing with the refugee problem. During the course of the testimony on that legislation by a representative of the American Legion, the record reveals the following statements by the Senator from Utah [Mr. WATKINS]:

> In connection with your statement, I would like to say to you that the chairman of this committee voted for the McCarran Act and supported it and defended it in speeches only very recently and I am still very much in favor of it as a permanent immigration policy of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Indiana has expired.

Mr. JENNER. I yield myself 3 more minutes.

What has happened, Mr. President, to cause the distinguished Senator from Utah to change his position respecting this basic law which he would now undermine? I say that if the pattern of our basic Immigration Act was sound 3 years ago as a permanent immigration policy of the United States, it is sound today.

Let me emphasize that the proposals which I have been discussing are not minor refinements of the law, but strike at the heart of our entire immigration policy which is built upon the national origins quota formula.

Recently it has been the fashion to criticize or apologize for the national origins formula, but no solid arguments have been raised against it.

I was profoundly shocked to discover that one source of criticism of our immigration policy comes from NATO, whose officials apparently share the view widespread among collectivists internationalists that nations do not have the right to choose who may or may not come to live within their borders.

Lord Ismay, in his report on "NATO, the First Five Years" says the NATO Permanent Council is engaged in a study of surpluses and shortages of manpower, and ways to "facilitate labor mobility between their countries." That means immigration policy, and it means the United States.

A few lines later Lord Ismay, speaking of the 1953 law to admit 209,000 extra immigrants, says:

> This action followed a recommendation of President Eisenhower which stressed the United States interest in strengthening the Atlantic Community.

The United Nations has more than once raised the issue of whether the U. N. should take up the question of immigration limits as a form of discrimination against minorities, forbidden by the U. N. provisions on human rights.

If NATO is going to be made a single territory for the migration of people, or if we have signed away under U. N. our right to decide who may become an American, it is time we all know where we are.

If Congress wishes to abandon the national origins formula, let us do so openly, with a record vote. But let us close the door on the insidious practice of introducing one exemption after another until nothing is left of the compact.

I wonder, Mr. President, if Mr. and Mrs. America, out at the crossroads of this land, would understand why the Senate would pass, in the closing hours of the Congress, legislation so hurriedly proposed, legislation which would drastically alter our basic immigration policy.

Mr. President, in the name of the great unorganized Americans of this country, I urge the Senate to defeat section 5, at least, which strikes at the basic national origins quotas.

With section 5 removed, I feel certain there will be no objection to the bill. The other features are noncontroversial; they are humanitarian; they would do much good. But I fear that the entire bill may be lost if section 5 remains in it. I hope the Senate will see fit to strike out that section.

I ask for a division on the vote.

Mr. President, how much time have I remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana has 11 minutes remaining.

Mr. JENNER. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, first of all, the way of the conciliator is hard. I am delighted that 12 of the 13 sections in the bill seem to have approval, at least so far as it is expressed by the Members of the Senate who heard the discussion this morning.

That narrows the issue to section 5, which is a modification of the Immigration and Nationality Act. I want to emphasize what the distinguished junior Senator from Rhode Island said. The quotas under the Origins Act are 154,200-plus. If, however, those countries used their quotas, there would be no unused quota numbers. Under the bill, they could, however, be issued under section 5. So we have made that overture to the world; we have assigned those quotas. They aggregate 154,000-plus in a single year. If the countries which are entitled to those numbers use them, the quotas will not be increased by a single migrant under section 5.

Mr. JENNER. What would occur under section 5 would be to interfere with our basic immigration policy and perhaps permit certain groups to come in who would disrupt our society.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield 1 additional minute on the bill to permit the distinguished Senator from Kentucky to make a statement in reply to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. CLEMENTS. The only matter actually in controversy today is the distribution of the 18,500 persons, is it not?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is correct.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Is it not true that very likely no more than three-fourths of the 18,500 numbers will be used, because many countries can use the number which is allotted to them now, if there are persons in those countries who desire to come into the United States; and as to the countries which do not use the additional 40 percent of the 18,500 those numbers could be reallocated under the act to any other country?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is correct. As a matter of fact, it is doubtful whether the numbers would reach those proportions.

Mr. CLEMENTS. So instead of talking about 18,500, we are actually talking about 13,000 or 14,000, at the most.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I express my appreciation to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CLEMENTS], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BUSH], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PASTORE], the cosponsors of this proposal.

I know the bill is not agreeable to every Senator, but I think it represents the best compromise which can be reached. I certainly hope the substitute offered by the Senator from Illinois will be adopted, and that no amendments which would whittle it away will prevail.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, I want to join in the commendation of the sponsors of this liberalized substitute for H. R. 6888. As has already been said, the proposed substitute is a modest and moderate attempt to remove some of the most flagrant abuses under our immigration and refugee laws. I hope it will be adopted. I think it is imperative that it be adopted. We ought to do much more.

I am sure, Mr. President, that my colleagues are aware of my long-time interest in, and sponsorship of, several measures designed to liberalize our immigration and refugee laws.

Mr. President, on March 4, 1955, I introduced a bill, Senate bill 1315, that would, if adopted, do all, and more, than the amendment now before us. I ask unanimous consent to have a statement I have prepared, referring to Senate bill 1315, printed at this point in my remarks. I make the same request concerning a related press release issued March 4, 1955.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IMMIGRATION REFORMS

Mr. President, S. 1315, a bill introduced on behalf of myself, the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], and the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], and the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCNAMARA], is a bill to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act. It is a bill designed partially to reintroduce the spirit of humanitarian compassion and democracy into our immigration laws.

The Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952 was not a controversial issue in the recent election campaign. Candidates of both majority political parties made clear their understanding that our present laws were in some respects discriminatory and undesirable. The President of the United States has declared that to be his position. Our effort with this bill is to correct some of those discriminatory and undesirable portions.

Our bill does not constitute a complete revision of the present Immigration and Nationality Act. It does not go as far as I would like it to go. However, it is a fair beginning on which reasonable men of both parties can agree at this time. It would ameliorate some of the harsh provisions of existing law, making the law more flexible and adaptable to change in world conditions. It would aid us in carrying out our foreign policy objectives and thus help us to combat communism. It will also go far toward relieving the continuous pressure for emergency immigration legislation.

We introduce the bill in the spirit of modest progress and progressive change. We introduce it in the hope that it can represent a consensus of nonpartisan opinion designed to help democratize our immigration and nationality laws.

More specifically, the bill accomplishes the following:

1. Section 1 restores to professors eligibility for nonquota status (which they enjoyed prior to the McCarran Act) if a university requests their services. This proposed change is based on a feeling of confidence that our universities will select only well-qualified persons for employment on their teaching staffs. It, therefore abolishes the unnecessary red tape and delay involved in requiring universities to obtain clearance orders from the local employment service and then proving to the Immigration Service that the professor whose immigration is being sponsored is needed urgently in the United States. My amendment in no way changes the security requirements of our laws as they concern all who wish to enter the United States.

2. Section 2 would grant to certain adopted children the immigration status enjoyed by natural children. This change would have two important effects: (a) it would make it unnecessary for adopted children of American citizens, in many instances of servicemen, to wait their turn on the quota or, as happens so often, to require that Congress pass a special bill on their behalf; (b) it would make adopted children of aliens eligible for the same quota status or quota preference as that enjoyed by natural children, thus avoiding the heartbreaking situations in which adopted children force their family to delay their trip to the United States or have to be left behind.

As section 2 applies only to children adopted prior to their reaching the age of 14 years, and as it specifically excepts children adopted solely for the purpose of obtaining immigration preference for them, the danger of abuse is avoided.

3. Section 3 repeals the provision of the present law under which some quotas, generally those which are needed most urgently, are "mortgaged" for decades, in some cases even for centuries.

4. Section 4 ends one of the racially discriminatory features of the present law. It abolishes the racial ancestry blood test for persons "attributable by as much as one-half of (their) ancestry to a people or peoples indigenous to the Asia-Pacific triangle." Henceforth, all visa applicants would be classified only according to their place of birth.

5. While section 4 still retains the national-origins principle, sections 5 and 6 would go far toward ameliorating its harsh effects. They do that without raising the existing overall quota ceiling of about 154,000. They simply provide that if, in any given year, no takers are found for any portion of these 154,000 members, that portion is not declared forfeited, as under present law, but is made available during the following year, without regard to national origins to (a) persons of special skills, (b) close relatives of citizens or alien residents, (c) persecutees, and (d) other groups of persons whose emigration to the United States would further our foreign policy.

Another change effected by this section concerns the problem of family unification. Under present law, a person qualifying under the national-need preference may enter this country with his wife and minor children, all of whom are covered by the preference. A person qualifying for preference as the brother of an American citizen, however, must leave his wife and children behind and can get a preference for them only after he has arrived in this country. Under the change provided for by this section, the preference right shall apply not only to the person directly affected, but also to his spouse and minor children so as to enable families to enter this country as single units.

6. It has often been said that a man who tries to import a sack of beans into the United States and finds that it has been excluded, has the right of appeal, but a man who wants to bring his mother over, and finds that she has been denied a visa, has no such right. Section 7 of my bill is designed to change that situation. It is designed to modify the anomaly of the present Immigration Act under which authority for the acts of the Immigration Service (which acts in many instances through the Board of Immigration Appeals) is concentrated in the hands of the Attorney General, while authority for the acts of the Consular Service is diffused among the numerous consuls, each of whom is the final arbiter in the visa application cases before him. Section 7 concentrates responsibility in a Visa Review Board appointed by the Secretary of State, to which the sponsors of prospective immigrants may be allowed to appeal. This Board would assure that visa regulations are enforced uniformly throughout the world and would also safeguard against irresponsible and capricious acts by individual consular officers.

7. The concept of justice tempered with mercy is a part of our administration of law. It is deeply imbedded in our religious traditions. It was in conformity with that concept that Congress long ago gave the Attorney General discretionary authority to suspend deportation in deserving cases. That authority was severely curtailed by the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952, the Senate majority report on which states harshly and cruelly:

"Hardship or even unusual hardship to the alien or to his spouse, parent, or child is not sufficient to justify suspension of deportation."

Under section 8 of this bill the standards for suspension of deportation contained in the law in effect prior to the adoption of the McCarran Act are restored. As suspension of deportation will only be granted in the discretion of the Attorney General and only with the concurrence of Congress, I am certain that there is no danger of this humanitarian provision being abused.

8. Sections 9 and 10 are purely procedural.

Our proposal is a reasonable one. It provides a meeting ground on which those of us who opposed the 1952 act can unite with those who support it with certain reservations.

Senator Humphrey Asks Revision of Injustices in Immigration Laws

Revision of the Immigration and Nationality Act "to partially reintroduce the spirit of humanitarian compassion and democracy into our immigration laws" will be asked by Senator HUBERT H. HUMPHREY, Democrat, of Minnsota, today in introducing a bill cosponsored by Senator DOUGLAS, Democrat, of Illinois, Senator KENNEDY, Democrat, of Massachusetts, and Senator MCNAMARA, Democrat, of Michigan.

"Our bill does not constitute a complete revision of the present Immigration and Nationality Act, but it does remedy some of the inequities and weaknesses of the present law," Senator HUMPHREY said.

"Both major political parties have made clear their understanding that our present immigration laws are in some respects discriminatory and undesirable," Senator HUMPHREY said. "Our effort with this bill is to correct some of those discriminatory and undesirable portions.

"It does not go as far as I would like it to go. However, it is a fair beginning on which reasonable men of both parties can agree. It would relieve some of the harsh provisions of existing law, making the law more flexible and adaptable to change in world conditions. It would aid us in carrying out our foreign policy objectives and thus help us to combat communism."

Among changes proposed are:

1. Pooling of unused immigration quotas.
2. Restoring to professors and scientists eligibility for nonquota status if a university requests their services.
3. Granting certain adopted children the immigration status enjoyed by natural children in order to avoid breaking up families.
4. Eliminating prolonged "mortgaging" of quotas for future decades when they are now urgently needed.
5. Eliminate racial discrimination.
6. Provide preference rights to protect family unification.
7. Creating Visa Review Board to grant prospective immigrants the right to appeal.
8. Restoring discretionary authority to suspend deportation in deserving cases to provide for justice tempered with mercy.

"We introduced the bill in the spirit of modest progress and progressive change," Senator HUMPHREY said. "We introduce it in the hope that it can represent a consensus of nonpartisan opinion designed to help democratize our immigration and nationality laws."

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, earlier this year I testified before the Senate Subcommittee on Refugees, Escapees, and Expellees, concerning S. 1794, a bill to amend the Refugee Relief Act of 1953. Senators will note the relevance of that bill and of my remarks then to the business now at hand. I ask unanimous consent that my testimony just mentioned, as well as two press releases issued on January 9, 1956, and March 12, 1956, be printed at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HUBERT H. HUMPHREY BEFORE THE SENATE SUBCOMMITTEE ON REFUGEES, ESCAPEES, AND EXPELLEES ON S. 1794, CONTAINING AMENDMENTS TO THE REFUGEE RELIEF ACT OF 1953

Mr. Chairman, I am glad to have this opportunity to testify before your committee in support of S. 1794, a bill to amend the Refugee Relief Act of 1953. The bill was introduced by Senators LEHMAN, DOUGLAS, KEFAUVER, and myself and contains amendments presently being considered by your subcommittee. I understand you are also considering S. 2113, the bill introduced by Senator WATKINS and others which includes proposals made by President Eisenhower, and S. 2149, which the chairman introduced this week. I will direct my remarks today primarily to the bill before the committee which I have cosponsored, S. 1794, but will also make some comparison of its amendments with those of the other two pending bills.

We all are gravely concerned by the situation that has brought about the need for these amendments. Our intention in passing the Refugee Relief Act 2 years ago was to give new life to those people—displaced by war and in flight from oppression—who had no homes and little hope. Many of them had spent years in refugee camps. Others had fled from behind the Iron Curtain in hope of finding freedom and new lives. America stood as a symbol of hope to them, for they knew that we had always welcomed refugees from oppression.

It was in this humanitarian spirit that the refugee relief program was proposed to the Congress. We wished to give hope for a new life to some of these uprooted people. And we knew from our own experience that people could come to this country and, in building new lives, would help build the United States.

But the bill as it was finally passed had written into it many restrictions which pleased only those who do not welcome new Americans to our shores. Many of us warned at the time that the restrictions might make the refugee relief program nearly unworkable. In considering the history of this act, we cannot help but wonder whether a certain reluctance to make it work has not compounded the difficulties.

The unfortunate failure of the refugee program is a matter of record. The distinguished chairman of this subcommittee presented to the Senate last Monday the most recent figures of accomplishment under this act. In the nearly 2 years since its enactment, 31,919 visas have been issued. When we compare this to the number of 209,000 refugees and escapees that we finally authorized to be admitted we see just how badly the act and its administrators have failed in carrying out its humanitarian purpose.

I would like to point out that this failure does not only mean heartbreak but embitterment to the 209,000 who might have been admitted under this program and to the millions of others who had hoped that they might be among the 209,000. It has serious consequences for the position and prestige of the United States in the world. Here again—as in the Immigration and Naturalization Act—the United States presents itself to the world as a nation that holds itself above other peoples, that does not welcome people from other nations to our country even when they are displaced and homeless and in need of our assistance. Most of us do not feel that this is the true spirit of America. Quite the contrary. But such iniquitous restrictions as those written into the Immigration Act and the Refugee Act speak louder than any of our protestations of good will and good faith. We cannot convince others in the world that we, in our hearts, are friends and equals of all people, everywhere, when our legislation embodies xenophobia and racist discrimination that proclaim the opposite. I will not labor this point. But I think that this consequence of our immigration and relief programs is of such gravity for us in our relations with other peoples and other countries that it is of vital importance in any consideration of the Refugee Relief Act.

This failure of the Refugee Relief Act was taken with much complacency by the administration until the recent unpleasantness in the State Department. But we have at last gotten an admission from the President that all has not been going as it should with this program. I welcome those proposals that President Eisenhower sent to Congress on May 27 and am glad to see that he agrees with many of the recommendations made in the Lehman-Humphrey-Douglas-Kefauver amendments introduced more than a month earlier.

At this time, I would like to go over the amendments proposed in Senate bill 1794, and indicate how they would improve the Refugee Relief Act.

First, the administration of this program would be placed in an office within the Department of State to be known as the Office of the Administrator of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953. This Administrator would be responsible directly to the Secretary of State. Surely this program is sufficiently important and certainly complex enough that it requires the attention of a full-time administrator. If we are to achieve the humanitarian goal intended by the Refugee Relief Act it must be administered with greater vigor than has so far been the case. Continuing its administration as a part-time function of the Administrator of the Bureau of Security and Consular Affairs will not allow such administration. There is no reason why the refugee relief program should be administered as one function of an administrator who has many other duties. To make the Refugee Relief Act a vigorous, effective means of bringing deserving people to our country it should receive the full attention of an administrator responsible solely to the Secretary of State. The recent appointment of Mr. Gerety as Deputy Administrator of the Refugee Relief Program does not correct this basic defect. I urge most strongly that the subcommittee support amendment of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953 along the lines stated in section 10 of S. 1794.

The attitude of some of those who have been administering this law seems to be that the number of admissions authorized under this act is merely a permissive figure—that they can issue visas up to that number, but it is not necessary to try to attain the goal of the maximum number of entries under the refugee relief program. That was surely not the intent of those of us who voted to support this program. When we consider how many refugees there are—numbers far beyond the help of this program—it seems clear that we should be striving to permit entry into the United States of every single person authorized under the act. Partly what is needed here is a change of attitude on the part of those dealing with this program—its administrators and the consular officials abroad charged with carrying out some of its functions. They should strive to achieve the maximum number of admissions allowable under this program and look to that number as a humanitarian goal to be sought and attained.

But, with only a year and a half left before the termination date of the Refugee Relief Act, the goal is far off. At the present rate it is doubtful that it will be reached by December 31, 1956. Even if we accept the present Administrator's analogy to an "assembly line"—and I do not care for the comparison of refugees to automobiles—it does not appear that the assembly line is going to pick up sufficient speed, now that the initial period of tooling is completed, to reach the full humanitarian goal within the time limit set by the law. For this reason, a way of extending the time for the effectiveness of this act should be sought. No one should be denied entry under the refugee relief program simply because of an arbitrary cutoff date. An attempt is made to utilize all of the authorizations for visas by an amendment proposed in our bill. This amendment provides that any visas not issued by December 31, 1956, shall be redistributed among those categories under section 4 of the act that have been filled but still have requests pending for visas. Under this provision, the termination date would be extended to December 31, 1960, to allow time for action on these reallocated visa authorizations. The reallocation and extension of time will permit the refugee relief program to achieve its goal in permitting the maximum number of persons authorized under the act to enter the country. I strongly urge the subcommittee that it adopt this proposal as one of the amendments to the Refugee Relief Act of 1953.

There are additional countries that should be added to the act since its passage in 1953. Refugees now residing in Spain and North Africa should be eligible for admission under the refugee relief program. There are refugees residing in both of these places, and to permit them entry under the act our bill would increase the quota for refugees now residing in North Atlantic Treaty countries by 15,000 so as to include these people. This additional number would raise the overall authorization from 209,000 to 224,000 refugees eligible for admission. But I point out that this is still considerably fewer than the number of 240,000 that the President proposed when he originally made recommendations for this program to the Congress.

Some of the requirements of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953 have made it difficult and even impossible for otherwise highly qualified people to be admitted to this country under the program. One such requirement is the assurance that must be given by a citizen or citizens of the United States that the refugee will have employment and be able to support himself once he arrives in this country. The regulation provides that each such assurance shall be the personal obligation of the individual citizen or citizens making it. There is a further requirement that the employment and housing be listed with the Government so as to show that employment and housing is available to the refugee being considered for admission under the program. As negotiations for admission have nearly always been protracted, such a requirement has placed an impossible burden on those citizens who have sought to assist refugees in coming to this country. It is not surprising that this discouraging aspect of the program has become a real roadblock to its operation. I feel, that it is asking entirely too much of our citizens to expect them to hold employment and housing open a year or longer while waiting for a refugee to be cleared and admitted under this act. Voluntary agencies—with whose fine work we are all familiar—have been ready and anxious to assist in helping people qualify under the program in coming to the United States. But the restrictions in the act that these assurances must be given by individual citizens has prevented the agencies from taking part. There is no reason why these groups should not help refugees find suitable employment and housing so they can qualify for admission under the Refugee Relief Act. They did just such work in connection with the displaced persons program and performed a most useful and humanitarian service. The amendment contained in our bill would permit them to participate in the present program in a similar way. These voluntary agencies should certainly be allowed to give assurances of employment and housing—as they are willing to do—and so assist refugees in qualifying under the refugee relief program.

There is a similar provision in the Watkins proposal, S. 2113, but I do not think it is spelled out quite so clearly as in S. 1794. I am glad to see that the bill of the chairman, Senator LANGER, Senate bill 2149, makes another recommendation along these lines. As I understand it, the chairman's bill would permit other responsible persons who have resided in the United States for at least 2 years to give such assurances. The amendment would also extend this act to include dependent parents, stepparents, and adoptive parents, I believe, and this is an equally worthy proposal that merits the consideration of the subcommittee. But I am sure the chairman is not unaware of the virtues of his own bill, so I shall not dwell on them at length.

To return to the Lehman-Humphrey-Kefauver amendments, there are further requirements of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953 that have made it difficult or impossible for some people to qualify for admission though their character and skills are such that we would surely be grateful to have them as new citizens. The stipulation that a completely documented history of the past 2 years of the refugee's life must be supplied before issuance of a visa has proved a particularly onerous requirement. For those who somehow succeed in escaping from behind the Iron Curtain this regulation usually means that they must sit for 2 years in a refugee camp in order to provide themselves with a 2-year history.

Such a procedure defeats the purpose of the Refugee Relief Act and should be done away with. The present security requirements of the act, as well as of the Immigration Act which must also be met, are more than enough to insure that visas will not be granted any persons whose purpose in seeking admission might not be to the best interests of the United States. I note that the amendments proposed by Senator WATKINS, S. 2113, would also repeal this requirement of a 2-year history. I trust that the subcommittee will concur that this regulation should be removed from the law.

A similar requirement that has been almost impossible to fulfill for many of the refugees and especially those who have fled from behind the Iron Curtain is that of a valid, unexpired passport. The inclusion of such a requirement in a bill to aid refugees—many of whom are stateless—would be farcical, if it were not so tragic. Both the Watkins bill and our bill would relax this requirement.

A certificate guaranteeing readmission to the country in which the visa is obtained is coupled with this passport requirement. This is often impossible to obtain; some countries just do not give such certificates. Such an unrealistic provision should be eliminated from the law. The requirements of the Immigration Act covering necessary travel documents and clearances are more than sufficient to protect the interests of the United States.

There are some other changes that should be made in the Refugee Relief Act to make it more workable. As President Eisenhower said in his message to Congress urging many of these same changes in the law:

"The act limits the term 'refugee' to those who have not ben 'firmly resettled'. Experience has shown that this provision tends to exclude the hard-working and the adjustable, the very people we want most as new citizens."

All three bills before the subcommittee attempt to improve upon this definition so as not to exclude those very emigrants we would welcome. Our bill would include both refugees and escapees under this term and avoid a distinction made in the present bill that has led to confusion in interpretation and delay.

Another simple change in terminology recommended in our bill, S. 1794, is the dropping of the modifying word "ethnic" wherever it appears in the bill, except where it is clearly needed—in the case of German expellees. There seems to be no purpose for its inclusion at other places in the bill and it has connotations that are not in keeping with our traditions.

The priorities set up under section 12 of the Refugee Relief Act turned out to be unworkable and have led to delay and confusion in the administration of the act. Apparently just what was intended by these priorities has never been clarified. Our bill would repeal the entire section 12, and I think that by so doing administration of the act would be accelerated.

The provision of the Refugee Relief Act permitting the admission of 4,000 orphans restricts this quota to orphans under 10 years of age. There does not seem to be any good reason why orphans older than 10 should not be admitted under this program. Senator LANGER's bill, Senator WATKINS' bill, and our bill would all raise this age limit. Senator LEHMAN in his testimony before this committee a few days ago suggested that 13 might be the oldest age limit that could be fixed for eligibility without necessitating full security clearance. I am sure that the committee will give every consideration to the desirability of raising the age limit to whatever age seems most feasible for best admitting orphans qualifying under this section of the program.

Under the adjustment-of-status section of the act, for persons already in the United States, both bills would amend the act to relax the present requirement that a person otherwise eligible must also have entered the country legally. President Eisenhower said in his message:

"I recommend to the Congress that the section be amended to permit the Attorney General to waive this requirement in meritorious cases where the person is otherwise qualified under this act. It is estimated that this would not involve more than a few hundred cases, but in the case of each individual human being such an amendment would satisfy the beneficent purposes of the Congress."

An additional liberalization of this section is suggested in the Watkins bill—that the number of people who might so have their status in this country adjusted be raised from 5,000 to 10,000. This is a most worthwhile proposal which I wish to support, though it is not in our original bill.

There are three other amendments in the Watkins bill not contained in S. 1794 that I consider worthy of adoption to improve the Refugee Relief Act of 1953. One would authorize admission of 1,000 persons who would otherwise be excluded as suffering from tuberculosis. These would be persons who are members of families and whose inability to be admitted to the United States might otherwise break up the family or prevent them from taking advantage of the act. As President Eisenhower said in making this same recommendation:

"We in the United States no longer regard tuberculosis with dread. Our treatment standards are high and modern treatment is increasingly effective. The United States, to its own benefit, could permit many of these families, within the existing numerical limitations, to enter under safeguards provided by the Attorney General and the Surgeon General of the United States assuring protection of the public health and adequate treatment of the afflicted individual and also assuring that such individual will not become a public charge. I urge that the Congress give consideration to amendments that would enable this to be done."

May I join with the President in support of this measure that might prevent the tragic separation of families that have already undergone the trials of being broken apart from relatives and friends. This is a proposal in keeping with the finest spirit in which the refugee relief program was originally conceived and suggest that we can still return to that spirit in carrying it out, though the time is late.

Another amendment of the Watkins bill that I wish to support is the change in wording recommended in section 2 of S. 2113. This relatively minor change would make a great deal of difference to refugee families granted admission under the refugee relief program. Under the statute as it now reads, wives, children, and others eligible to enter the country accompanying someone entering on a refugee relief visa, must all come together, accompanying the senior member of the family. The proposal contained in the Watkins bill, which simply adds the words "or following to join them," would allow members of a family to follow later when for one reason or another they could not yet accompany the head of the family being admitted under this program. I urge that this provision be included in any amendments that the subcommittee sees fit to recommend to improve the Refugee Relief Act. It is a most worthy modification.

There is one final proposal in the Watkins bill in support of which I wish to join. That is the addition made in subsection (c) of section 11, which provides that "the eligibility of an applicant under this act shall be the exclusive responsibility of the consular office." Presently this eligibility is subject to the review of the immigration officer whose responsibility should rest solely in the application of the Immigration Act to the applicant. This authority of review by the immigration officer has resulted in conflicting rulings by the separate officers charged with this responsibility and has been one of the sources of delay in administering the Refugee Relief Act. By so clarifying the act that the responsibility for administering the Refugee Relief Act resides solely in the consular officer much of this confusion and delay should be eliminated. This will certainly improve the administration of the program. I strongly support this delimitation of authority and hope that it will be made a part of any recommendations for amending the Refugee Relief Act of 1953.

May I come back again to a proposal which I just mentioned in passing, but which I wish to support as it embodies the humanitarian spirit of the Refugee Relief Act. I refer to the amendments of the chairman, contained in S. 2149, that would extend eligibility under this program to dependent parents, stepparents, and adoptive parents, as well as those who would be presently eligible for admission by accompanying the head of a family with a refugee relief visa. Here again, like the amendments we have discussed, these recommendations would in many cases mean the difference between a family being able to take advantage of the program and come to the United States or having to stay on in some dreary refugee camp or makeshift home in order to avoid parting from a loved member of the family.

These seem minor matters when we are drawing up a bill affecting hundreds of thousands, but we must never forget how much just such modifications as these can mean to the individuals whose whole lives turn upon them. I wish to support the amendments of the chairman, as they extend the benefits of this program in a way that should not have been overlooked.

In conclusion, I would just like to say that the amendments being considered by this subcommittee give new hope for the Refugee Relief Act of 1953 and those who should be helped by it to come to the United States and become useful citizens. I shall not refer again to the way in which this program has been hampered and almost blocked by those who do not wish to see it work. I would like to reiterate, however, that the success of this program is important not only for what it means to the lives of those many thousands we hope to assist by it, but that its success is important in the world for the good name of the United States itself.

In part, we are already known to the rest of the world for the quota system upon which the Immigration and Naturalization Act is built. While we have yet to correct the inequities that are written into that law, here, in amending the Refugee Relief Act, we can present a better face to the world—our true face. Let us show the world the spirit that truly moves our people. Let us extend the hand of welcome to those whose lives have been disrupted and whose homes have been lost. I trust that the subcommittee will give careful consideration to the amendments before it. I hope you will agree with me that they are worthy of our support.

JANUARY 9, 1956.

SENATOR HUMPHREY SEEKS TO AVERT YEAR-END CUTOFF ON REFUGEE QUOTAS

Extension of the cutoff date on existing refugee quotas was urged by Senator HUBERT H. HUMPHREY, Democrat, Minnesota, today to keep 44,000 refugees from being "denied admission to the United States because of the failure of the administration to administer the program properly."

In a letter to Senator WILLIAM LANGER, chairman of the Subcommittee on Refugees, Escapees, and Expellees, Senator HUMPHREY called attention to the recent public admission of Pierce J. Gerety, administrator of the program, that he would not be able to issue the 209,000 entry permits authorized under a special 3-year program before the present deadline of December 31.

"It would be a callous disregard of the misery in which many of these refugees have been living for long, weary years if we were to let more than one-fifth of the visas authorized by the Refugee Relief Act be wasted," Senator HUMPHREY said. "That the administration could have administered the act in such a way that it now must threaten to close the door on the hopes of many of these suffering people is a shocking disregard of the humanitarian intent of the Congress in passing this act."

Text of Senator HUMPHREY's letter follows:

"The Honorable WILLIAM LANGER,
"United States Senate.

"DEAR SENATOR: I am sure you share my concern at the recent announcement by the director of the refugee relief program, Mr. Pierce J. Gerety, that he will not be able to issue the 209,000 entry permits authorized under the present law by the cutoff date of December 31 this year. Mr. Gerety estimates that about 44,000 refugees will be denied admission because of the failure of the administration to administer the program properly.

"As I stated in testifying before your committee last June on amendments to the Refugee Relief Act, the attitude of some of those administering the law seems to have been that the number of admissions authorized under the act is merely a permissive figure—that they can issue visas up to that number, but it is not necessary to make an effort to attain the goal of the maximum number of entries under the refugee relief program. That was surely not the intent of those of us who voted to support this program. When we consider how many refugees there are—numbers far beyond the help of this program—it seems clear that we should be concerned that every single person authorized may obtain the relief intended under the act.

"As you know, one of the amendments contained in S. 1794, introduced by Senators LEHMAN, DOUGLAS, KEFAUVER, and myself would extend the expiration date of the refugee relief program to December 31, 1960. Under this amendment any visas not issued by the end of this year would be redistributed among those categories under section 4 of the act that have been filled but still have requests pending for visas. This reallocation and extension of the time would permit the refugee relief program to achieve its goal in permitting the maximum number of persons authorized under the act to enter the country.

"I would, of course, desire most of all that your committee recommend the adoption of those amendments which I have already supported before your committee. But, in view of Mr. Gerety's admission that the Administration will not be able to meet its obligation of issuing all visas authorized under the Refugee Relief Act, I hope that at the very least the committee will recommend an extension of the termination date of the act beyond December 31, 1956. I cannot know precisely how much additional time the Refugee Relief Administration may need to complete the issuance of all 209,000 authorized visas, but I am sure that the committee could ascertain this and make a recommendation for the necessary extension.

"It would be a callous disregard of the misery in which many of these refugees have been living for long, weary years if we were to let more than one-fifth of the visas authorized by the Refugee Relief Act be wasted. That the administration could have administered the act in such a way that it now must threaten to close the door on the hopes of many of these suffering people is a shocking disregard of the humanitarian intent of the Congress in passing this act.

"I trust that the subcommittee will take prompt action to insure that sufficient time will be allowed for the issuance of all visas authorized under the Refugee Relief program.

"Thank you for your consideration of this matter.

"Sincerely,

"HUBERT H. HUMPHREY."

MARCH 12, 1956.

SENATOR HUMPHREY ASKS PRESIDENT TO SPEED UP REFUGEE RELIEF PROGRAM

Senator HUBERT H. HUMPHREY, Democrat, Minnesota, in a speech prepared for the Senate today calls on President Eisenhower to act immediately to save the Refugee Relief Act from "a disastrous failure."

Warning that the refugee program will fall 44,000 short of its 209,000-person goal by December 31 of this year, Senator HUMPHREY points out that the President "can and should make administrative changes that would expedite the processing of the refugee entry permits."

"Humanitarian considerations alone are not the only reason we must not allow the refugee relief program to fail," Senator HUMPHREY declared, calling attention to the increasingly effective "redefection" campaign which the Communists have been waging among refugees and escapees during recent months. "The Communists, through amnesties, letters from relatives, and intimidation, are attempting to influence escapees from behind the Iron Curtain to return to their homes.

"The refugee relief program must be an essential part of our foreign policy in an attempt to meet and counter the redefection campaign of the Communists," Senator HUMPHREY declares. Every redefection, he warns, is a victory for the Communists, for they exploit it to "prove" that life in the West is worse than behind the Iron Curtain.

Senator HUMPHREY cited the recommendations to the President made by voluntary agencies which have been assisting refugees in their efforts to come to the United States, and insisted that something be done to carry them out.

The Committee on the Refugee Relief Program of the American Council of Volunteer Agencies for Foreign Service recommended two major administrative changes to President Eisenhower, the Minnesota Senator discloses.

The 11 civic and church groups making up the committee urged the President to make arrangements for transporting refugees as the Congress intended in the Refugee Relief Act. This has been done in Europe, but not in the Near and Far East, although the number needing such transportation has been known to the State Department since last August.

Other recommendations of the voluntary agencies, Senator HUMPHREY points out, concern the cumbersome procedures for security processing instituted under the program. Emphasizing that the refugees being admitted were already subject to the rigorous security screening provided under the McCarran-Walter Act, Senator HUMPHREY charges that "a whole additional apparatus of security trappings has been erected on top of the already top heavy provisions of the Immigration and Nationality Act."

In addition to the recommendations of the voluntary agencies, Senator HUMPHREY cites the recommendations by the National Council of Churches of Christ to the Deputy Administrator of the Refugee Relief Act, Pierce J. Gerety. Senator HUMPHREY quotes Mr. Gerety as admitting last month that the refugee program was going to fall 44,000 visas short of its goal.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Finally, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a summary of the proposed substitute for H. R. 6888, which we are now discussing, be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROPOSED SUBSTITUTE FOR H. R. 6888 TO AMEND THE ACT OF SEPTEMBER 3, 1954

The proposed substitute for the bill H. R. 6888, amending the act of September 3, 1954, retains the provisions of the reported bill providing (a) for the admission of 350 sheepherders and their spouses and children; (b) for the removal of the mortgages against the Spanish quota under prior sheepherder acts; and (c) for the correction of a situation which exists in the case of certain aliens admitted under the Displaced Persons Act who are in a deportable status because of misrepresentations made with reference to their nationality or place of birth to avoid repatriation to Communist-controlled countries.

In addition, the substitute bill would add several provisions which would modify the immigration and nationality laws as follows:

1. Cancel mortgages on quotas established by the Displaced Persons Act. This will allow 8,000 new quotas annually to eastern European countries.

2. Provide a formula for the redistribution of approximately 18,500 unused quotas annually to those countries having less than an annual allotment of 7,000 quotas.

3. Authorize the issuance under the regular provisions of the Immigration and Nationality Act after January 1, 1957, of the special nonquota immigrant visas which remain unissued under the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended, to aliens within the special categories of refugees, expellees, and escapees set forth in section 4 of that act, subject to the numerical limitations applicable to each category. In the case of escapees, the geographical limitations presently applicable are removed, as well as the present limitations in connection with the place of issuance of visas to such escapees. The Refugee Relief Act of 1953 is not extended, nor is the authorized number of special nonquota visas increased.

4. Extend the period for the admission of refugee orphans and increase the allowable age from 10 to 14 years.

5. Admit approximately 1,200 tubercular immigrants.

6. Eliminate the fingerprinting requirement of the Immigration Act.

7. Provide for the expeditious naturalization of certain adopted children of United States citizens employed abroad.

8. Amend section 4 of the act of September 3, 1954, to extend the waiver of excludability in the case of a person convicted, or who admits the commission, of a crime involving moral turpitude which is classifiable as a "petty offense" to include an alien convicted on one occasion only of offenses which in the aggregate would constitute no more than a petty offense as defined in title 8 of the United States Code.

9. Correct a situation which exists in the case of certain aliens admitted under the Displaced Persons Act who are in a deportable status because of misrepresentations made with reference to their nationality or place of birth to avoid repatriation to Communist controlled countries.

10. Amend the definition of the term "child" as used in titles I and II of the Immigration and Nationality Act in such manner as to clarify the law so that the illegitimate child would, in relation to his mother, enjoy the same status under the immigration laws as a legitimate child.

11. Modify section 203 of the Immigration and Nationality Act to accord first preference status under the quotas to spouses and children "following to join" principal aliens who have been granted first preference, which is the same status presently accorded to spouses and children "accompanying" such principal aliens.

12. The purpose of section 13 is to allow for the adjustment of status of aliens who have been admitted to the United States as nonimmigrants in a diplomatic or semidiplomatic status, who have failed to maintain that status and who have been granted sanctuary by the Department of State.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I hope the proposed amendments will be accepted and I am especially hopeful that section 5 will be retained in the bill. I have listened to the arguments against the amendment. But frankly, it seems to me admitting 18,000 men and women from all parts of the world, especially from eastern and southern Europe, would be in keeping with the best traditions of the United States, would be of great assistance to our country, and would benefit the countries of Europe which may be concerned. The uniqueness of our country, it seems to me, Mr. President, can be directly attributed to the varied backgrounds of those who today are citizens of the United States. It seems to me that we will be harming ourselves, as well as depriving those desirous of coming to the United States, if we refuse to adopt section 5 and the other amendments proposed today to H. R. 6888.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I am going to yield 5 minutes, and I understand the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] is going to yield 5 minutes. I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the 10 minutes we may have a quorum call to notify Members.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I desire to commend those who have proposed the amendment to the Immigration Act. It is a step in the right direction. It will enable persons who are worthy, and who have no other place to go to come into this country.

Furthermore, if there are unused quotas, an opportunity will be afforded to persons in countries that have used their quotas to enter this country.

For that reason I most sincerely hope the Senate will adopt the amendment to the Immigration Act, and that the proposal to strike section 5 from the bill will be rejected.

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I do not always find myself completely in accord with the Senator from Indiana. However, this is one time when I feel the proposal he makes is so thoroughly in line with the best interests of the country and with orderly procedure in the Senate of the United States that I strongly support his motion to strike section 5 from the pending amendment.

I am amazed to hear Senators say that if section 5 is stricken from the bill, we may as well not have a bill; that we shall simply have a hollow shell. That assertion does not appear to be in accord with the facts. First, there will be 8,000 persons admitted annually under the amendment of the displaced persons bill. That is certainly not to be disregarded from any point of view. There will be 5,000 orphans who will come in under the Refugee Act, and that is a group for which I have been particularly strong all along. The Senator from Minnesota, who is now present on the floor, will remember that after his original amendment relating to orphans had been rejected, I helped him line up support to reconsider the matter, so that orphans could be brought into this country under the displaced persons bill.

There are other important humanitarian changes involved. I am for every one of these humanitarian measures which have already been mentioned, and I am not going to cover them again, but they have to do with the lives of persons who have been singularly discriminated against under technical provisions of the law, and who will, under the amendment, if it is adopted, be given a chance to come into this country. I refer, for instance, to the case of a tubercular child who has been so affected by the existing law that the condition of that child prevented the whole family from coming into this country. Surely anyone who has any humanitarian concepts at all favors an amendment which will give relief in a case of that kind. Likewise as to children who have been adopted by our servicemen and civilian personnel in Formosa, Korea, Germany, and other countries. No one could complain against these measures, because they are humanitarian. The sum and substance of every one of them is to greatly outweigh in number of persons and in importance what is supposed to be done under section 5.

Section 5 proposes to change radically the fundamental policy of the Walter-McCarran Act. There is not any question about it. We all know that is the case. Let us not have anyone in our country so disillusioned as to find later, after we have voted, under one kind of pretense or another, that we have cut the stanchions and the foundations out from under a measure which was passed with great difficulty and which has, in a time of great movement of people throughout the world, rendered real service to this Nation.

Time does not permit me to go at length into this question, but it has been said that only 18,224 are involved under the redistribution language in section 5 of the bill. That would be the case under the present situation, when unused quotas of 61,000 would be involved. That would not be the case under other situations, and the Senator from Illinois, in his original statement, made it clear that the operation of the amendment could bring about the admission annually of 154,000 rather than the 90,000 who are coming in now. I not only object to sweeping the foundations out from under the law enacted after many years of effort, enacted over the veto of the then President, which was not a pleasant thing for any Senator who voted to override; but I am reminding the Senators that if the proposal is adopted they will radically change the philosophy of the present law without hearings, without any information ahead of time, and without giving a Senator a chance to study the proposed changes. The amendment has not been printed. I have only a mimeographed copy, which I hold in my hand, which was secured only a half hour ago.

If there is any order or soundness of procedure in that kind of approach, we may as well do away with our rules. We are dealing with a subject matter which is fundamental to the growth, the progress, the peace, and the continued prosperity of our country, and I refer, of course, to the troublesome question of immigration. The question ought to be studied and we ought to be given the chance to explore the matter thoroughly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Florida has expired.

Mr. HOLLAND. I ask for 4 minutes more from the Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana is not present.

Mr. HOLLAND. The Senator from Indiana told me I might have 9 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I shall yield time to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, I shall yield some additional time to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, we both can yield to the Senator from Florida. I ask unanimous consent that we may each yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, it is proposed to change legislation which was enacted with great pain and with great effort and after years of study, and which, by many people in the Nation, is regarded as having done a great job for national prosperity and security in the last few years. We are called upon not just to iron out the inhumanitarian aspects of the bill, but we are asked, in addition, to change the fundamental philosophy of that bill, which was passed, as I have already said, over the veto of a President, and which has remained in force many years, and which has served, as many people in this Nation believe, the welfare and the progress and the prosperity and the security and the peace of the people of the United States as a whole.

I hope we do not write the stamp of our approval upon any such irregular or careless or unfair procedure. This procedure meets the definition of all those adjectives, because nobody has had a chance to see it; nobody has had a chance to know what was coming out; nobody has had the advantage of a report from a committee which has studied it; and no one knows anything about it except what has been disclosed in the rather brief arguments by the advocates and opponents of the bill up to this time. I regret that I cannot illuminate the record further.

My brief study of the situation makes me feel that upon the broad shoulders and strong backs of 350 Basque sheepherders who would be admitted to the United States—under a policy we have frequently followed before, because we cannot interest American boys in the sheepherding business—we would be placing all of this tremendously large proposed change in the immigration laws of the Nation. Mr. President, it is not a fair thing; it is not an orderly thing; it is not a regular thing to do. In my judgment, it is not the American way to approach a problem of such magnitude, in connection with which every Senator should have the right to know what he is voting on—which right is completely denied him under the methods and approach followed here.

I hope the amendment of the Senator from Indiana will be adopted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, under the unanimous-consent agreement, I yield back the remainder of the time available to me, with the understanding that we shall be able to suggest the absence of a quorum, and that at the conclusion of the quorum call or the rescinding of the order for the quorum, the Senate will proceed to vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MONRONEY in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Then, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

The amendment of the Senator from Indiana will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the amendment in the nature of a substitute, submitted by Mr. DIRKSEN, for himself, and other Senators, it is proposed to strike out all of section 5.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, on this question, I ask for a division.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, on this question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A division has been called for.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]. On this question a division has been requested.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

All time for the proponents of the amendment has expired. The opponents of the amendment have 11 minutes remaining.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of any time under my control, with the understanding that we shall proceed at once to vote on the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]. (Putting the question.)

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the amendment of the Senator from Illinois was agreed to be reconsidered.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I move to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read a third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time on the bill, and I am sure that the minority leader will do likewise.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield back the remainder of the time under my control.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time on the bill has been yielded back.

The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill (H. R. 6888) was passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I move to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF CIVIL AERONAUTICS ACT OF 1938

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3914) to amend sections 801, 802, and 1102 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with an amendment on page 2, line 5, after the word "approval", to strike out "and to include in such report his reasons for withholding approval and what approved action he has ordered the Board to take in such case" and insert "including in such report the action he has ordered the Board to take and his reasons therefor unless he finds such report would be contrary to the interests of national defense or foreign policy, which finding he shall communicate to the Congress", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 801 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 (52 Stat. 1014; 49 U. S. C. 601) is amended by striking out the first sentence thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "The issuance, denial, transfer, amendment, cancellation, suspension, or revocation of, and the terms, conditions, and limitations contained in, any certificate authorizing an air carrier to engage in foreign air transportation, or any permit issuable to any foreign air carrier under section 402, shall be subject to the approval of the President of the United States in any case which he determines may affect the national defense or foreign policy of the United States. The President shall report to the Congress any case in which he withholds such approval including in such report the action he has ordered the Board to take and his reasons therefor unless he finds such report would be contrary to the interests of national defense or foreign policy, which finding he shall communicate to the Congress."

SEC. 2. Section 802 of such act is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence:

"Such negotiations shall be conducted in accordance with the principles set forth in section 1102 (b) of this act."

SEC. 3. Section 1102 of such act is hereby amended by inserting after "1102." "(a)"; and by adding the following subsection:

"(b) Discussions or negotiations with representatives of a foreign country or foreign countries for the conclusion or modification of any treaty, convention, or agreement regarding the establishment or development of air navigation, including air routes and services, shall be conducted in accordance with the following principles:

"(1) The Board shall advise any air carrier whose interests it knows or reasonably should know will be affected, and shall fully consult with its representatives, both prior to and during any such discussions or negotiations.

"(2) A representative of the air carriers shall be made a duly accredited member of the United States delegation to any formal negotiations. He may attend all negotiating sessions and meetings of delegation, and shall be given a fair and reasonable opportunity to consult with his principals during and throughout the negotiations and before any ultimate decision is reached."

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I wonder whether the distinguished junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY], who now occupies the chair, is in a position to explain this measure.

Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLEMENTS in the chair). The Senate will be in order.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. President, Senate bill 3914 was reported by the Subcommittee on Aviation of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and subsequently reported from the full committee to the Senate.

Specifically, the bill does two things. First, it defines the President's power to override or reverse decisions of the Civil Aeronautics Board with respect to overseas or territorial air routes, and confines it to cases involving matters of foreign policy or national defense.

It has been testified a great many times that the original action in allowing the President to review and reverse decisions of the Civil Aeronautics Board was intended to apply only in the field of foreign policy or national defense. Consequently the bill would relieve the President from the pressures to review, continue, suspend, or cancel airline rights granted by the Civil Aeronautics Board, except in cases which are strictly confined to foreign policy matters or to our national defense.

The bill would request the President to report to the Congress on any such cases in which he withholds approval, and provides that if such report would be contrary to the interest of national defense or foreign policy, he need not report.

The second part of the bill deals with the rights of American air carriers to be represented and to participate in negotiations by the Civil Aeronautics Board with foreign countries, and through them, foreign airlines, before decisions are reached.

The bill would allow representatives of the domestic air carriers, the American flag lines, to have representation during negotiations in which routes are being negotiated by the Civil Aeronautics Board and the State Department.

The bill is the result of a long period of hearings conducted by the distinguished junior Senator from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS.] The hearings clearly show that the rights of our American-flag airlines have not been properly represented in the negotiations to which I refer. In many instances those who conducted the negotiations failed to acquaint themselves with the economic aspects, or to speak up with respect to the economic damage which might be done to American airlines. In some cases the result would be greatly to increase the burden of Federal subsidies, without reference to the economic overcrowding of certain schedules which were granted.

I believe the bill meets most of the objections which have been raised by Members of the Senate, and I should like to see the Senate take action upon it.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. A couple of days ago I received a letter addressed to me by the Assistant Secretary of State. I thought it might be well to read the letter at this point, in order that the Senator may comment upon it if he cares to do so. The letter is as follows:

JULY 24, 1956.

DEAR SENATOR KNOWLAND: In accordance with your request, I am enclosing a copy of a statement by the Department of State in opposition to S. 3914.

You may be interested also in the fact that the Department of the Interior has expressed opposition to an amendment to the Civil Aeronautics Act identical to section 1 of S. 3914. They commented adversely on section 27 of S. 1119 last year, which is identical to section 1 of S. 3914. I am therefore attaching excerpts of a statement made by the Department of the Interior.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT C. HILL,
Assistant Secretary.

I shall not read all of the comments of the Department of State. In part, they read, as follows:

Section 1 of S. 3914 would eliminate or limit the requirement of Presidential approval over certain actions of the Civil Aeronautics Board involving certificates for

United States carriers and permits for foreign air carriers.

The framers of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 recognized the separate functions of the Board and President with regard to foreign air carrier permits and to certificates for United States carriers involving other than purely domestic air transportation. In insuring that these independent responsibilities were reflected in the original legislation, the drafters established the framework in which the Board and other agencies of the executive branch could function in the overall interests of the United States. The Department believes that the proposal to eliminate or limit the President's authority to review the decisions of the Board in these fields fails to recognize the continued existence of these other aspects of the decisions. Consequently, it is believed that enactment would make it more difficult, if not impossible, to insure that the final decision in each case reflected the overall interests of the United States.

Sections 2 and 3 of S. 3914 would amend the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, to prohibit the executive branch from discussing or negotiating with a foreign country the conclusion or modification of an air transport agreement (a) unless the Civil Aeronautics Board consulted fully, both prior to and during such discussions or negotiations, with any United States airline which would be affected; and (b) unless a representative of the United States air carriers was made an accredited member of the United States delegation to any formal negotiation.

The Department urges that the proposed amendments not be enacted, on the grounds that they are unnecessary and unwarranted. They are unnecessary because adequate practices and procedures already exist under which the airlines have ample opportunity to make their views known to the Government with respect to the conclusion or amendment of an air transport agreement with a foreign government. They are unwarranted because they would interfere with the normal functioning of the executive branch, hamper the Department of State in the conduct of foreign relations, and would give a segment of the air-transport industry a position superior to those of the traveling public and the communities which depend upon the industry for air communications with the rest of the world.

A summary of specific provisions of S. 3914, with the Department's views thereon, is attached.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire analysis be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the analysis was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMMENTS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE ON S. 3914, A BILL TO AMEND SECTIONS 801, 802, AND 1102 OF THE CIVIL AERONAUTICS ACT OF 1938, AS AMENDED

Section 1 of S. 3914 would eliminate or limit the requirement of Presidential approval over certain actions of the Civil Aeronautics Board involving certificates for United States carriers and permits for foreign air carriers.

The framers of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 recognized the separate functions of the Board and President with regard to foreign air carrier permits and to certificates for United States carriers involving other than purely domestic air transportation. In insuring that these independent responsibilities were reflected in the original legislation, the drafters established the framework in which the Board and other agencies of the executive branch could function in the overall interests of the United States. The Department believes that the proposal to eliminate or limit the President's authority to review the decisions of the Board in these fields fails to recognize the continued existence of these other aspects of the decisions. Consequently, it is believed that enactment would make it more difficult, if not impossible, to insure that the final decision in each case reflected the overall interests of the United States.

Sections 2 and 3 of S. 3914 would amend the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 to prohibit the executive branch from discussing or negotiating with a foreign country the conclusion or modification of an air transport agreement (a) unless the Civil Aeronautics Board consulted fully, both prior to and during such discussions or negotiations, with any United States airline which would be affected; and (b) unless a representative of the United States air carriers was made an accredited member of the United States delegation to any formal negotiation.

The Department urges that the proposed amendments not be enacted, on the grounds that they are unnecessary and unwarranted. They are unnecessary because adequate practices and procedures already exist under which the airlines have ample opportunity to make their views known to the Government with respect to the conclusion or amendment of an air transport agreement with a foreign government. They are unwarranted because they would interfere with the normal functioning of the executive branch, hamper the Department of State in the conduct of foreign relations, and would give a segment of the air transport industry a position superior to those of the traveling public and the communities which depend upon the industry for air communications with the rest of the world.

A summary of specific provisions of S. 3914, with the Department's views thereon, is attached.

1. Sections 1, 2, and 3 of S. 3914 would amend, respectively, sections 801, 802, and 1102, of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended (hereinafter referred to as "the act"). These sections of the act deal with certain aspects of international air transportation. For ready reference, the provisions of each section, as presently in force, are summarized below:

(a) Section 801: Provides that the issuance, amendment, transfer, or revocation (by the Civil Aeronautics Board) of any certificate authorizing a United States air carrier to engage in overseas or foreign air transportation, or air transportation between places in the same Territory or possession, or any permit issuable to any foreign air carrier, shall be subject to the approval of the President.

(b) Section 802: Requires the Secretary of State, in the negotiation of air-navigation agreements with foreign governments, to advise and consult with the Civil Aeronautics Board.

(c) Section 1102: Requires the Civil Aeronautics Board, in executing the act, to do so consistently with United States treaty obligations, take into consideration applicable laws of foreign countries, and not restrict compliance with such laws on the part of the United States carrier.

2. Section 1 of S. 3914 would amend section 801 of the act to restrict the existing requirement of Presidential approval of specified actions of the Board. The nature of the proposed changes, and the Department's comments thereon, are as follows:

(a) Principle: Permits for foreign air carriers and certificates for United States carriers in foreign air transportation issued by the Civil Aeronautics Board would not be subject to Presidential approval except in those cases which the President determines may affect the national defense or foreign policy of the United States.

Comment: An objective of section 1 is to ease the burden of Presidential review and to reduce his work with respect to certain categories of CAB decisions. This is sound and worthwhile. However, with respect to this category of actions, the objective would not be obtained in actual practice, for the following reason: In order to determine whether a particular Board decision might affect the national defense or foreign policy of the United States pursuant to the provisions of section 1, it still would be necessary for the President to scrutinize every such decision. Thus, he would not be relieved of any work in this area. Moreover, it is difficult to conceive of a case which may not potentially involve foreign-policy considerations. Every certificate or permit involving foreign air transportation involves foreign countries and, accordingly, touches upon foreign relations. In addition, any individual Board action in this field cannot be treated independently as an isolated case, but must be considered in the context of other actions. Thus, no matter how free the surface of a certificate or permit may appear to be, it cannot be assumed to be devoid of foreign-policy considerations. Therefore, if the President were fully to discharge his responsibilities as proposed by section 1, it appears that all Board decisions in this area would continue to be subject to his approval.

(b) Principle: Certificates for United States carriers to engage in overseas air transportation (example: between the United States and one of its territories) or in transportation between places in the same territory or possession would no longer be subject to Presidential approval.

Comment: To the extent that air services in this field constitute portions of international services of our carriers they may in some instances affect foreign policy. The President should therefore have the opportunity to determine in each case whether any such consideration is involved. The proposed amendment would eliminate this opportunity.

Considerations other than those of foreign policy would also indicate that the President should retain the opportunity to review any case dealing with operations beyond the continental limits of the United States. Other executive agencies have expressed themselves on these points. The White House view is as follows:

"The termination of the President's authority to approve cases involving overseas and territorial air transportation would appear inadvisable, since national defense considerations may play an important role in such decisions."

(c) Principle: In any case relating to foreign air transportation in which he withholds approval, the President shall report to the Congress as to his reasons. He shall include in the report the action which he has ordered the Board to take.

Comment: Inasmuch as the considerations behind the President's decisions in regard to cases involving foreign air transportation generally involve national defense or foreign policy matters, disclosure of which might well be detrimental to the interests of the United States, provision for mandatory disclosures would be detrimental to the security of the United States and to the effective conduct of its foreign policy.

3. Section 2 of S. 3914 would amend Section 802 of the act by the addition of a sentence stating that the negotiations shall be conducted in accordance with the principles set forth in section 1102 of the act.

The Department's opposition to the proposed amendment of section 802 is based upon its opposition to the principles which are proposed for insertion in section 1102, i. e., its objection to section 2 of S. 3914 are related to its opposition to section 3 of that bill. Section 3 is discussed below.

4. Section 3 of S. 3914 would amend section 1102 of the act to include the principles and procedures by which the Department of State and Civil Aeronautics Board would be bound.

International negotiations on air transport matters as well as other international negotiations require that the executive branch of the Government be able to follow such procedures and apply such information with regard to international relations, the public interest of the United States, and the national defense as may be pertinent in connection with any particular negotiation. The enactment of required procedures with respect to such negotiations would destroy the flexibility which is many times the essential qualification on which the ability to obtain an agreement in the best interests of the United States may depend. Therefore, from the standpoint of general principle, the Department recommends against the enactment of required procedures. The following is a summary of specific principles embodied in section 3 of S. 3914, with the Department's views thereon:

(a) Principle: The Civil Aeronautics Board must notify interested carriers and consult with such carriers' representatives both prior to and during any discussions or negotiations with foreign countries for the conclusion or modification of any treaty, and so forth, regarding air transportation.

Comment: It already is the usual practice for the Board to notify and consult with the most interested carriers both prior to and during formal negotiations. Recognizing the responsibilities of the Board under the act, the Department normally does not initiate discussions with the carriers. However, representatives of the Department generally attend the discussions between the Board and the carriers, and are also available for direct approaches by representatives of any carrier desiring to discuss their interests directly with officers of the Department. The views expressed by the carriers which relate to matters within the competence of the Department receive full consideration.

The Department believes that the proposed legislation to make the Board's consultation with the carriers a mandatory requirement at all stages of the negotiation would (a) unnecessarily rigidify routine discussions or negotiations; (b) unduly complicate and delay discussions between the Department and the Board during crucial stages of negotiations, when time is of critical importance and consideration of a given problem might take place at odd hours of the day or night simultaneously at several echelons of the Government both in Washington and the fields; (c) embarrass and hamper the Department of State in the conduct of United States foreign relations; and (d) interfere with the normal functioning and decision-making of the executive branch.

(b) Principle: A representative of the air carriers shall be made a member of the United States delegation to any formal negotiations.

Comment: (1) The individual carriers whose interests are affected in a given negotiation often have conflicting competitive interests. It is increasingly difficult to obtain unanimity among such airlines. The carrier representative rarely can speak for the industry as a whole.

(2) An accredited member of any United States delegation becomes bound by the United States position. This position, representing the composite views of various agencies of the Government, and various segments of the industry and the public, is almost always a compromise position. Were a carriers' representative accredited to the delegation and authorized to speak in the negotiations, he would be bound by reason of his accreditation to promote the United States position. This might in fact not be the position maintained by his principals.

(3) The United States interests in air transport negotiations are not confined to the air transport industry nor to the air carriers which might be directly affected. Those interests also include those of the traveling public and of the geographical areas to be served. In air transport negotiations, the Government is responsible for considering all the various interests. These interests often conflict. By requiring that a representative of one special interest group be accredited to the United States delegation, the proposed amendment would give that group a privileged position of influence paramount to those of the other interested groups.

(4) As a general practice, United States carriers already have the opportunity to designate a representative as an observer to the United States delegation in formal negotiations. This observer attends negotiating sessions and has the opportunity to report the events of those sessions to his principals. The Department believes that the observer capacity in which the carriers' representative has been serving on United States delegations is the most advantageous position which can in many instances be accorded. On the other hand, although the Department intends to continue such practice, it believes that legislation requiring adherence to the practice regardless of special circumstances would be adverse to the public interest.

(c) Principle: The representative of the carriers may attend all meetings of the United States delegation.

Comment: Normally the carrier representative does attend meetings of the delegation. However, Government representatives serving on delegations have duties and responsibilities which in many instances require such representatives to discuss matters which are not public knowledge and which cannot in the interest of the security of the United States and its international relations be divulged to persons outside the Government. Since the proposed amendment would preclude limited attendance when required for reasons of security of international relations, the Department must oppose enactment.

(d) Principle: The activity to be affected by section 3 of S. 3914 is any discussions or negotiations for the conclusion or modification of any treaty, convention, or agreement regarding the establishment or development of air navigation, including routes and services * * *."

Comment: The object of S. 3914 is to give United States air carriers a special voice in United States air transport negotiations affecting the routes and services of such carriers. The terms "any treaty, convention, or agreement regarding * * * air navigation" goes far beyond that object. It would require the Government to consult the carriers on air navigation negotiations not involving air transport matters affecting the economic interests of the carriers. As far as the Department is aware, this is not intended.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks the prior views of the Department of the Interior, which were expressed in connection with an earlier bill.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL OF CIVIL AERONAUTICS BOARD CERTIFICATIONS IN OVERSEAS AIR TRANSPORTATION—VIEWS EXPRESSED BY THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

BACKGROUND

Section 1 of S. 1119, 84th Congress, 2d session, repeats a provision previously proposed as section 27 of S. 1119, 84th Congress, 1st session, which would, in part, eliminate from section 801 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 the provision for Presidential approval of actions by the Civil Aeronautics Board on certificates of public convenience and necessity involving United States airline services in overseas air transportation (i. e., air transportation between the United States and a Territory or possession, or between two Territories or possessions, of the United States) or air transportation between places in the same Territory or possession.

DEPARTMENT OF INTERIOR LETTER OF APRIL 26, 1955

By a letter of April 26, 1955 to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, from the Office of the Secretary, Department of the Interior, the following objection was made to section 27 of S. 1119:

"The Territories and possessions of the United States are greatly dependent upon air transportation which is playing an increasingly important role in their economic life. In some of these areas, air service provides the only means of transportation other than overland or waterborne travel of the most primitive sort. Route certification, frequency of service and competition are questions of extreme importance to most of the United States Territories.

"The executive branch of the Federal Government has been vested with certain responsibilities for the social and economic development of the Territories. A major responsibility is the representation and protection of the interests of the residents of the Territories.

"At present, the Department of the Interior, the agency of the executive branch directly responsible for Territorial matters, is afforded an opportunity to review those decisions of the Civil Aeronautics Board affecting service to or within the Territories at the time that the decisions are referred to the President for approval. The interests of the Territory concerned are fully taken into account by this Department in considering the recommended decision. The effect of section 27 of S. 1119 would be to concentrate in a single agency all authority for the certification of air transportation in the Territories with no opportunity for review or appeal by this Department.

"Because of the importance of air transportation to the Territorial possessions of the United States and the responsibilities of the executive branch to these possessions, we believe that a review and the approval by the President of recommended decisions of the Civil Aeronautics Board is desirable. We do not believe that such review and approval should be limited to cases affecting the national defense or foreign policy.

"It is the position of the Department of the Interior that, if favorable consideration is given by your committee to S. 1119, the existing language in section 801 of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, should not be changed and that section 27 of S. 1119 should be amended accordingly."

The views of the Department of the Interior on the similar section 1 of S. 3914 were not obtained, nor was that agency invited to testify at the public hearing on section 1 of S. 3914 held on July 10. It is understood that the views of the Department of the Interior on this subject remain unchanged. S. 3914 has been favorably reported out by the Senate committee.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I wonder if the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma would care to discuss some of the points raised by both the Interior Department and the State Department.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. President, as I recall, the Interior Department sent no communications to us during the consideration of the bill. We heard from the State Department, from the Civil Aeronautics Board, and from the Comptroller General.

In order to be absolutely sure, after we had concluded the testimony and hearings on the question of limiting the President's right to reverse, change, modify, or veto a decision of the Civil Aeronautics Board, following long hearings in which all parties were represented, we again invited the Budget Bureau, the President, the Executive Office of the President, and also the State Department to give us cogent reasons why the bill should not be passed.

Representatives from the various agencies appeared. I am sure that Members who heard the testimony will agree that it was confined strictly and exclusively to the power which the bill gives the President to review decisions involving foreign policy and the national defense.

We do not believe it is proper, and we do not think the President ought to have the right, from the economic aspect, after months or years of testimony, hearings, and formal pleadings before the Civil Aeronautics Board, to reverse decisions of the Board involving purely economic questions entirely outside the field of foreign policy and national defense.

We do not believe that the interested parties should be compelled, after exhaustive hearings and proceedings before the Civil Aeronautics Board, to go to the White House for a separate consideration de novo of all the evidence which has been placed in the record, except in cases involving foreign policy or the national defense.

Moreover, the American airlines involved in such cases would have no way of formally pleading their cases. They would be informally brought before the President, or those around him in the White House. No machinery is provided for an appellate review.

We felt that it was proper to confine the President's authority to cases involving foreign policy or the national defense, and to request—but not to demand—that he report to the Congress, when he reverses the Civil Aeronautics Board, his reasons therefor, but excusing him from doing so if in any way such a report would interfere with the foreign policy or our national defense. In such a case he would not have to report to the Congress.

We feel that if it is proper that the CAB be the administrative arm of the Government in determining these matters, then the President, who is without any machinery and without any procedure and without any hearings, should be relieved of this onerous duty, when 2 or 3 domestic airlines may be fighting for a route, except where he finds it is necessary on grounds of foreign policy or national defense, to intervene.

I believe the President himself would welcome being freed from the lobbying and the pressure and the pulling in one direction or another by various airlines which may be involved in such a case, and which, after losing their case, before the CAB after proper hearing, rush to the White House, and, with all the pressure that can be brought to bear, try to get the President to intervene or to reverse the decision of the administrative body which has been established as the regular administrative agency to deal with such matters.

With respect to the second objective, namely, to protect the American airlines from having routes in Latin America and in other places, which routes have been pioneered and supported and developed with subsidy money given away to foreign airlines without any adequate hearing and without any representative of American airlines participating in the discussions and negotiations. The bill provides that the American airlines shall be represented in such discussions and negotiations.

I may say to the minority leader that the foreign airlines are represented, because we all know that they are government-owned, or are agencies or arms or subsidiaries of the foreign governments themselves. Are we to deny to the American-flag lines the right to be represented in the negotiations respecting such routes? Our American airlines certainly should have a voice in such discussions and under the bill they would have the right to participate.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. To carry out the idea the Senator has mentioned, the bill provides:

> (2) A representative of the air carriers shall be made a duly accredited member of the United States delegation to any formal negotiations. He may attend all negotiating sessions and meetings of delegation, and shall be given a fair and reasonable opportunity to consult with his principals during and throughout the negotiations and before any ultimate decision is reached.

Does that not mean that the person who represents the air carriers will become, for this purpose, a representative of the State Department of the United States Government in carrying on negotiations with a foreign country, and that, furthermore, he may give his information to private interests before any decision is reached by our Government?

It seems to me that puts him in a very difficult position, and also brings private interests into a governmental status, at a time when negotiations might have nothing or very little to do with the airline in question.

Mr. MONRONEY. I am afraid the Senator has not read the earlier provision, to the effect that the Board "shall advise any air carrier whose interests it knows or reasonably should know will be effected." Only the airlines which are affected would be represented, or a representative of those airlines could participate.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. But he would become a part of the Government of the United States.

Mr. MONRONEY. He would become a part of the negotiations. He would become one of the negotiators. The foreign airlines are certainly represented by their governments, because they are government-owned airlines. The purpose of the provision is to give our airlines similar representation in the negotiations, for heretofore in some cases they have resulted in destroying or partially destroying American airlines.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Would it not be better—and I am merely asking the Senator the question because of the language in the bill—to change the phraseology so as to provide that the representative of the State Department must consult with representatives of the airlines before he goes into the negotiations?

Mr. MONRONEY. The difficulty with that is that the airlines merely read about the decisions in the newspapers. The consultations of the past have been on the most casual and superficial basis. Our airlines feel that they have become the fall guy. I should like to yield at this time to the able chairman of the subcommittee which investigated this matter.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, the very distinguished senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON] and I held hearings on these provisions for a number of days. It was absolutely clear that our American airlines actually had no access to the information or to the negotiations which were carried on. In one particular instance, on which we concentrated, the State Department team forced the CAB member, who was also a member of the team, to grant to a foreign government a certain air route. That action was very detrimental economically to our own American airline.

The American airline had nothing to do with the proceeding, although it had put money into the line and developed the route and the passenger traffic. The State Department simply forced them into that situation, and said they would let the foreign line, which is a foreign government-owned line, fly alongside on almost as many flights as it wished.

Naturally American airlines—and I am not speaking of the airlines only, but of the American aviation industry—feel they should have some voice in these matters, because without consultation these American airlines can very well be destroyed.

It was the belief of the committee—and I am confident the senior Senator from Kansas shares the belief—that we should set up such a procedure as would give representatives of the American aviation industry a voice in these negotiations.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I agree heartily with what the Senator from Florida has stated about having a voice and an opportunity to consult before a decision is made. What I am trying to suggest is that the provision in the bill would make the representatives of the airlines a formal member of the delegation of our Government.

Mr. SMATHERS. Actually what would happen, from a practical standpoint, is that the representatives of the industry would not represent a particular airline. Usually 3 or 4 companies—TWA, Pan American, and Braniff—would be involved, and they would select one man to be the member of the team. His major concern would be the economic concern.

Of course he could be outvoted by the representative of the State Department and the representative of CAB. In the final analysis, if the State Department representative says, after the negotiations, "We have to grant this route to the foreign airline, but I can not tell you why except that it is in the national interest to do so," the foreign airline would still get that route.

However, unless some such procedure as is suggested is provided our airlines have no way of knowing what is going on, and they have no opportunity to tell the representatives of the State Department how American airlines are affected and why some decisions can destroy them. Machinery like this would protect them.

Mr. MONRONEY. One incident which we believe proves the need of the airline the member being a duly accredited member is that the observers for the American-flag interests in the Indian negotiations were thrown out of the conference. Only in this way can we protect the growing interests of the American airlines.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be offered, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 3914) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOSHEN VENEER CO.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2788, H. R. 10092.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 10092) for the relief of the former shareholders of the Goshen Veneer Co.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with amendments.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I wish to yield to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], who has been very courteous and patient, and who has been waiting a long time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

INCREASING IMPORTS OF OIL

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, when Christian, the hero of John Bunyan's matchless masterpiece known as Pilgrim's Progress, set out from his hometown of Destruction to the Celestial City, he found himself sorely burdened with sin. Similarly, the present administration, in launching its campaign for 4 more years of control of the Federal Government, is hopelessly burdened with a record of unredeemed pledges, broken promises, and repudiated agreements to serve the American people. To one of those important broken promises with which every Member of this body is more or less familiar, the attention of the Senate is invited.

While House bill No. 1, to extend the authority of the President to enter into reciprocal trade agreements, was before the Senate or its Committee on Finance in the spring of 1955, I offered an amendment to the bill to restrict petroleum imports into the United States to 10 percent of the domestic petroleum demand for the corresponding quarter of the preceding year.

When the bill and the proposed amendments reached the floor of the Senate in May 1955, the bill was passed, but my amendment, which was supported by 38 Members of this body, on a rising vote was defeated, upon assurances from spokesmen or friends of the administration that if voluntary action by the petroleum industry should prove ineffectual the President would take immediate action to restrict imports to the 1954 level.

It is a notorious fact that notwithstanding the solemn promises of importers and the administration, foreign oil which for two decades has flooded our shores is now at the highest tide it ever yet has reached in all the years it has devastated our coal, oil, and railroad industries, and pauperized hundreds of thousands of coal miners, oil workers, and railroad men.

The solemn pledges of immediate and decisive action by the President were given in support of a substitute amendment to the bill which gave the President specific authority to impose and enforce limitations upon oil imports. That substitute amendment was accepted by the Senate and became a part of House bill No. 1.

No one can read the debate on the substitute amendment, particularly the statements of friends and spokesmen of the administration, without reaching the conclusion that it was not merely permissive but directive. Certainly not even the most vigorous advocate of unlimited oil imports can deny that it was the purpose of the Congress to place drastic restrictions upon them.

The positive assurances that the President would act immediately to keep oil imports at their 1954 level were given to the Senate by two of the most reliable and illustrious Republican Members of this body, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN].

Let me quote from the remarks of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON], on May 3, 1955, as reported in volume 101, part IV, on page 5389 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date:

> I supported the proposal adopted by the committee because I was assured by those in the administration responsible for the administration of the trade-agreements program, that if such amendment were adopted by the committee and by Congress, action would immediately follow and that imports of petroleum and its products would be definitely restricted.

Elsewhere in his statement on the same subject that day, the Senator from Kansas said:

> It is my judgment that we can all rely upon these assurances, and that the importation of petroleum and its products will forthwith be limited to a relationship to our domestic production and in an amount equal to the 1954 position.

Then the Senator from Kansas added these significant words:

> There can be no doubt in my mind as to the intent of the committee, nor, do I believe, as to the intent of the Senate in regards to limiting the oil imports to the average daily imports of the year 1954, based on the report of the President's Committee on Energy Supplies and Resources Policy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BIBLE in the chair). Let there be order in the Senate.

The Senator from West Virginia may proceed.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President: There is no question but that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN] relied upon strong assurances from the administration that oil imports would not be allowed to increase above their 1954 level. On May 2, 1955—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 101, part 4, page 5299—the Senator from Colorado stated:

> The President is certainly the best informed of all those interested in our national security. When he is informed of the possibility that imports may be threatening that security he, under the amendment adopted by the committee, would have a careful study made; and if such threat is found to exist he must act to limit imports to a degree removing that threat.

Senator DANIEL then asked him:

> Does the Senator feel that action would be taken if over an extended period imports should be in excess of the ratio which existed in 1954?

Senator DANIEL then inquired:

> I do; and while I do not propose to put a jinx on the processes we have recommended, if those processes do not work, I shall be among the first actively to support special measures.

Senator MILLIKIN further stated:

> The amendment which the Senator from Texas and I have been discussing has been accepted by the administration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is endeavoring to cooperate with the Senator from West Virginia. The Senator will suspend until we have absolute quiet in the Senate. Those who have no business with the Senate at the present moment will remain quiet.

The Senator from West Virginia may proceed.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, will the Senator from West Virginia yield?

Mr. NEELY. I yield.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Not only is the Senator talking about a subject which is important to many States, but I do not know of any Member of this body who is more qualified to speak on the subject of the damage being done to many of our States than the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. I thank the Senator from Kentucky for those undeserved but most highly appreciated words.

Mr. President, those guaranties did not come from any Senator on this side of the aisle; they did not come from men without authority to speak for the administration. The Senator from Kansas left no doubt that he had received his assurances directly from those in authority in the administration who had solemnly assured him that if the substitute amendment were adopted, oil imports would be restricted to their 1954 ratio to domestic production.

That was the promise. What of the performance by this administration and the big oil companies, who joined in making the promise, that they would voluntarily restrict their importations?

Unfortunately for the hundreds of thousands of coal miners, oilfield workers, and railroad employees who have been pauperized by the flood of foreign oil, and compelled to live on governmental doles, the promise in question long since became as useless as "winter's withered leaves."

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. Gladly.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Is it not a fact that the States of West Virginia, Kentucky, and Pennsylvania have had the highest unemployment percentages of all the States of the Union?

Mr. NEELY. That is true now, as it has been throughout this administration.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Is it not true that most of the unemployment is in the areas which are affected by the lessening of the production in mining operations?

Mr. NEELY. That is true.

Mr. CLEMENTS. They are affected by the importation of oil from foreign lands.

Mr. NEELY. That is as true as the Gospel. Mr. President, the average daily oil imports in 1954 were 1,052,000 barrels, representing 16.6 percent of our domestic production.

Senators should bear in mind the fact that at the time the House bill was passed—in May 1955—imports were far ahead of the 1954 level. At the time of the passage of the bill they were at the rate of 1,248,000 barrels a day, an increase of 20 percent over the 1954 level.

The solemn promises given the Senate by the administration through its friends and supporters were not merely that the imports would be held to the then existing level, but that they would be cut back to the 1954 figure, which, as just shown, was $1,052,000 barrels a day.

Senators please note the manner in which this administration's promise has been redeemed. We have been told of the 20-percent increase in the number of barrels imported in 1955 over the number imported in the preceding year.

This astronomical increase augmented agony in thousands of poverty-stricken American homes and greatly increased the number of victims suffering from the devastation of imported oil.

But for the first 6 months of this year, 1956, oil imports reached a new high level of 1,402,000 barrels every day, representing 19.5 percent of our domestic production.

What happened in 1955 and in the first half of the current year is but the prologue to what the importers have planned to do during the rest of this year. According to their own schedule, filed with the Texas Railroad Commission, they purpose, in the last 6 months of 1956, to import oil not at the 1954 rate of 1,052,000 barrels a day but at the rate of 1,531,000 barrels a day, approximately 22 percent of our domestic oil production.

In 1950, I pointed out to the Senate that the oil imports had averaged 564,000 barrels daily for the preceding 4 years.

At that time I predicted that within a very short time the importations would reach the colossal total of 1 million barrels every 24 hours. Some of the press sharply criticized me for that statement, and charged that I was engaged in a wild flight of fancy. My critics said that it was utterly incredible that oil imports would ever reach such an extraordinary figure.

But just 1 year after I made my prediction, imports rose to 844,000 barrels a day. In 1952 the average was 958,000 barrels a day.

In 1953, my prophecy was more than fulfilled, as imports reached a daily average of 1,034,000 barrels.

As all Senators know, from the 1955 and 1956 figures, previously recited, the imports did not even momentarily pause at the devastating figure of 1,055,000 barrels a day.

So once more, coming events cast their aminous shadows, before and I now predict, on my responsibility as a Senator, that if this administration succeeds itself, then, before the end of the next 4 years the importations of foreign oil into the United States will be, not at the rate which they have been for the first 6 months or will be for the last 6 months of this year but at the rate of not less than 2,500,000 barrels a day. Please note that prediction.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NEELY. I gladly yield to the distinguished Senator from Kansas, who was one of those who heroically fought for some proper restrictions on imported oil.

Mr. CARLSON. I do not want to break into the excellent statement the Senator is making. It is a statement which should be made. I was one of the cosponsors of Resolution No. 1, which would have limited the importations of oil to 10 percent. I think it can be very definitely stated that the Senate Finance Committee, which considered that proposal, decided that if we could work out a program of voluntary reduction of imports, to keep it within the 16.6 percent of the 1954 domestic production, it would be much better than to tie the hands of the administration by enacting restrictive legislation.

I share the views of the Senator from West Virginia. I want to commend him for calling this matter to the attention of the Senate. We are now importing oil to the extent of approximately 20 percent of domestic production. I can assure the Senator that when I made the statement that he has quoted, I had assurance then and still contend they will be carried out. There is no doubt in my mind as to the intent of the Senate Finance Committee, and the United States Senate felt that oil imports would be held to the 16.6 percent level as recommended by the Presidential Commission on Energy Supplies and Resources Policy. I say to the Senator I still stand on that statement.

I wish to assure the Senator from West Virginia I have been working on this problem myself, because I feel I have some obligation in view of the commitment I made to the United States Senate and to the country.

I hold in my hand a letter dated July 19, from Arthur S. Flemming, who, after all, is the Director of our Defense Mobilization, and who has charge of the program. In this letter he states that he is hopeful that he can secure the cooperation of the oil companies, so that it will not be necessary to write legislation that will be mandatory in nature. I share that hope. I could place the letter in the RECORD at this point, but if the Senator from West Virginia prefers that I not interfere with his remarks, I can have it placed in the RECORD after his remarks.

If the Senator from West Virginia does not object, I shall read the letter.

Mr. NEELY. I shall be glad to have the Senator proceed.

Mr. CARLSON. The letter reads:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
OFFICE OF DEFENSE MOBILIZATION,
Washington, D. C., July 19, 1956.

Hon. FRANK CARLSON,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CARLSON: I appreciated very much receiving your very thoughtful letter relative to the oil import situation.

I am not sure that my last letter to the oil importers has been called to your attention. In case it has not I am enclosing a copy with this communication.

As you will note from the letter to the oil importers, we are continuing to keep in close touch with this situation.

Many of the importers have responded in a very fine manner to the suggestions we have made to them from time to time.

A few importers have not followed our suggestions for individual voluntary action in an effort to solve what we recognize to be a very important problem.

As I indicated in my last letter if a few importers refuse to follow the lead of the great majority of importers, it will be necessary for us to institute formal proceedings under section 7 of the Trade Agreements Act. We would take this action reluctantly.

We feel, for example, that if the Government should decide to impose quotas, sooner or later this would lead to either direct or indirect price controls. In other words it would ultimately lead to Government regulations of the entire industry. We feel that this would be unfortunate.

Nevertheless, if a few of the importers finally conclude that it is impossible for them to approach this matter from a long-term point of view rather than from the point of view of their short-term interests, we will have no other alternative than to initiate formal action on the part of the Government.

My first step would be to hold a public hearing. I am still hopeful that the reports which are now coming in from the oil importers will make such action unnecessary.

I appreciate your very deep interest in this matter and want to assure you that if at any time you have any suggestions to make regarding the problem I will be more than happy to hear from you.

Very sincerely and cordially yours,
ARTHUR S. FLEMMING, Director.

I call that to the attention of the Senator from West Virginia and to the Senate for the reason that I am in full accord that if this does not result in limiting imports to 16.6 percent of domestic production, on which we had an agreement, I shall in the next session be urging legislation that will restrict imports by legislative or congressional enactment.

Again, in view of my commitment to the Senate, that if oil imports are not voluntarily limited, I will press for enactment of legislation that will limit these imports.

Mr. NEELY. The remarks of the distinguished Senator from Kansas are deeply appreciated, particularly the assurance that he will help to do whatever is necessary in the next session of Congress to remedy by legislation the deplorable situation of which we are complaining. His help is always welcome. "One blast upon his bugle were worth a thousand men."

In my opinion failure to present this factual record of the defiance of the Congress by this administration and its injury to hundreds of thousands of jobless Americans for the benefit of a few titanic oil-importing companies would be a dereliction of duty. The flood of oil from the Middle East and elsewhere has enriched just six American oil companies and a similar number of turbaned princes and shahs beyond the most fanciful dreams of the narrations of the famous Arabian Nights. This inaction and neglect of duty by this administration has brought desolation to scores of once-prosperous American communities, and privation and misery to a mighty host who have been robbed of their birthright, deprived of their opportunities, and stripped of their dignity as self-supporting human beings.

Figures made public today on the earnings for the first half of this year by the two largest importing companies show how they have translated the misery of hundreds of thousands of American workers into the most stupendous profits of all times. Those figures show that the earnings of the Gulf Oil Corp. for the first 6 months of 1956 reached an astounding total of $138,072,000, as compared to $91,871,000 in the similar period of 1955. This established a new record of earnings for the first half of any year in the history of this Corporation.

The earnings of the Standard Oil Corp. of New Jersey for the first 6 months of 1956 have just been reported by the company as $392 million, as compared with $344 million for the like period of 1955. These earnings also represented a new all-time record for this company for any first half of any year.

Mr. President, if any proof be needed that all this tremendous increase of earning power came from oil that was produced in the Middle East and elsewhere beyond the boundaries of the United States, all that is necessary is to look at the earnings as reported by our domestic oil companies for the first half of this year, and compare them with the same period in 1955. These reports show that earnings of the domestic companies are at practically the same level at which they were last year.

Mr. President, the administration has callously repudiated the solemn assurances given to the Congress by its spokesmen on the floor of the Senate only 14 months ago. As a result tens of thousands of persons in West Virginia, and the other coal-producing States, and many of the oil-producing States, are today the victims of all the suffering and humiliation which prolonged unemployment habitually provides.

This is the brief factual story of a betrayal of the American people, in terms of both dollars and human misery.

The processes for the limitation of oil imports, as provided in the substitute amendment to House bill 1, have utterly and completely failed to work. The oilwells of Texas, Louisiana, and various other States should be producing oil from 20 to 25 days each month at the present time, but because of the importation of this foreign oil they are restricted to an average of 16 days a month.

Of course the administration has made a shallow pretense of implementing the authority and direction of Congress to limit oil imports. Blazing headlines announced that the matter had been placed in the hands of the Director of Defense Mobilization. There were the usual highly publicized studies, hearings, investigations, and reports, which deceived the naive and all who were not informed about the matter.

After all that misleading window dressing had been displayed, the Director almost apologetically requested the importers to keep the flood of foreign oil within its 1954 limits. Oil imports for 1954 were far more than could be justified by any sense of justice and reality; but if that level could have been established as a maximum, it would have represented a step in the right direction, and the distressed coal miners and operators and the distressed independent oil producers and workers and the unemployed railroad men would even have been thankful for that much relief. But even that scanty relief was never granted.

The importers did not pay the slightest attention to the request of the Director. Their response was to increase imports in the astronomical manner above described.

What does the administration intend to do about this defiance of its request? It is my hope that the friends of the administration, such as the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON], can at least prevail upon the State Department not to permit any further increases.

Mr. President, in order not to delay the adjournment of Congress a moment longer than necessary, I have refrained from touching upon many other relevant matters which should have been mentioned and which should have been emphasized in this address.

Let me conclude with the solemn warning to all the importing companies concerned: Unless they mend their ways and mend them substantially, in the matter of flooding the entire Nation with foreign oil, unless they stop robbing hundreds of thousands of working men and women of their jobs, at the beginning of the next session of the Congress legislation will be introduced; and with the help of such patriotic Americans as the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON] and the 36 other Members of the Senate who joined in supporting my amendment last year, there will be enacted a law that will make it impossible for 4, 5, or 6 titanic oil companies to continue to condemn hundreds of thousands of honest American workers to misery and starvation.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. President, in the closing hours of this session of Congress, I do not wish to let this opportunity pass without again stating that I think the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] has rendered a definite service in calling attention to the ever-increasing importations of foreign oil.

As I stated during the colloquy, I feel that I have some obligation to the United States Senate and to the country, because of a commitment I made and a statement that it would be the hope of this administration and the sincere hope of the junior Senator from Kansas that the importations of oil would be limited to 16.6 percent of the domestic production of the United States. At present the importations represent 20 percent. As I read from the letter of the Director of Defense Mobilization, who, after all, is in charge of this, we are hopeful that we can bring down these importations with the cooperation of the oil companies.

Again I quote from the letter from the Director of the Office of Defense Mobilization, dated July 19, 1956, and signed by Arthur S. Flemming:

> As I indicated in my letter if a few importers refuse to follow the lead of the great majority of importers, it will be necessary for us to institute formal proceedings under section 7 of the Trade Agreements Act. We would take this action reluctantly.

Mr. President, I hope it will not be necessary to take such action, but I wish to state to the senior Senator from West Virginia and to the Senate that if action is not taken, and if these importations are not held within bounds, in the next session of Congress I shall be cooperating with the senior Senator from West Virginia and other Senators in order to keep a commitment which I made to the United States Senate and to the country.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CARLSON. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas a question.

Like other Members of this body, including the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], I am very much interested in the extra importations of oil. I wonder what suggestion the Senator has for actual accomplishment in reducing the importations from 20 percent to 16.4 or 16.5 percent. How is it to be accomplished?

Mr. CARLSON. During the colloquy between the senior Senator from West Virginia and myself, I read a letter dated July 19, 1956, from Arthur S. Flemming, Director of the Office of Defense Mobilization, which I do not care to read again at this time, because it is already in the RECORD. He states definitely therein that many of the importers have responded in a very fine manner to suggestions which have been made to them. I have just read a sentence from the letter, stating that if they do not follow through with the suggestions of the Director of Defense Mobilization, proceedings will be instituted under section 7 of the Trade Agreements Act.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In other words, there is a law which could be enforced. Instead of enforcing the law, the practice we are following is to ask the importers to be kind and gentle and voluntarily reduce their imports to a certain amount?

Mr. CARLSON. The Senator from Wyoming is exactly correct. As I stated earlier, I was one of the cosponsors of Senate Resolution 1, which would have limited imports by statute to 10 percent.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is the only effective way to accomplish such an objective, is it not?

Mr. CARLSON. I would not say it is the only effective way. I think, after all, by voluntary cooperation we can solve some of these problems. But if such cooperation is not forthcoming, I agree with the Senator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The point I wish to make is that the voluntary cooperation pattern as between an executive agency of the Government and corporations operating in our economy is totally foreign to the scheme of government under which we operate. Agreement between the executive and the corporations interested in a particular kind of business is merely government by men and not by law, to use the old phrase.

I think the time has come for the Senator to insist upon the statutory approach, because then we shall not be dependent upon corporations which have many interests to serve, and which, in their negotiations can urge many devious suggestions with respect to their purpose.

I hope that in the next session of Congress the Senator will—indeed, I know he will—carry out the suggestion he has made, and join in a concentrated effort to obtain a statutory solution of this most important problem.

Mr. CARLSON. I will say to the Senator from Wyoming that I am working on the problem at the present time, in the hope that we can obtain voluntary cooperation of the importers. My thought rushes immediately to a good Biblical quotation: "Oh ye of little faith." I have faith. I think we must have faith that cooperation will be forthcoming, but if the importers do not cooperate, I assure the Senator from Wyoming that he and I will be working together on this problem. I have confidence in the administration of the Office of Defense Mobilization under the capable direction of Dr. Arthur Flemming, who is devoting his efforts and office to hold such importations within the bounds set by the Presidential Advisory Committee on Energy Supplies and Resources Policy.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If they do not understand that they must cooperate, we are not likely to find very much cooperation.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3338) relating to rates charged to public bodies and cooperatives for electric power generated at Federal projects, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 3467) to authorize the conveyance of tribal lands from the Shoshone Indian Tribe and the Arapahoe Indian Tribe of the Wind River Reservation, Wyo., to the United States, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. ENGLE, Mr. HALEY, and Mr. MILLER of Nebraska were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 12116) to provide for the conveyance of the Maritime Administration reserve shipyard at Wilmington, N. C., in exchange for certain lands to be conveyed by the North Carolina State Ports Authority to the United States, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 12116) to provide for the conveyance of the Maritime Administration reserve shipyard at Wilmington, N. C., in exchange for certain lands to be conveyed by the North Carolina State Ports Authority to the United States, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 511) granting the consent of Congress to the States of New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut to confer certain additional powers upon the Interstate Sanitation Commission, established by said States pursuant to Public Resolution 62, 74th Congress, August 27, 1935, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

VISIT TO THE SENATE BY DR. HEINRICH KRONE AND DR. VERNER DOELLINGER, MEMBERS OF THE GERMAN REPUBLIC BUNDESTAG

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I am pleased to state that we have attending our session today two distinguished members of the German Republic Bundestag, namely, Dr. Heinrich Krone, who is the floor leader of the CDU Party in the Bundestag, and Dr. Verner Doellinger, a Deputy in the Bundestag. I ask them to rise.

The distinguished visitors rose and were greeted with applause, Senators rising.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is very happy to join in the warm welcome to our visitors.

EXCHANGE OF LAND AT AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH CENTER

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2585) to authorize an exchange of land at the Agricultural Research Center, which was on page 2, after line 11, insert:

SEC. 2. The provisions of section 2 of the Watershed Protection and Flood Prevention Act (68 Stat. 666) providing that no appropriation shall be made for certain plans unless such plans are approved by resolutions adopted by the appropriate committees of the Senate and House of Representatives, and the provisions of section 5 of such act requiring transmittal of a copy of such plans and the justification therefor to the Congress, shall not apply with respect to the Coneross Watershed project in the State of South Carolina.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

CONSTRUCTION OF MILITARY FAMILY HOUSING IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES THROUGH USE OF SURPLUS AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I want to commend the Defense Department, and particularly former Assistant Secretary of Defense Floete, for the interest and the businesslike manner in which they have developed an active program for construction of military family housing in foreign countries through the use of foreign currencies received from the sale of surplus agricultural commodities under the authority of the Agriculture Trade Development and Assistance Act of 1954 (Public Law 480, 83d Cong.). We are all extremely interested in developing and exploring every potentially sound program for the disposing of our surplus agricultural commodities, and particularly programs which promote sound trading with less emphasis on aid.

The Commodity Credit Corporation is expected to have on hand by August 1, 1956, some 10 million bales of cotton, 1 billion bushels of wheat, 920,000 bushels of corn, 25 to 26 million hundredweight of rice, and a 3-year supply of tobacco. Total investment in price support commodities by Commodity Credit Corporation is expected to be about $8.5 billion by August 1, 1956.

From the standpoint of requirements for family housing in foreign countries, there is a need for about 50,000 units at an average cost of $13,500 per unit, or a total of about $675 million. The major part of this need can and should be met through the use of the surplus agriculture commodity program. I have taken a special interest in this program and have sponsored legislation in our military construction subcommittee which will expand this program. I believe this approach to be sound from the standpoint of implementing needed housing programs in foreign countries at the least possible cost to our Government.

The military construction bill—section 407, Public Law 765, 83d Congress—contained a $25 million authorization for the Defense Department to build family housing overseas with foreign currencies received from the sale of surplus agricultural commodities. Implementation of the program is under the direction of an interagency staff committee on agricultural surplus disposal on which the Department of Defense is represented. During calendar year 1955, some $50 million in currencies of 6 foreign countries was earmarked for military family housing. These countries included the United Kingdom, $15 million; Japan, $17 million; Spain, $8 million; Italy, $3.5 million; Finland, $5 million; and Austria, $1.9 million.

This program has made the most progress in the United Kingdom where contracts were awarded by the British Government in January 1956 for the construction of 1,500 housing units for American military families in Great Britain in exchange for foreign currencies received from $15 million worth of surplus tobacco. The sterling received for the tobacco will be transferred to the British Treasury for the account of the Royal Air Ministry. The Air Ministry in turn will provide the land and arrange for the construction of the family housing. Present arrangements call for a nominal rental of 1 pound per unit per year to the American Third Air Force for the duration of the stay of the United States forces in Britain.

While the present program being conducted in Britain consists entirely of tobacco, the total receipts of foreign currencies are being allocated to the military-housing program. In Japan, the $17 million for housing is a part of the total program of $85 million, with a breakdown of commodities as follows:

	Million
Barley	3.1
Tobacco	5.0
Transportation	6.0
Total	85.0

The $8 million for housing in Spain is part of a $21 million program, with a commodity breakdown as follows:

	Million
Cotton	$7.75
Cottonseed oil	5.00
Tobacco	4.50
Corn	1.75
Transportation	2.00
Total	21.00

The $3.5 million for housing in Italy is part of a program totaling $50 million, with the following commodity breakdown:

	Million
Cotton	$36.6
Wheat	9.1
Total	50.0

In Austria the $1.9 million for housing is part of a total program of $5.9 million, with the following commodity composition:

	Million
Corn	$4.5
Cotton	.5
Transportation	.4
Total	5.9

The $5.25 million Finnish program of which most of the proceeds are for housing, has the following commodity composition:

	Million
Tobacco	2.2

Last year, I sponsored an amendment to the military construction bill which increased the authorization from $25 million to $100 million for the use of foreign currencies under Public Law 480. We also have broadened the authorization for use of currencies acquired "through other commodity transactions of the Commodity Credit Corporation." This made possible transactions under the CCC Charter Act which contains broad authorization for barter-type operations. A proviso was also included in the military construction act last year for reimbursement to Commodity Credit over a period of years for quarters allowances forfeited by recipients of housing projects built with surplus commodity funds. These changes have attracted considerable interest from countries where military construction programs are in operation.

For example, it was not possible in 1955 to negotiate a program with France under title I of Public Law 480, because the French were not interested in taking United States surplus commodities. Broader authority included in the military construction bill has provided a new approach for negotiation for use of Commodity Credit Corporation stocks in the construction of military housing in France.

Under the new plan a barter-type program is contemplated which is a team approach, consisting of an interested French bidder and a commodity merchant. Bids for the construction of housing projects will be taken from a French bidder, based on payment in surplus agricultural commodities. The bidder will provide the land and construct the housing, taking payments from the military authorities in construction progress certificates. The certificates will be delivered to a merchant dealing in agricultural commodities, who will deliver them to the Commodity Credit Corporation for a credit against commodity shipments. The dealer will then sell the commodities received on the world market (outside of France) for various currencies which will be converted into French francs which will be paid to the bidder.

I understand that this transaction has been discussed and approved by the French Government, and an invitation for bids was issued in Paris on July 12, 1956, covering about 3,000 units at a total cost of about $45 million.

This barter-type transaction has particular merit because of its flexibility. Under this type of operation it is no longer necessary to confine the sale of commodities to countries in which the housing is to be built. For example, wheat sold in Africa or the Middle East can be used to build the housing in France. Accordingly, barter can be used to finance construction on island bases where there would be no conceivable use for a considerable volume of surplus commodities.

Still another special type of transaction is represented by the Austrian and Finnish programs. In neither country is there a requirement for a United States military housing program, yet both countries have abundant timber resources and are capable of producing good quality prefabricated houses.

In November 1955, the Defense Department was successful in obtaining approval from the French Government for using Public Law 480 credits in Austria and Finland for the purchase of 600 prefabricated houses to meet a portion of the urgent United States housing requirements in French Morocco. The Austrian transaction will be entirely financed with Austrian schillings; however, appropriated fund dollars will be used to pay for the erection and completion of the prefabricated houses bought from Finland.

With about $85 million in Public Law 480 currency presently available and about $45 million tentatively allocated to the French barter transaction, the current $100 million authorization is exhausted. This program is moving in the right direction and is deserving of expanding the present authorization to $250 million, which will be going a long way in terms of assisting in disposing of our surplus agricultural commodities, and at the same time provide needed military housing.

I believe that we should also explore the possibility of enlarging the use of surplus commodity funds for the overseas base construction program, which offers an even greater potential. At present title I of the Agriculture Trade Development Act of 1954 currencies can be used for overseas base construction only where such use is specifically accepted by the foreign government in the title I agreement. However, it appears that the present limited volume could be greatly increased through the use of barter transactions once the mechanism of such transactions has been worked out, and, provided, the terms of various base rights agreements are modified to allow for such a procedure.

This program offers a tremendous challenge, and to be effective, it must have the full backing of the administration at the highest level to overcome some of the obstacles which will arise from the policies of the foreign governments concerned, as well as the various agencies of our Government. If it receives this support, I believe we can move ahead on an expanded program which will make a real contribution to the removal of our surplus agricultural commodities on a sound basis.

COTTON TEXTILE IMPORTS

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I had prepared a statement in support of Senate Resolution 236, but did not have time, when that resolution was under debate, to include it in my remarks. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a statement which I have prepared on Senate Resolution 236.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR STENNIS ON COTTON TEXTILE IMPORTS

Senate Resolution 236, which recognizes the serious problem of imported textiles and directs the Tariff Commission to expedite escape-clause investigations and give them precedence wherever practical. The resolution expresses the concern of the Senate over the textile-import situation and asks the President of the United States to give immediate consideration to the impacts of the import of textiles and textile products with the view of using authority which he already has under section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act and other legislation to bring this situation under control.

Textile imports into the United States have reached an alltime peak in the last few months. They have expanded 2½ times in the last 2 years. The imports have taken over two-thirds of the velveteen market, one-third of the gingham and blouse markets, and one-fourth of the table damask market.

Imports are now coming into the United States at an annual rate of 350,000 to 375,000 bales of raw cotton. If we translate this into United States cotton acres, we find that it is equivalent to around 600,000 to 650,000 acres of cotton, which are being displaced by imported cotton products. Senators will recall, I am sure, the discussion and debate on my amendment to include in the farm bill just 100,000 acres to be used for our very small farmers. At one point in the consideration of this proposal, strong opposition was voiced on the Senate floor that 100,000 acres was too much of an increase in the national allotment in the face of our extreme surplus situation, even for the relief of small farmers. But now we see the normal production of cotton from 600,000 acres being displaced by imported cotton products. This is an increase of 350,000 to 400,000 acres in the past 2 years.

Unfortunately, the end of the rapid increase in imports of cotton products has not been reached. Up to this point we have felt principally the impact of low Japanese wages and the full brunt of the tariff reduction on textiles at Geneva a year ago. The reduction in tariffs on imported cotton products covered about 80 percent of the types of material we consume in this country, and the tariff was reduced as much as 48 percent on some items.

Beginning on August 1, 1956, another element will enter the picture which will permit foreign countries to purchase American cotton at about 6 cents a pound below the domestic price. Therefore, imports are practically certain to increase greatly from many sources, not just Japan.

I have consistently supported legislation to encourage expanded trade with friendly countries because I strongly feel that we must have a sound program of multilateral trade. This resolution is not an attempt to deny entry of imports into the United States. What we do want is for the executive branch to carefully reappraise our textile imports with the view of placing a reasonable limitation on imports to remove the threat of foreign textiles taking over a greater part of the United States cotton farmers' best markets here at home.

I believe that the real issue confronting us here is a matter of where we draw the line. Unrestricted imports, increasing rapidly as they now are, tend to demoralize and create uncertainties in our entire market. I strongly feel that this resolution is an orderly approach in trying to preserve the foreign economic policy of the United States and permit countries to keep a fair share of the United States textile markets and, at the same time, protect our farmers from having their already surplus supplies increased by excessive imports.

The General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, commonly referred to as GATT, to which the United States and 34 other countries are a party, specifically recognizes the existence of the United States law containing import quota authority on agricultural commodities and their products. That agreement acknowledges that the use of import quotas under section 22 is not contrary to the agreement. So when the cotton industry seeks protection from the imports of foreign-made cotton products by a reasonable import quota under section 22, it is in no wise attempting to interfere with the foreign economic policy of the United States. This problem was not presented to Congress until the avenues for getting relief through the executive branch had been exhausted.

We cannot and should not be expected or asked to buy enough textiles from Japan or any other country to pay for every bale of cotton we sell. That would lead us to an impossible situation. Before we could regain our 5-million-bale export market for raw cotton, we would have to import 3 to 4 million bales of cotton in the form of textiles.

We would have increased our exports, but the farmers' total market would not be improved, as increased exports would have been offset by increased imports.

The real issue lies in the fact that the point has been reached when cotton textile imports are interfering with the cotton acreage reduction and price-support program of the United States Department of Agriculture.

United States supplies of cotton for the current season are at an all-time peak. Carryover on August 1, 1956, will be at an all-time peak. United States peacetime exports are lower than they have been in 100 years. United States cotton acreage has been cut 40 percent in the last few years, making current acreage the lowest since 1883.

In the face of this critical situation, while American farmers are cutting their acreage, the raw-cotton equivalent of textile imports has been constantly increasing and is currently two and one-half times the 1954 level, the first year of acreage controls since Korea. This quantity of cotton is the normal production of about 640,000 acres.

Estimates given to me by the cotton industry indicate that if no effective controls are placed on imports they will likely increase to about five times the 1954 level when the new raw cotton export program gets fully under way.

Current imports of raw cotton in the form of textiles are equivalent to about 11 times the 30,244-bale raw-cotton import limitation. Certainly, this seems to me to be clear proof that under existing law, import quotas should be set at reasonable levels at this time to protect our cotton program.

That is why I support Senate Resolution 236 which expresses the sense of the Senate that the President give immediate consideration to the impact of imports of textiles and textile products with a view to determining whether import quotas should be imposed with respect to textiles.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BIBLE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

GOSHEN VENEER CO.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Is the pending business Calendar No. 2788, House bill 10092?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10092) for the relief of the former shareholders of the Goshen Veneer Co., an Indiana corporation.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] is present, and I am sure he will wish to make some explanation of the bill.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, possibly the best statement I can make regarding the bill is that the Judiciary Committee has reported it unanimously. The matter has been pending since 1950. I am not as familiar with it at this time as I was in 1950. The Judiciary Committee filed its report, and a few years ago the Senate passed a bill awarding the Goshen Veneer Co. nearly $600,000. The pending bill provides for the payment of $295,000. It is a fact that the House passed a bill providing for a payment of $75,000. The Court of Claims took a look at the record and recommended payment of $75,000.

The company in question is an old company which had been in business for many years. I have seen their physical properties. I happen to know that they were forced out of business as a result of the Army and Air Force coming on the scene. I know the family and I know the business. They had a great reputation for many years, but finally they were put completely out of business by the Defense Establishment.

The Judiciary Committee went into the matter very carefully. On private bills, such as this, we have to listen to the testimony of those who have studied the matter. We cannot go into every little detail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the committee amendments will be stated and considered en bloc.

The amendments of the Committee on the Judiciary were:

On page 1, line 6, strike "$12,750" and insert in lieu thereof "$50,176.16."

On page 1, line 8, strike "$2,250" and insert in lieu thereof "$8,858.66."

On page 1, line 9, strike "$21,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$82,639.91."

On page 1, line 10, strike "$8,250" and insert in lieu thereof "$32,468.66."

On page 1, line 11, strike "$8,250" and insert in lieu thereof "$32,468.66."

On page 2, line 1, strike "$22,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$88,542.42."

On page 2, line 3, strike everything following "Indiana," through and including "1954)" on line 7.

On page 2, line 15, strike "25" and insert in lieu thereof "10."

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois object to the adoption of the committee amendments?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Certainly, Mr. President.

This claim has been before Congress for some years, but the RECORD is quite the 81st Congress, 2d session. The comgress, as is shown by Report No. 2946 of the 81st Congress, 2d session, the committee of the House of Representatives found that the company had certainly been characterized by bad financial management during the period. I read from the report, Mr. President:

Neither the Army, the financial institutions, nor the officers of the company could produce any balance sheet showing the financial status of the company at any time subsequent to July 31, 1942, and up until the time the company was liquidated by the Army.

The recommendation was made that the claim be submitted to the Court of Claims. This was done. The Court of Claims heard both sides and handed down a decision on March 2, 1954, which is reprinted in the House report on this bill, 84th Congress, 2d session, Report No. 2050, pages 2 to 20.

By a unanimous decision of the Court of Claims the court summed up its opinion in the following paragraph:

While there is no obligation—

And I emphasize, now, the words "While there is no obligation"— that can be enforced against the Government, we recommend a payment of $75,000. This would be in the nature of a gratuity, but in the light of all the facts of record it seems to us the payment of this sum would be a fair adjustment.

In conformity with this finding of the Court of Claims, the House passed a bill providing for the payment of $75,000. I think the Court of Claims is correct in saying that this is a gratuity, but it may be worth while paying it in order to get this company off our backs.

Nevertheless, the Senate committee proposed to pay this company $295,154.47 or $220,000 more than the House recommended.

I do not have the personal knowledge of this company that the Senator from Indiana has, but it seems to me to be rather bad procedure for the Senate of the United States to supersede the courts of the United States in these cases. We provided a Court of Claims to deal with just such questions—claims of individuals against the Government of the United States. The court has found no legal case, but a gratuity of $75,000 was recommended. The company and its attorney, apparently, are not satisfied with this, and they have been trying to get the Judiciary Committee to increase the amount. I am not questioning the good faith of the members of the Judiciary Committee. I, personally, think this amount is excessive, from the record which has been developed. Incidentally, the attorney's fee which, under the House bill, would amount to almost $19,000, has been increased, under the terms of the Senate amendment, to a little over $29,000, or $10,000 more.

So, Mr. President, with due respect to the Senator from Indiana, I hope very much that the committee amendments will not be adopted, thereby saving the taxpayers $220,000 and conforming to the findings of the Court of Claims.

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, this claim has been pending before this body for a long time. Former Senator Donnell of Missouri handled the claim. It went to the House, and the House sent it to the Court of Claims, and the Court of Claims made its finding of $75,000 based on the book value of the company. The claimant is a family concern. It operated for 50 years, and it made a good profit. Along came the war, and the firm was asked to expand its facilities. It got in over its head. The Army and the banks took over, and it ended up in the situation in which it finds itself today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

EMPLOYEES OF GALLAUDET COLLEGE—MOTION TO RECONSIDER H. R. 3489

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate on yesterday amended and passed H. R. 3489, to amend the Federal Employees' Group Life Insurance Act of 1954 to bring employees of Gallaudet College within its coverage, and, in accordance with the rule, I move that the Secretary be directed to return the engrossed bill, with the Senate amendment, to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to.

STATEMENT OF APPROPRIATIONS ON AN ACCRUED EXPENDITURE BASIS

Mrs. SMITH of Maine. Mr. President, when the Senate acted the other day on the conference report on S. 3897, I made a statement of my reason for not signing that conference report—because the heart of the bill had been killed by the House when it deleted the section providing for stating appropriations on an accrued expenditure basis.

Today I am introducing a bill to correct that deficiency and legislative disappointment to the people of our country and those who worked so hard on the Hoover Commission recommendations on this subject.

Inasmuch as there is not time for this bill to be considered this year, I shall reintroduce it next year when I hope the Republicans will regain control of the Senate and I will be chairman of the Reorganization Subcommittee which will consider such legislation. I introduce it now so that it may be spread on the record for consideration and study by all parties concerned between now and the beginning of next year when the matter can be considered again.

RATES CHARGED FOR ELECTRIC POWER GENERATED AT FEDERAL PROJECTS

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Oklahoma if he is ready to proceed with the consideration of S. 3338, which has come over from the House with amendments.

Mr. KERR. I shall be glad to have the bill considered.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Before the bill is laid before the Senate, will not the Senator from Oklahoma inform us what the amendments will do?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Should not the Presiding Officer first lay before the Senate the message from the House?

Mr. CLEMENTS. I prefer that that not be done at this time.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, earlier this year the Senate passed S. 3338, a bill sponsored by the two Senators from Oklahoma and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

The purpose of the bill was to freeze for a period of 18 months, beginning January 1, 1956, the rates being charged by agencies of the Department of the Interior to the rural electric cooperatives, Government installations, and municipalities which were customers purchasing electric power from agencies of the Department of the Interior.

The bill was unanimously passed by the Senate and went to the House. In the House committee, certain amendments were added. I shall not discuss those amendments for the reason that when the bill went back to the House, not only were the amendments which had been added by the House committee deleted from the bill as reported by the House committee, but also the language of the bill as passed by the Senate was amended so as to make the freeze applicable only to the customers of the Southwestern Power Administration, in view of the fact that that is the area where the Department of the Interior is at this time seeking to increase the rates charged to rural electric cooperatives and other preference customers.

Because of the fact that the bill was to be temporary in effect, expiring June 30, 1958, and that there was no purpose on the part of the Department of the Interior to raise rates elsewhere—the only place where the relief is needed is in the area served by the Southwestern Power Administration—the House limited its application to that area and passed the bill on that basis today.

Mr. CLEMENTS. May I ask the minority leader if, after having heard the explanation by the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma, he has any objection to having the bill considered at this time?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BIBLE in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3338) relating to rates charged to public bodies and cooperatives for electric power generated at Federal projects, which were on page 1, line 5, strike out all after "energy" down through and including "thereof)" in line 7, and insert "marketed by the Southwestern Power Administration"; on page 2, strike out lines 1 through 4, inclusive, and to amend the title so as to read: "An act relating to rates charged for electric power and energy marketed by the Southwestern Power Administration, and for other purposes."

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PAYMENTS TO LOCAL GOVERNMENTS OF SUMS IN LIEU OF TAXES

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2248, S. 4183.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 4183) to authorize the payment to local governments of sums in lieu of taxes and special assessments with respect to certain Federal real property, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], I understand, wishes to make an explanation of the bill.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield so that I may suggest the absence of a quorum? There are two Senators on this side of the aisle who wish to be present when the bill is under consideration.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I understand that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. COTTON] wish to be present. I yield for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KERR in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. MUNDT. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will proceed with the call of the roll.

The legislative clerk resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KERR in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

AUTHORIZATION FOR SECRETARY OF THE ARMY TO DISPOSE OF CERTAIN LAND

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on yesterday the Senate passed Senate bill 4284. I understand there is now at the desk an identical House-passed measure, H. R. 9679, to remedy the situation resulting from two identical bills having crossed each other. I ask unanimous consent that the Chair lay before the Senate House bill 9679, and that it be considered and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 9679) to authorize the Secretary of the Army to dispose of a certain parcel of land, a part of Fort Belvoir Accotink Dam site military reservation, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this is a local bill providing for the sale of a small piece of property at Fort Belvoir, the valuation to be fixed by the Secretary of the Navy.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. 9679) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELLEN KJOSNES AND UNNI KJOSNES

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BIBLE in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 267) for the relief of Ellen Kjosnes and Unni Kjosnes, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That, for the purposes of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Ellen Kjosnes, Unni Kjosnes, No Kum Sok (also known as Kenneth No), Jose Maria Arias-Ortega, and Katarzyna Pienkos shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the enactment of this act, upon payment of the required visa fees. Upon the granting of permanent residence to each alien as provided for in this section of this act, if such alien was classified as a quota immigrant at the time of the enactment of this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to reduce by one the quota for the quota area to which the alien is chargeable for the first year that such quota is available.

SEC. 2. The Attorney General is authorized and directed to discontinue any deportation proceedings and to cancel any outstanding orders and warrants of deportation, warrants of arrest, and bonds, which may have been issued in the cases of Giuseppe Scalia and Elizabeth Cacavas (Elisavet Ioannou Kakava). From and after the date of the enactment of this act, the said Giuseppe Scalia and Elizabeth Cacavas (Elisavet Ioannou Kakava) shall not again be subject to deportation by reason of the same facts upon which such deportation proceedings were commenced or any such warrants and orders have issued.

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act for the relief of certain aliens."

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, on January 16, 1956, the Senate passed S. 267, to grant the status of permanent residence in the United States to the beneficiaries. On July 26, 1956, the House of Representatives passed S. 267, with amendments to include the beneficiaries of 4 similar individual Senate bills, and the beneficiary of 1 similar individual House bill.

The amendments are acceptable, and I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments to S. 267.

The motion was agreed to.

HELEN MAR STANGER

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3196) for the relief of Helen Mar Stanger, which were after line 13, insert:

SEC. 2. Paul Edward Horn, who lost United States citizenship under the provisions of section 404 (c) of the Nationality Act of 1940, may be naturalized by taking, prior to 1 year after the date of the enactment of this act, before any court referred to in subsection (a) of section 310 of the Immigration and Nationality Act or before any diplomatic or consular officer of the United States abroad, an oath as prescribed by section 337 of such act. From and after naturalization under this act, the said Paul Edward Horn shall have the same citizenship status as that which existed immediately prior to its loss.

SEC. 3. Elise Delree, who lost United States citizenship under the provisions of section 404 (c) of the Nationality Act of 1940, as amended, may be naturalized by taking prior to 1 year after the effective date of this act, before any court referred to in subsection (a) of section 310 of the Immigration and Nationality Act or before any diplomatic or consular officer of the United States abroad, the oaths prescribed by section 337 of the said act. From and after naturalization under this act, the said Elise Delree shall have the same citizenship status as that which existed immediately prior to its loss.

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act for the relief of certain aliens."

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, on July 2, 1956, the Senate passed S. 3196, to provide for the restoration of United States citizenship to a former citizen of the United States. On July 26, 1956, the House of Representatives passed S. 3196, with amendments to include the beneficiary of one similar individual Senate bill, and the beneficiary of one similar individual House bill.

The amendments are acceptable, and I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments to S. 3196.

The motion was agreed to.

AMIN HABIB NABHAN

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3255), for the relief of Amin Habib Nabhan, which were after line 7, insert:

SEC. 2. In the administration of the Immigration and Nationality Act, sections 201 (a) and 202 (b) shall be held not to be applicable in the case of Giok Po Oey.

SEC. 3. In the administration of section 3 and subsection (b) of section 4 of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, as amended, Panagiota Paganis shall be held and considered to be under 21 years of age: Provided, That the words "if accompanying them" in section 3 of the said act shall not apply to the said Panagiota Paganis.

SEC. 4. For the purposes of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Giuseppina Coppola shall be deemed to have been born in Great Britain.

SEC. 5. In the administration of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Yuriko Ito, the fiance of Dexter D. Good, a citizen of the United States, shall be eligible for a visa as a nonimmigrant temporary visitor for a period of 3 months: Provided, That the administrative authorities find that said Yuriko Ito is coming to the United States with a bona fide intention of being married to the said Dexter D. Good and that she is found otherwise admissible under the immigration laws. In the event the marriage between the above-named persons does not occur within 3 months after the entry of the said Yuriko Ito, she shall be required to depart from the United States and upon failure to do so shall be deported in accordance with the provisions of sections 242 and 243 of the Immigration and Nationality Act. In the event that the marriage between the above-named persons shall occur within 3 months after the entry of the said Yuriko Ito, the Attorney General is authorized and directed to record the lawful admission for permanent residence of the said Yuriko Ito as of the date of the the payment by her of the required visa fee.

SEC. 6. For the purposes of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Mrs. Toki Lewis shall be held to be classifiable as a nonquota immigrant.

SEC. 7. In the administration of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Jo-Soon Duk, the fiance of Wilbert F. Kline, a citizen of the United States, and her minor child, Lee Won Duk, shall be eligible for visas as nonimmigrant temporary visitors for a period of 3 months: Provided, That the administrative authorities find that the said Jo-Soon Duk is coming to the United States with a bona fide intention of being married to the said Wilbert F. Kline and that they are found otherwise admissible under the immigration laws. In the event the marriage between the above-named persons does not occur within 3 months after the entry of the said Jo-Soon Duk and Lee Won Duk, they shall be required to depart from the United States and upon failure to do so shall be deported in accordance with the provisions of sections 242 and 243 of the Immigration and Nationality Act. In the event that the marriage between the above-named persons shall occur within 3 months after the entry of the said Jo-Soon Duk and Lee Won Duk, the Attorney General is authorized and directed to record the lawful admission for permanent residence of the said Jo-Soon Duk and Lee Won Duk as of the date of the payment by them of the required visa fees.

SEC. 8. For the purposes of sections 101 (a) (27) (A) and 205 of the Immigration and Nationality Act, the minor child, Maria Elena Domantay, shall be held and considered to be the natural-born alien child of Emilio Jose Domantay, a citizen of the United States.

SEC. 9. For the purposes of sections 101 (a) (27) (A) and 205 of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Florentia Bougades shall be held and considered to be the natural-born alien minor child of Mrs. Anna Bougades, a citizen of the United States.

SEC. 10. In the administration of the Immigration and Nationality Act, Judith Wollner shall be granted the status of a nonquota immigrant.

After line 7, insert:

SEC. 11. For the purposes of section 5 (a) of the Refugee Relief Act of 1953, Ljerka Zagar shall be held and considered to be under 10 years of age, and the assurances heretofore filed on her behalf by the prospective adoptive United States citizen father shall be held and considered to meet the requirements of section 5 (b) of the said act. Any application for a visa filed on her behalf pursuant to section 5 (a) of such act may be considered and processed notwithstanding the death of her prospective United States citizen adoptive father.

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act for the relief of certain aliens."

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, on July 2, 1956, the Senate passed S. 3255, to grant to the minor child to be adopted by citizens of the United States the status of a nonquota immigrant. On July 26, 1955, the House of Representatives passed S. 3255, with amendments to include the beneficiaries of 4 similar individual Senate bills and the beneficiaries of 6 similar individual House bills.

The amendments are acceptable and I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments to S. 3255.

The motion was agreed to.

TAX EXEMPT STATUS OF CERTAIN ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, tax-exempt status for organizations described in section 501 of the Internal Revenue Code has historically been construed strictly, and such was the intent of Congress in making the benefits available to organizations which have the noble purposes outlined in that section. Such a strict construction is necessary if the diversion from revenue from the income of these organizations is to be continued. Congress has, in certain instances and under separate statutes, provided that the privilege of tax exemption should not inure to organizations which conducted certain subversive activities, and the Internal Security Act of 1950, as amended, specifically provides that any organization required to register by a general order of the Subversive Activities Control Board shall not have the benefit of such an exemption. However, the Supreme Court, in the last session, reversed and remanded for reconsideration a final order of that Board which designated the Communist Party as such an organization.

The courts, should the issue arise, might feel bound by the Supreme Court's ruling in the Communist Party case and in the case of Pennsylvania versus Nelson, that Congress intended to invade or preempt the tax law field and make the existence of a final order of the Subversive Activities Control Board the criterion for determining tax-exempt status. This would have the effect of removing the discretion to deny tax-exempt status vested by the internal revenue laws in the Department of the Treasury until such a final order of the SACB had been upheld by the courts.

Such a ruling would involve no more distortion of legislative intent than was manifested in the case of Pennsylvania versus Nelson, which struck down the sedition laws of 42 States by the implication that Congress intended to preempt the field.

In response to inquiries addressed to the Department of the Treasury, I have been assured that the administrative discretion vested in the Department by the Internal Revenue Act of 1954 is being maintained, and that a continuing check on all organizations which have been granted exempt status is being conducted. While their response in connection with my inquiry was reassuring, it was wholly satisfactory, for the Department stated when an organization was designated by the Attorney General as being a subversive organization, and included on his list, then that organization lost whatever tax-exempt status it had enjoyed previously as a result of the lofty purposes which may have inspired its formation—its original goal.

Infiltration is an insidious process. Many organizations conceived with the highest motives have been taken over by subversive elements, and of necessity the determination that such infiltration has impaired its usefulness and altered the true character of the organization is a time-consuming and involved process of gathering evidence and allowing the traditional opportunities of the group to be heard in its own defense before any designation of subversion is finally attached.

But the rationale behind this tax exemption is the usefulness to society of the organizations' possible contribution in humanitarian fields.

Long before an organization becomes subversive, and before such subversive course is susceptible of proof, those original goals have been distorted to make any contribution of such an organization useless, if not dangerous. They no longer deserve tax-exempt status.

The Department of the Treasury has stated that they work in close harmony with the Department of Justice in their continuing survey of this field through their liaison with that Department. Therefore, I am sure these Departments would have no objection to a strong declaration of national policy, expressed through a concurrent resolution, that this course of action is regarded as commendable and is encouraged by the legislative branch. I think that other agencies charged with law enforcement duties or which meet situations which would have bearing on the tax-exempt status of such organizations should be encouraged to report to the Treasury any evidence or indication of activities indicating a diversion from the corporate charter purposes of the group or organization under consideration.

For example, the Fund for the Republic, the same organization which created such an expression of outrage from all of us who believe in the integrity of the jury system in American jurisprudence by planting recording machines in jury rooms, in its annual report last year by the president announced that the Communist Party is merely another political party. His words were:

A political party—

Meaning the Communist Party—

has been identified with the "enemy."

Mr. President, I would not attempt to deny this person the right to make his report. Freedom of speech is so priceless a part of our American heritage, that opinions and conclusions should not be suppressed.

I do feel, however, that such activities as planting recorders in petit jury rooms during actual case deliberations by the jury, besides substantially impairing the rights of the parties in those cases to a fair trial, in accordance with fundamental processes of law, actually make a mockery of the jury system. And when studies financed from tax-exempt funds result in conclusions directly contrary to finding after finding of fact and declaration of national policy, as expressed by Congress, regarding the nature of the Communist conspiracy, such an organization's tax-exempt status may well deserve closer scrutiny. Certainly this should be done if such dubious projects continue to dominate its activities in the future.

Another glaring example is the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund, Inc.

The charter purposes of this organization were not furnished me by the Department of the Treasury, nor were copies of the executed forms which successfully resulted in the declaration that the organization would be tax-exempt. I think everyone would agree, however, that many of the activities of this group emphasize neither education nor scholarship. It is primarily engaged in promoting strife, discord, influencing legislation, encouraging litigation, and generally propagandizing the American people, while working hand-in-glove through its alter ego, the NAACP. This is the antithesis of the concept of the educational exemption, with its inherent components of tax-free funds for scholarships, aid to education, and individual self-development and environmental adjustment. It has, in effect, achieved the opposite result, in many areas of the Nation. I feel that thorough and objective consideration of the activities undertaken would lead to a reversal of this organization's present tax-exempt status. Political considerations should not govern tax law interpretation. Serious charges of the loyalty of the founders of this group have been made recently—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 23, 1956, pages 3214–3215—by responsible men. Whether these charges are true is primarily a question to be determined by the executive branch of the Government, which is charged with the proper administration of the laws, and which has large numbers of trained investigators at its disposal for that purpose.

I urge the Department of the Treasury, with the full cooperation of the Department of Justice, and other executive departments, to maintain a close and continuing scrutiny of the activities of all organizations presently tax-exempt under section 501 of the Internal Revenue Code, and to unhesitatingly revoke any exempt status when those activities indicate a substantial deviation from the purposes and goals expressed in the corporate charter or other organic authority.

Also, I call on the executive branch to exercise its best objective judgment, based on a full knowledge of the facts required by law, in restoring to the revenue of this country any portion of funds which presently are tax-exempt because of inadequate investigation and inadequate evaluation of activities of tax-exempt organizations, when compared with the purposes expressed in their charters or other organic authority.

I shall continue to give this highly important matter my attention, and I urge the utmost scrutiny on the part of the Department of Justice and the Treasury Department. I urge all interested parties to present to these Departments such facts as may be available.

Mr. President, I call these facts to the attention of the Congress and to the attention of the people, to show the importance of continuing close attention to and scrutiny of these tax exemptions and the activities of those enjoying the very substantial benefits. At some future time, when more facts are available, after investigations have been completed, I plan to submit to the Congress a resolution in which I shall seek again to express the legislative will of the Congress with reference to these matters, which can become very difficult and very delicate.

I know that the administration of such studies and such policies is very, very difficult, indeed. I make no charges against anyone in connection with the administration now; but I wish to emphasize over and over again the necessity of the closest kind of scrutiny and a close watching of all the activities, because on the basis of the investigations I have made, I verily believe that these vast funds are being used for purposes not passed on and understood by the taxing authorities when the exemptions were granted. I think it is another one of the warning signs of our times that will continue to call for the closest scrutiny, not only in the administration, but also in terms of legislative consideration.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

ACTIVITIES OF THE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, under the provisions of the Legislative Reorganization Act, the Committee on Public Works of the United States Senate has jurisdiction over legislation relating to flood control, improvement of rivers and harbors, public buildings, public roads, waterpower, bridges over navigable waterways, pollution of navigable waters, and public reservations and parks in the District of Columbia.

Since the beginning of the second session of the 84th Congress, 95 measures were referred to the committee. The committee approved 44 bills, of which 34 were passed by both Houses. Lease-purchase projects for 120 post office buildings, Federal office buildings, and courthouses in a total amount of $638,189,015 were approved by the committee.

Committee resolutions for review of previous reports for flood-control and river-and-harbor studies were adopted in a total number of 36, and the Corps of Engineers will report to the committee on these studies, after completion.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a list of the activities of the Committee on Public Works.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Summary of activities of the Committee on Public Works, U. S. Senate, 84th Cong., 2d sess.

Public Law	Date approved	Title of bill	Estimated cost
404	Feb. 10, 1956	H. R. 7930.—Russian River Basin, Calif., flood-control project.	$1,165,000

Legislation which is of national interest is discussed briefly as follows:

FEDERAL AID HIGHWAYS

The Federal Aid Highway Act of 1956 provides for a 13-year program for the Interstate System and a 3-year program for the Federal-aid highway systems. Authorized Federal expenditures for the Interstate System amount to $24,825,000,000 which is in addition to the $175 million already authorized for 1957. Federal funds for the primary, secondary, and urban systems amount to $1,850,000,000, and for forest highways, forest development roads, etc., there is authorized $208 million. Therefore, the aggregate total authorization of Federal funds amounts to $26,883,000,000. It is estimated that the States share would be $4,608,000,000, making a grand total of $31,491,000,000 for the program as authorized. The matching on the Interstate System will be on a 90–10 basis, while the matching on the primary and secondary systems would be on the 50–50 basis. Alaska is included for sharing in the program.

The act would permit reimbursement to utilities for part of the relocation costs. There would also be limitation on the weights and dimensions of vehicles traveling on the Interstate System.

Five important studies are to be made in cooperation with the States. They are study of equitable tax allocations, size and weights of vehicles, reimbursement for highways now constructed, a highway safety study and a revised need study.

WATER POLLUTION CONTROL

The Water Pollution Control Act amendments of 1956 will provide a much needed impetus to the solution of the Nation's water problem program. The legislation is designed to strengthen the water pollution control activity and improves the act which has been effective since 1948. The act provides funds for research, investigations, training, and information programs, and provides financial assistance to States and Territories by authorizing $3 million annually for 5 years to assist them in meeting the cost of establishing water pollution control measures. In addition, there is authorized $50 million annually with a maximum of $500 million for funds to assist cities and communities in the construction of sewage treatment works. The Federal grant for any project will be 30 percent of total cost, or $250,000, whichever is the smaller. The act provides that 50 percent of the funds must be used for communities with less than 125,000 population.

THE WATERSHED PROTECTION AND FLOOD PREVENTION ACT

H. R. 8750 which has passed both the Senate and House of Representatives upon which agreement has been reached, amends Public Law 566, 83d Congress, which was approved August 6, 1954. The Watershed Protection and Flood Prevention Act authorized the Secretary of Agriculture, through the Soil Conservation Service to assist local organizations in planning and carrying out projects for flood prevention and to assist them in all phases of water conservation and utilization and disposal of water.

H. R. 8750 would grant authority to include in reservoirs which might be constructed, storage for municipal and industrial water supplies and would allow an increase in size of reservoirs to be considered from 5,000 acre-feet to 25,000 acre-feet. The increase in capacity would be used for irrigation water supply and other such purposes. The proposed amendments would provide that all of the construction costs of dams and other such structures for flood control be borne by the Federal Government with the local organizations continuing to provide the necessary rights-of-way and operation and maintenance. There are provisions that local organizations may employ professional engineers, if they so desire, or they may call upon the Secretary of Agriculture to perform any or all engineering services for the local organization with exception of those associated with municipal or industrial water supply.

H. R. 8750 authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to make loans or advancements to local organizations to finance the local share of costs of carrying out works of improvements. These loans or advances would be repaid in 50 years with interest. It is also provided that the present requirement of a 45-day waiting period before construction can be initiated is eliminated and any project involving less than $250,000 of Federal contribution to construction costs and containing no structure having no more than 2,500 acre-feet of capacity will not require review by other Federal agencies or Congress.

RIVERS AND HARBORS—FLOOD CONTROL

The committee approved a comprehensive rivers and harbors, beach erosion control, and flood control bill to carry forward these important programs for development and improvement of the rivers and harbors of our Nation, for protection of our citizens against the ravages of floodwaters, and for the general development of the Nation's water resources. Additional authorizations are believed necessary at this time to continue the unified basin water resources developments now in progress, to round out basin programs where changing conditions have shown the necessity for extensions or modifications, and to provide for individual projects found to be necessary and justified. Completion of these projects will contribute materially to the economic well-being of the Nation.

The river and harbor program has produced the best system of inland waterways and harbors on our seacoasts and the Great Lakes to be found anywhere in the world. Tonnages moved over these waterways and into our harbors have reached enormous figures and are increasing each year. The uses of these waterways have returned to the country large savings in transportation costs, and have been responsible for the growth and development of large sections of the Nation. They have proved invaluable both in times of peace and in times of national emergencies.

The accomplishments of the flood-control program have more than justified its cost, by returning in benefits more than $3 for each $1 invested, not taking into account the intangible benefits such as the saving in life and the economic security of hundreds of urban communities and farming areas.

Development of hydroelectric power is an important product of the multiple-purpose program. The present installed capacity of all multiple-purpose projects of the Corps of Engineers is more than 4 million kilowatts, and when projects under construction are completed, the total capacity will amount to about 7.6 million kilowatts. These projects make low-cost power available to many rural areas, and return the Federal investment to the Treasury in a short period of time.

The total authorization contained in the omnibus river and harbor and flood control bill is $1,617,696,000.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, as one of the minority members of the Committee on Public Works, I should like to say that this year, under the leadership of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Committee on Public Works has achieved what I regard as what probably will stand out as the launching of the greatest program of public works that has ever come from the Public Works Committee during any session of the Congress.

The highway program alone, with its 13-year program for the Interstate System, and its 3-year program for the regular categories of Federal highways, stands out as the largest highway program the Nation has ever undertaken.

In addition, the omnibus rivers-and-harbors flood-control bill—which the present occupant of the chair, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR], knows in detail, because he was chairman of the subcommittee which conducted the hearings on those projects—provides for probably one of the most comprehensive programs for river-and-harbor development that has ever been embodied in any one bill introduced in the Congress.

In addition to those two outstanding measures, there have been the antipollution bill, the Small Watersheds Act, and the great program of lease-purchase of buildings for Federal courthouses, post offices, and general Federal buildings. That alone is the greatest program of that character that has ever been presented.

So the Committee on Public Works certainly has made a great record this year; and I think it is due to the leadership of the chairman, the cooperation of the several members, and the cooperation of the good staff.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I should like to state that I, personally, wish to thank each member of the Public Works Committee for his fine cooperation. I refer not only to the Members on our side of the aisle, but also to the Members on the other side of the aisle. I do not know how a chairman of any committee could have had finer cooperation than that which I have received; and I wish to thank each one of them openly.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, I wish to associate myself with the remarks of the able junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

As a member of the Committee on Public Works on the minority side of the aisle, I wish to congratulate and pay my sincere respects to the distinguished chairman of the committee, Mr. CHAVEZ, and, indeed, to all the other members of the committee who have worked with him in fashioning a long series of great pieces of constructive legislation which is now the law of the land. Most of them have been enumerated by my friend from South Dakota.

Speaking as a Californian, I wish also to say that the very great achievement of this Congress in adopting air pollution legislation is in great part the result of the generous interest shown in that problem by the able chairman of the committee.

I wish also to commend the part which my very able friend, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR], now presiding over the Senate, played in the work of the committee. Speaking from at least a parochial standpoint, on behalf of California, I assert that he participated in helping us to write into law one of the most constructive pieces of legislation this Congress has enacted.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, I am very grateful for this opportunity to express my sentiments. I wish to associate myself with the views expressed by the distinguished Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CASE], as well as those of my friend from California [Mr. KUCHEL].

It is only fair to remark that, as a result of the work of the past 2 years, every member of the Committee on Public Works formed not only an admiration, but an affection, for the distinguished chairman [Mr. CHAVEZ].

He has been ably assisted in the leadership by the distinguished Presiding Officer, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR], by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE], and by the senior minority member, the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN]. They have provided a team of leadership which, as the Senator from South Dakota has stated, has put through probably the greatest public works program ever enacted in any session of the Congress.

I am proud to have been a member of that committee, and to have served under the leadership of these fine Senators.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, I wish to add my commendation to the chairman of the Committee on Public Works, the senior Senator from New Mexico, and all members of that committee. The committee has dealt with some of the most important legislation handled by the Congress during this session. It has dealt with some of the most involved problems. Due to the hard work of the chairman and members of the committee, we now have a good public roads program. As a result of their foresight and effective work we will now have a road program that will meet a long needed road problem.

Also I wish to express my appreciation to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR], chairman of the subcommittee handling many problems involving North Dakota interests. The committee is to be commended for its very fine work.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I wish to associate myself with what my colleague [Mr. YOUNG] has said. Particularly I wish to thank the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma, chairman of one of the subcommittees, for the very courteous treatment he accorded certain North Dakota citizens when they appeared before his committee. In all my experience of 15 years in the Senate I do not recall that I have ever seen a Senator miss his luncheon in order to afford a hearing to the citizens of my State, who were obliged to catch a plane.

For that reason, particularly, I wish to express my personal appreciation for the very fine service rendered by the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma.

Also I wish to commend the work of the chairman of the Public Works Committee, who did so much at various times to help the people of my State.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Would the Senator say that he received better treatment in connection with public works from the Committee on Public Works than he has received from the Foreign Relations Committee in connection with the appointment of ambassadors? [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is out of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to thank my colleagues for their references to me as chairman of one of the subcommittees of the Committee on Public Works. Also, on behalf of the distinguished occupant of the chair [Mr. KERR], I express appreciation for the generous remarks regarding his work.

In turn, I wish to join in the generous remarks regarding the great work done by the chairman of one of the subcommittees, the distinguished senior Senator from Oklahoma.

As to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Works, not only do I wish to join in the generous, fine, and accurate statements regarding his service, but I wish to go a little further and express my very personal appreciation and thanks for the undivided, unquestioned support, encouragement, and inspiration he has afforded me as chairman of one of the subcommittees, and for the leadership he has provided for the entire committee in the very fine and heavy work his committee has done.

Mr. MARTIN of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I wish to join with my colleagues in the complimentary mention of the work of the chairman of the Committee on Public Works. In addition, I should like to invite the attention of my colleagues to the great road bill which has been enacted into law. Already several States have entered into contracts for the construction of interstate highways.

Earlier in the day I placed in the RECORD the plans and specifications outlined by representatives of 46 of the 48 States. I hope every Member of the Senate will carefully read those specifications.

I think it is the duty of the Senate and the House to follow very carefully this great road program. It is the greatest undertaking, aside from war, that America has ever engaged in. Its real success will be assured if Members of the Senate and House, as representatives of the people of this great country, give it the proper attention.

I believe that the same policy could profitably be followed in connection with other activities as we have followed in connection with the road program. It is a pay-as-you-use plan, and that is a sound governmental activity. I am in favor of all the great programs we are undertaking, but sometimes I am very much worried over how some of these programs are to be paid for. There must always be a payday.

I wish to associate myself with the remarks of my colleagues, who have said very complimentary things relative to the chairman of our committee and its members. It has been a very hard-working committee, and I think it has achieved marvelous results.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KERR in the chair). The present occupant of the chair would like to observe that he is especially grateful to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] for his indulgence in yielding to members of the Committee on Public Works. I am especially thankful for their kind remarks about me. My association with the members of that committee has been one of the high privileges of my life.

I am also very grateful for what has been said about the great chairman of the committee [Mr. CHAVEZ], for his leadership, and about the other members of the committee, for their unselfish work on the committee.

PAYMENTS TO LOCAL GOVERNMENTS OF SUMS IN LIEU OF TAXES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4183) to authorize the payment to local governments of sums in lieu of taxes and special assessments with respect to certain Federal real property, and for other purposes.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Minnesota if the bill would provide for payments in lieu of taxes on Federal property which was acquired at a date earlier than 1950.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. As far back as 1950.

Mr. AIKEN. How far back?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Nineteen hundred and fifty.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to inquire if the case I have in mind would be covered by the bill. I have in mind the two towns of Jericho and Underhill, in Vermont, where 50 or more years ago the Government acquired an artillery range and used it for a generation for that purpose, and then gave it up. There is a possibility that there may be some "duds" in that land. For that reason it cannot be used for any purpose, and perhaps cannot be sold. There are several thousand acres involved. In the meantime, the towns, which used to get some benefit from the land, get no return from it at all. It is a total loss to the towns. Would such type of property be covered in the bill?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. No. Only property acquired after June 30, 1950, would be covered.

However, property, as such, is not excluded, since the board which would be set up would be directed to make further inquiry and study into the extension of the principle of payments in lieu of taxes.

Rather than go in detail into the question raised by the Senator from Vermont, I should like to proceed with the opening discussion of the bill, which is a technical bill, and then return to answer questions raised by the Senator from Vermont and other Senators.

Mr. AIKEN. I was not aware of the fact that the Senator from Minnesota had not started the discussion.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I had not started it. I was accommodating Members of the Senate who were paying greatly deserved tributes to the chairman of the Committee on Public Works and other members of that committee.

Mr. AIKEN. The situation I have in mind has resulted in the the towns suffering great loss through the action of the Government, and they have no way of making good. Any legislation of the type now being considered should certainly provide for recompensing communities for such loss as these towns have sustained.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Not unless the properties have been acquired after the cutoff date, June 30, 1950.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I yield.

Mr. MUNDT. Is the Senator from Minnesota prepared to take up the pending business? If so, we have an understanding with the minority leader that we will have a quorum call so that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN] may be notified before the bill is taken up. Therefore, Mr. President, I make the point that a quorum is not present.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that for the moment?

Mr. MUNDT. Very well.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I have very diligently advised all Senators on this side of the aisle who are interested in the proposed legislation.

I have marked my calendar with the names of the Senators who are interested. The distinguished Senator from South Dakota had told me where he would be, and he was notified; and other Senators also have been notified.

Mr. MUNDT. We have located the Senator from Iowa, and I believe he will be here before we conclude the quorum call. I did not expect, and he did not expect, that a revolutionary piece of legislation such as this would be brought up at 4: 40 in the afternoon of the day on which we expect to adjourn before midnight. Therefore, we understood that we would have a quorum call.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The Senator from Minnesota obviously will wish to make an explanation of the bill, to which the Senator from South Dakota, I understand, wishes to propose amendments. Therefore, instead of requesting a quorum call now, it would perhaps be best to let the Senator from Minnesota proceed with his explanation.

Mr. MUNDT. Of course, the Senator from Iowa expects to participate at great length in the debate. In order for him to do that effectively, I am sure he will wish to listen to the very persuasive arguments to be made by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I yield.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Did I understand the Senator from South Dakota to say that there would be extended debate on this bill?

Mr. MUNDT. Fairly extended debate.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. The pending bill has been scheduled for consideration for the past 2 weeks or more. Certainly it is time for us either to take it up or not to take it up.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I ask the Senator from Minnesota to yield to me so that I might inquire of the Senator from South Dakota if I understood him correctly in saying that there was going to be extended debate on the bill.

Mr. MUNDT. Not too extended. I have a few brief notes to which I must refer to in the course of the debate; it will take some time.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I should like to have the Senator's further comment on what he considers extended debate.

Mr. MUNDT. I believe we can conclude the debate early next week.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield, with the understanding that he does not lose the floor?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I do. I should like to have a definition of what is meant by extended debate.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield so that I may ask a question of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I yield, with the understanding that I do not lose the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I shall be glad to answer the questions of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. From what I have heard of the discriminatory character of the bill and of the revolutionary things it proposes to do, I regard it to be such an important bill that I will make it my personal chore to make sure that there is a quorum present on the floor while the bill is being considered.

Mr. CLEMENTS. It was not with the idea of expressing any position on the merits or demerits of the bill that I asked my question of the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT]. I wanted to get the information because I thought it would be of help to the leadership in planning the afternoon and evening program.

Mr. MUNDT. I appreciate very much the consideration of the acting majority leader. In a spirit of reciprocity I may say that if the leadership insists on bringing this bill to the point of passage before adjournment, I shall cooperate fully in seeing to it that Congress can adjourn, I hope, before the Democratic convention begins in Chicago.

Mr. CLEMENTS. If Congress does not adjourn by that time, the senior Senator from South Dakota will be recorded as an absent Member of the Senate at the Republican convention.

Mr. MUNDT. I thank the Senator. I do not see the Senator from Iowa on the floor. Therefore, I believe we can have a quorum call at this time.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota has the floor.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, I yield to the senior Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, I make a point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator repeat his statement?

Mr. MUNDT. I make the point that a quorum is not present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota did not yield to the Senator from South Dakota for that purpose.

Mr. MUNDT. Yes; he did, as I understood.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A point of no quorum is not in order.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, the leadership has called up the bill S. 4183, which has been reported favorably by the Committee on Government Operations. This bill, which is commonly known as a payment-in-lieu-of-taxes bill, would authorize, for a 5-year period, first, a very limited program of payments in lieu of taxes on industrial or commercial real property acquired by the Federal Government after June 30, 1950; second, payments of special assessments levied after the effective date of the act in urban or suburban areas, if such assessments were also levied on real property owned by other taxable persons; and third, payments in lieu of taxes on the interest of the Federal Government in real property leased or sold to private persons under conditional sales contracts, if such property were owned by a taxable person.

The program would be administered by a five-member, bipartisan Federal Board for Payments to Local Governments, appointed by the President, subject to Senate confirmation. A taxing authority would be required to file an appropriate application, specifying the Federal property involved, the basis of its claim, and the period for which the claim is made, not to exceed 12 months in any single application. The Board, after determining the existence of a probable basis for the claim, and conducting a hearing if a basis is found to exist, would be required to determine and certify to the controlling Federal agency the amount of payment to be made to the local taxing authority. In the case of industrial or commercial real property, however, the applicant would be required to make a showing that Federal acquisition of such property has resulted in a financial hardship to the community in question. The actual payment to be made would be based upon the amount of local taxes which would have been payable had the property been privately owned, increased by any additional expenditures incurred by the taxing authority in furnishing services to the Federal property, and diminished by the aggregate of local-type governmental services furnished by the controlling Federal agency, further diminished by any additional credit against Federal liability resulting from any exemption, immunity, or reduction in the tax rate or amount, if such are available, under State or local law, to private persons as an inducement to engage in industrial or commercial activities within the territorial jurisdiction of the particular tax authority. The Board's decisions are made final and would be conclusive upon all taxing authorities and Federal agencies.

Mr. President, this bill represents the culmination of more than 7 years of continuous efforts by the Committee on Government Operations to develop a program which would afford some measure of relief to local communities which have suffered losses as the result of the presence of Federal tax-immune property in their jurisdictions, but would not do violence to the principle of Federal tax immunity or constitute an undue burden on the Federal Treasury. Through the years, many hundreds of witnesses have been heard; many volumes of testimony have been compiled; and numerous reports have been made by interested groups and carefully studied by the committee.

Mr. President, I think I should note that this bill is not, as was stated some time earlier, any sort of revolutionary departure in the public policy of this country. As a matter of fact, the bill covers only a very limited category of property and is no more revolutionary in nature than are the 55 existing laws which authorize similar Federal payments.

Mr. President, I note this for the RECORD because very often it has been said that we should study the question a little longer. We have been studying this problem for more than 20 years. Furthermore, Mr. President, the President's Commission on Intergovernmental Relations established by the Congress, which made its report to the 84th Congress, spent almost 2 years in exhaustive and comprehensive studies of the very subject matter which is now before us.

I should like to note, also, that a number of our colleagues have introduced bills upon this subject matter. I think 11 bills were introduced by various Members of the Senate, some of them with cosponsorship. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BUSH] introduced such a bill, as did the senior Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], the junior Senator from California [Mr. KUCHEL], the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE] and the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER]. There were also other Members of this body who introduced measures directed toward the same objective, some of which were much broader in scope than the limited provisions of the bill which is now before us.

I introduced in this Congress, as well as in the 82d and 83d Congresses, measures directed toward regularizing and reorganizing the Government's program of payments in lieu of taxes. I emphasize this matter only because the argument that we should delay, the argument that we should study further the question and the argument that we should have more time, fall for lack of evidence.

When 20 years have been spent in the study of a proposal, it appears to me that there has been not only elementary, secondary, and higher education, but also just about all the graduate courses that could possibly be taken. It now appears that the time has come to stop studying and to move into action.

The purpose of the bill is to move into the field on a limited scale and, at the same time, to provide a continuing study with pragmatic tests. Applications from local taxing authorities would be considered by a competent Federal administrative board. Unless this is done, there would be nothing more than a study in the theory of government, and nothing could be done about its practical application.

I hold in my hands two volumes of testimony, compiled as a result of hearings conducted during this Congress. We also held hearings in the 83d Congress, and in the 82d Congress.

As I indicated earlier, the President's Commission on Intergovernmental Relations published a very extensive volume on this particular subject matter, containing some 200 pages in that report.

I desire to point out that the Committee on Government Operations concluded that if anything ever was to be done about the matter, there must be a beginning. Working carefully and closely with the Bureau of the Budget which represents the President and the departments of the Government, a bill has been prepared for the consideration of Congress which provides for a limited, 5-year program; a bill which has specific limitations as to the scope of the program; and which provides for a continuing study of the practical problems and the objectives, through a Federal board on payments in lieu of taxes.

I desire to have the RECORD show also that the Federal board to which I have alluded, and which is described in detail in the report, will study the matter, not on the basis of a generalized, visionary study, but rather on a case-by-case basis. Each locality having Federal tax-immune property would make an application to the Federal board for payments. The Federal board would determine the amount, if any, to be paid. Furthermore, its studies would be related to each situation presented.

One of the arguments which some persons have made against the bill is that it fails to cover certain areas or categories of properties in the States they represent.

But I point out that every piece of legislation, with few exceptions, has had a beginning point, as did, for example, social security, minimum wages, and the program for health and research.

This bill makes a beginning, in manageable proportions, so that we will know what we are doing; so that we can proceed case by case, locality by locality, on the basis of the facts, and not in any way overextend our responsibilities at the Federal level. At the same time, we will not ignore the crying needs of community after community, which at the present time find their tax base being whittled away by the acquisition of property by the Federal Government.

It is for that purpose that I defend the bill before the Senate. It is for that purpose that I took upon myself, at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Government Operations, the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN], the responsibility for holding hearings. I wish to make it quite clear that I have no special interest in this legislation, except as a service to my colleagues.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Does the bill apply to public lands?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. It does not apply to public lands, so far as immediate payments are concerned. But the board would receive applications, evidence, and testimony as to the need for payments upon public lands. In other words, a State or a local authority may make its application and be heard upon it.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. THYE. The thought occurred to me—and my colleague and I are confronted with the same problem—that the Federal Government owns property at Rosemount, in Dakota County, Minn. How would the bill affect the 8,000 acres of Federal property which lie within that one county?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. The property would be subject to review by the Federal board. If there were any financial hardship in that particular community, the property would be subject to payment by the Federal Government in lieu of taxes.

Mr. THYE. A hardship must exist.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. That is correct.

Mr. THYE. Almost 8,000 acres of excellent farmland have been taken over by the Ordnance plant, a part of it under the experimental operation of the University of Minnesota, some of it rented back to the farmers who live adjacent to the area, and who are farming it on a share basis.

The same question could be raised as to Indian lands in the State, and also as to the national forests.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Those lands would not be covered by the express language of the measure, although they would not be excluded from a study by the Federal board for further recommendation.

Mr. President, I now wish to yield to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BUSH]; then I shall decline to yield further until I have concluded my remarks. At that time I shall be glad to yield to my colleagues.

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, I congratulate the Senator from Minnesota upon the work he has done on this very important measure, which, as he says, has been in issue for a good many years. It is a matter of great concern to many of our communities.

I especially congratulate him because, as he said, he has approached the study from a completely disinterested point of view. He has given it very objective treatment. I think he has come forth with a bill which, while it does not go so far as my bill, or so far as I should like to see it go, is a move in the right direction. It is a step toward correction of the injustices done by the Federal Government when its operations impose additional tax burdens upon local government.

I am sorry the cutoff date had to be 1950, because I am one of those who feels that it does not give them the relief they should have. Nevertheless, I think much progress has been made, and I hope the bill will be passed.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I am grateful to the Senator from Connecticut. I assure him we were very much assisted by his splendid testimony before our committee, and I want to thank him for his participation and his leadership in making possible the consideration of this measure.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I do not want to have to cut off colloquy and debate on the bill, because it is the privilege of the Senate to debate. Since my adversary on this measure seeks to ask a question, I shall yield to him for that purpose, but with the clear understanding that I shall then proceed with my statement.

Mr. MUNDT. I thank the Senator very much. In answer to the questions asked by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] and the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. THYE], the junior Senator from Minnesota very accurately and candidly stated that the bill does not provide any payments for the kind of problem they presented, in public land States and rural areas. I wonder if it would be a fair summation, therefore, to say that the bill as it is now written provides cash subsidies for the cities and continuous studies for the rural areas and public land States?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. That is not true, because it is possible that there may be a Federal installation in rural areas, such as exists at Rosemount, Minn., which surely is out in the country. The bill applies without regard to whether an urban or rural area is involved, if there is a Federal installation that inflicts a hardship on the local communities; and local communities can be townships, sanitary districts, school districts, or counties.

I think it is wrong to try to prejudice the pending legislation by saying it is an urban versus rural fight. The truth is that most industries are in urban areas; but under the Federal Government's own dispersal program, there are times when industry finds itself far out in the country. It may not mean that there are chickens and cows and turkeys on that installation, but that does not in the least make it nonrural.

The bill would establish a very limited program. It is only for a 5-year period. It is within our means to extend or expand the program if the studies and recommendations which are made show the necessity for further action.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for the purpose of correcting the RECORD?

Mr.HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. MUNDT. Inadvertently, I think the Senator from Minnesota left the wrong impression.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I shall be happy to have the Senator correct the error.

Mr. MUNDT. The Senator was right when he pointed out that payments in lieu of taxes for industrial and commercial property can take place whether the industrial property is in the city, where it always is, or in the country, when it can be found there. One of the difficulties of trying to enact comprehensive legislation of this kind, in the twilight of adjournment, is that we do not get a chance, in the turmoil, to concentrate on the language. The second section provides for payment of special assessments in urban areas. So the sanitary districts and the country areas would not receive anything.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. If the Senator from South Dakota will be more accurate and not quite so oratorical, he will see that the section says urban and suburban.

Mr. MUNDT. The language in section 2 reads: "special assessments levied after the effective date of this act upon real property situated in urban and suburban areas."

Suburban communities are considered the environs of big cities, and the provision does not affect such States as Nevada and other public-land States.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. It is true that it does not cover public lands.

Based upon these many years of study and consideration, the committee has come to the following conclusions:

First. There is an urgent need for immediate legislative action to relieve local taxing authorities from unjustified and inequitable burdens and hardships which have been imposed upon them as the result of large-scale Federal acquisition of various types of property which has operated to remove such property from the local tax rolls.

Second. Because of the extremely complex nature of the subject and the many variables which are involved, it is not possible to devise a comprehensive program which will operate in a fair and equitable manner, and which is not likely to involve huge expenditures of Federal funds and possible "windfall" payments to communities which have actually been benefited rather than harmed by the presence of Federal installations.

Third. The only equitable type of program which is possible is one in which payments are based upon individual cases and situations as they are presented and documented, and as information relative to each situation is compiled, evaluated, and assessed on its merits.

Mr. President, S. 4183 would provide for the beginning of such a program, on a 5-year trial basis. It would permit modest payments in limited areas and, in its major aspects, would permit payments only to those local taxing authorities which are able to show that, after weighing the benefits resulting from the presence of Federal installations against the burdens imposed on local taxpayers and local taxing authorities, they were still suffering financial hardships.

I want to underscore the fact that communities often receive benefits from those installations. I want to underscore the fact that many chambers of commerce have come to Washington to see their congressional delegations in order to get Federal installations. I want to make it clear that under this program payments on industrial or commercial real property should be made only when it can be demonstrated that there is financial hardship. What does that mean? It means financial hardship to the point where the local taxing authority is unable to meet the cost of local services which are necessary, even for the continuity of the Federal installation.

We are seeking elemental justice. I have not tried to delude anyone. I have talked with the junior Senator from California [Mr. KUCHEL], the senior Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BUSH] in particular. It is not what they had hoped for. It is not what they had planned on. It is not what they deserve, and it surely is not what the public land States deserve. They get little or nothing from this particular bill, nothing other than the possibility of further study and proposals, which are recommended. But I say the bill establishes the principle of the responsibility of the Federal Government for payments in lieu of taxes, if there is financial distress and hardship which Federal installations or the presence of Federal activities impose on communities.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I have said I would not yield, and I prefer to continue and complete my statement. I hope the Senator understands.

Mr. NEUBERGER. I understand.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, the bill would implement, in principle, many of the major recommendations of the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, under the chairmanship of the distinguished Mr. Kestnbaum, relative to payments in lieu of taxes. Furthermore, it has the support of the administration and embodies the views and amendments submitted to the committee by the Bureau of the Budget.

Let me be very candid with my colleagues. I wanted what I thought was a more generous and comprehensive bill. I argued for weeks to bring out a better and more generous bill; but I thought if we could accomplish something, it would be better than to accomplish nothing. I thought if we could get the Bureau of the Budget and the President and the departments of Government to agree on this limited advance, it would be worth while. I am convinced that once the Federal board of five members for which the bill provides, is established, we shall see an improvement in the legislation in the years to come.

We shall see it cover wider areas and meet more definite problems. But I think we should recognize that we cannot pass such a bill—which enters into a new field of activity—on a regularized basis unless the President and the administration are in support. In this instance, we have their support. If the bill passes, the President will sign it. The Bureau of the Budget has worked closely with us. I wish to pay tribute to Mr. Robert Merriam, of the Bureau of the Budget, for the fine cooperation he has extended to the Committee on Government Operations, and also to others of the technical staff of the Bureau of the Budget who worked with our committee. It would have been impossible to prepare this measure without the expert guidance of our professional staff of the Committee on Government Operations. On the floor at this time there is with me Mr. Nobleman, who probably knows more about this subject than does anyone else in the United States, with the possible exception of Mr. Labowitz, of the Bureau of the Budget. He has worked on this matter for more than a generation.

This bill is what I call the result of judicious judgment, not exactly on the part of the Senator from Minnesota, but on the part of persons who know what this is all about, and who have spent years and years in studying it.

Mr. President, I desire to state very emphatically that nothing contained in the bill would have any effect on existing payments or revenue-sharing payments authorized by present law. So to the public land States, where there is revenue sharing with the Department of the Interior, I say that will continue; and where Federal payments are made to school districts in which there are Federal activities, they will continue. Similarly, let me say to my friends of the TVA that payments will continue to be made to the local governmental jurisdictions.

Finally, nothing contained in the bill would have any effect upon existing payments or revenue-sharing arrangements authorized by law.

I desire to state very emphatically that S. 4183 is most definitely not a give-away program; it will not open the gates to unlimited and unrestrained payments by the Federal Government to local communities; and it is not discriminatory.

Great care has been taken to incorporate in the bill adequate safeguards and various protective measures to insure that no community will receive payments to which it is not entitled. Some of these protective measures are: First, a provision denying payments to any community which is receiving a Federal payment for the same property under another Federal program; and with respect to commercial or industrial real property; second, the 1950 cutoff date; third, the requirement of a showing of demonstrable hardship; fourth, a rigid formula for determining the amount of payments, in the event of a showing of eligibility and entitlement; fifth, a provision that in no event can the Federal payment exceed an amount equivalent to the amount of the tax, had the property been privately owned by a taxable person; and, sixth, a provision that the Federal property will receive the same tax benefits offered by a taxing authority to private, taxable persons.

It has been alleged that this bill is discriminatory. Such an allegation is entirely without merit. It is true that the coverage of this bill is limited, and numerous communities will not receive payments if the Federal industrial or commercial property in their jurisdiction was acquired after June 30, 1950. However, without a cutoff date, the cost of this program would have been exceedingly high; the 1950 date represents the beginning of a period of expanded Federal acquisition; and a large number of communities have been able to accommodate themselves to the effect of Federal acquisition prior to that date. Moreover the fact that the bill covers only a limited category of property, does not make it any more discriminatory than the 55 existing laws which authorize some type of Federal payments to local communities, covering some and excluding others.

Mr. President, I wish to emphasize that point, because it is quite obvious that the opposition to the bill will be based on the fact that the bill does not cover every conceivable kind of property; and, as I have already sensed, an effort will be made to try to pile up, point by point, and Senator by Senator, enough opposition on the basis of the fact that the bill does not "do something directly for me," so as to defeat a very necessary program for the Federal Government, in its relationships with the local governments.

It may be somewhat reassuring to some of my colleagues to learn that if there ever was a States rights bill, this is it. This is a States rights, local rights bill. I have always believed in the integrity and stability of local government, and I believe in the rights and powers of State governments. I have only hoped that they would exercise them, so as to develop the strength necessary to give local services to the people.

Furthermore, Mr. President, it should be stressed that this bill does not constitute permanent legislation, although it may possibly point the way to permanent legislation, in the event that the Congress deems it desirable. If there are defects in the operation of this program—and I imagine there will be found to be—as applications and evidence which are presented to the Federal administrative board are analyzed and developed, the board will make reports and recommendations to the Congress for improvements, and the Congress will be in a position to make the final determination, in each area, based, not upon abstract studies, but upon concrete, documented evidence. I sincerely believe that this is one of the most important points of the bill.

Mr. President, I believe that every Member of this body is well aware of the dual nature of his responsibilities. As Members of the United States Senate, we owe a duty to the people of this great Nation to safeguard the Federal Treasury. At the same time, we owe an equally important duty to the people and governments of the States which we represent. Many of us in this body have been privileged to serve as State or local government officials. During that service, we have become very familiar with the serious fiscal problems of local governments. Their source of revenue is extremely limited, but the demand for services goes on. The basic source of income to provide these services to the taxpayers of each community throughout the land is the tax on real property. That tax is very high and has almost reached the point of diminishing returns. From this source, communities must have schools, police, fire, and numerous other necessary services. However, the Federal Government has been continuously acquiring real property in numerous communities, taking it off the tax rolls and depriving the local taxing authorities of vital income. In some instances, an overall benefit results to the community from the presence of the Federal installations. In other instances, however, the community is required to furnish additional services to such an installation, thereby burdening the community further while removing substantial portions of its revenue-producing property.

I can hear some say, "These communities ought to have other kinds of taxes." That may be true, but I have been the mayor of a city, and I know how difficult it is to get a State legislature to authorize a local community to have a new form of tax. If we want new forms of taxes, through charter revision, it is quite a project of community organization to accomplish the task. Even though such things were accomplished, it is still fair to say that if the Federal Government acquires a substantial portion of the real property in a community, and requires services by the fire department, the police department, and many other departments of government, the Federal Government should make a payment to that community for such services.

It is this situation, Mr. President, that this bill aims to correct. Bear in mind, however, that no community will be able simply to walk in and tell the Federal Board that the Federal Government has acquired real property and that the local taxing authority should be reimbursed. On the contrary, the local taxing authority will be required to show that the Federal acquisition has resulted in demonstrable, provable hardship; and only after a careful examination by the board of all aspects of the situation will local taxing authority be able to obtain a payment, and even that payment will be subject to a carefully-designed formula, which will insure that the community will receive no more than the amount to which it can prove entitlement, on the basis of demonstrable hardship.

There is another consideration involved in this bill. As I have indicated previously, the real property holdings of the Federal Government have reached enormous proportions and entail tremendous expenditures.

I invite the attention of my colleagues to the inventory of Federal property holdings which has been made by the General Services Administration. That contained a report which is known as Senate Document No. 100, Inventory Report of Federal Real Property in the United States as of June 30, 1955, 84th Congress, 2d Session. This report was prepared at the request of the Committee on Appropriations of the United States Senate and contains a summary of Federal holdings, as of June 30, 1955, running to 110 printed pages. When we examine this document, we begin to realize the proportions of Federal holdings of real and commercial properties in this country.

If Federal agencies are required, in proper cases, to make such payments as are provided for in this bill, it should serve as an incentive to these agencies to dispose of numerous substantial holdings of commercial and industrial real property which should be in the hands of private industry and on the tax rolls of the communities in which they are located. I think that point ought to be well understood. This legislation will act as an incentive, in some instances, for the Government to make adequate disposal of its property, to sell it to private investors, so that it can become taxable property under normal tax procedures.

Mr. President, S. 4183 represents the firm conviction of the Committee on Government Operations that no comprehensive program is possible and that the only feasible approach to a solution of this troublesome problem is by means of a limited program of payments in lieu of taxes, coupled with a case-by-case consideration by an administrative board of the relative merits of individual cases and situations, within limitations established by law. It is also our firm conviction that any further studies of this problem which are unrelated to specific situations are simply futile and meaningless. Virtually every one of the existing statutes which provide either for payments of taxes, in lieu of taxes, or shared revenue arrangements has been tailored to meet a specific need which became apparent in connection with consideration of other legislation. It is quite apparent that any future legislation must be based upon the result of the case-by-case studies made by the board which would be established by this bill. Mr. President, I have studied this problem for many years, as mayor of a good-sized city; as a member of the Committee on Government Operations; at one time as chairman of its Subcommittee on Intergovernmental Relations; and as a member of the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations and its Study Committee on Payments in Lieu of Taxes and Shared Revenues. I am not exactly what one might call a "Johnny-Come-Lately" in this field. Based upon this experience, it is my sincere conclusion that S. 4183 is a reasonable, moderate, and logical approach which will enable the systematic compilation, on a case-by-case basis, of information relative to the needs of each community in which Federal property is located. The Congress will have the benefit of a report from the administrative board, detailing its activities, every 6 months; it will have a comprehensive report from the board, based upon the cases adjudicated by it and the field studies conducted with respect to other types of cases, within 2 years after the effective date of this act; and the Congress will have a solid foundation upon which to base further policy determinations.

I would like to say a few words with respect to the probable cost of the program provided for by the pending bill. The numerous variables involved in determining cost make any accurate estimate extremely difficult. That can only be determined as each application comes in, since it will be based upon, first, the assessed value of each piece of property; second, the applicable local tax rate for each specific piece of property; third, the adjustments which would be necessary under the formula provided for in the bill; and fourth, a determination of whether or not Federal acquisition of each piece of property in question has resulted in a financial hardship to the local taxing authority and the extent of such hardship in terms of demonstrated financial loss. It seems obvious that these matters cannot be determined in the abstract by any interdepartmental committee, composed of executive branch representatives, on a part-time basis. Anything less than a full-time study by a quasi-judicial body will be futile.

I mention this because I understand a proposal will be made to place the whole program in the hands of an interdepartmental committee, consisting of representatives of departments and agencies, who would study the problem on a part-time basis.

If we want to make sure that nothing is done, that is the way to do it. If anything is to be done about it, it will require full-time consideration by men and women who are skilled in fiscal problems, tax problems, and the relationship that exists between local governments and the Federal Government. Anything less than a full-time study by a quasi-judicial body will be futile. I can speak as somewhat of an expert on that point, because I have served on committees and subcommittees and Presidential Commissions on a part-time basis, and during my 7 years' service in the Senate I have served on a part-time basis in studying this problem.

To return to the question of cost, bearing in mind, the limitations previously referred to, the Bureau of the Budget has estimated that S. 4183 will involve somewhere between $12 million and $22 million annually for a 5-year period. This estimate is probably high, and it is anticipated that the actual amounts will be considerably less.

Mr. President, the time has come when we must face this problem in a forthright, realistic manner. We have studied this subject to death. What we need now is action. Certainly, a modest, experimental approach to this serious problem for a 5-year period, such as this bill would establish, with a report being made every 6 months, and an exhaustive report within 2 years, is not too much for hard-pressed communities to expect from the Federal Department.

It is true that we need more information. But the information we need can only be compiled in the manner provided for by S. 4183. We do not contend that the bill is perfect. We are convinced, however, that it represents the only realistic approach. We are confident that if each Member of this body searches his conscience, he will come to the conclusion that it is incumbent upon us to take some action right now. We are also confident that the reasonableness and moderation which characterize this bill will make it possible for a large majority of our membership to support it.

At this point I should like to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the American Municipal Association, signed by Keith Seegmiller, executive secretary, National Association of County Officials, and by Patrick Healy, Jr., executive director, American Municipal Association.

The letter states, in substance, that these associations support the bill. These are our greatest local governmental associations. They support the bill and urge, as they say in the final paragraph of the letter, wholehearted support for the legislation. The letter was addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Government Operations, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN].

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN MUNICIPAL ASSOCIATION,
Washington, D. C., July 20, 1956.

The Honorable JOHN L. MCCLELLAN,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MCCLELLAN: There is before the Senate a bill which would grant financial relief to hard-pressed city and county governments by authorizing a limited program of payments in lieu of local property taxes on federally owned property. The bill, S. 4183, is the product of years of study by independent boards and commissions and was introduced by the Senate Government Operations Committee after public hearings and studied deliberation. The bill has the support of the President.

The measure provides for payments in lieu of local property taxes on business and commercial property acquired by the Federal Government since January 30, 1950. Payments are also authorized for federally owned property leased or sold on conditional sales contract. Finally, the measure would authorize Federal agencies to pay their pro rata share of the cost of certain local improvement assessments for such items as streets, sidewalks, gutters, sewers, and other improvements that benefit Federal property.

A special 5-man board, appointed by the President with the confirmation of the Senate, would administer the program which automatically expires at the end of 5 years. There are numerous detailed safeguards developed by the Bureau of the Budget and the committee to protect the Federal Government from unwarranted payments.

This limited measure, we believe, will be a very constructive step in relieving the financial hardships suffered by many local government units because of the concentration of federally owned property for which services must be provided and from which no revenues are received.

It has been the traditional policy of the Congress to preserve the financial integrity of State and local governments and we would urge your wholehearted support for this legislation.

Sincerely yours,

KEITH SEEGMILLER,
Executive Secretary, National Association of County Officials.

PATRICK HEALY, Jr.,
Executive Director, American Municipal Association.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, the committee's decision to approve a program providing for three categories of payments was based upon the following considerations:

First. With respect to special assessments levied after the effective date of the act, it was felt that since a special assessment results in an ultimate improvement to the property, thus adding to its value, there is no reason why Federal agencies should not pay for improvements to their properties in the same manner as private taxable owners, provided, of course, the assessment is levied on real property owned by all other taxable persons.

Second. With respect to payments in lieu of taxes on the Federal Government's interest in real property leased or sold to private persons under conditional sales contracts, the property is being used for private purposes, and is operated by private, taxable persons, and the interest of the Federal Government is only that of a landlord, in the case of leased property, and is purely temporary in the case of property conditionally sold.

Third. With respect to industrial or commercial property acquired after June 30, 1950, the guiding consideration was the fact that the Federal use of such property is, for the most part, identical to that of private taxable property used to produce for the same purposes. Thus, if the property were privately owned, it would pay taxes; the mere fact of Federal ownership should not deprive the local taxing authority of taxes in cases where Federal acquisition or use has resulted in a hardship to the community. In the event that the local taxing authority is unable to demonstrate to the Federal administrative board that Federal acquisition has resulted in hardship, no payments would be made. The June 30, 1950, cutoff date was chosen because this date would cover the increased Federal acquisition of real property of this type, incident to the Korean war. In addition, it will serve to keep the cost of this program within reasonable bounds.

We can argue about a cutoff date from now until kingdom come, but it is absolutely essential that we do set a date; and the cutoff date we have chosen is a fair date, because it represents the point when the real inflationary impact was felt by our local communities. It was then that new requirements for schools and streets and highways and sewage systems and other services really made their heavy impact upon local governments. It was at that time, Mr. President, that the Federal Government stepped up its acquisitions considerably as a result of the Korean war and the program of defense and rearmament which became necessary for our national security.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. KUCHEL. Mr. President, I sat through the long hearings which have been held this year and last year on the question which now confronts the Senate in the pending bill. I participated in those hearings. Before I became a Member of the Senate I was State comptroller in the government of California. In that capacity I came face to face with the fact that the Federal Government has increased its property holdings in my State in a most prodigious manner. One county, for example, the county of San Bernardino, is owned almost three-fourths by the Federal Government. Cities in our State are owned almost entirely by the Federal Government and occupied by Federal installations.

During the hearings, my friend, the able Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], presided, and the able junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER] and I jointly introduced a bill which would recognize the responsibility of the Federal Government to participate in underwriting its just proportion of the cost of carrying on local governmental activities.

I say to my friend from Minnesota that he merits the commendation of his colleagues in the Senate and those who have been interested in the growing fiscal problems of local governments, the governments of our cities, our counties, and our special districts.

Mr. President, this problem is not new. It has grown with great rapidity, particularly in the past half dozen years. The problem, so far as attempts at a solution of it are concerned, has been with the American people and the Congress for a long time.

The late Robert A. Taft of Ohio was interested in the problem. My able colleague from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] has taken an active interest in it over a long period of time. The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. POTTER], and many other Senators to whom my friend from Minnesota has alluded, have taken a keen interest in it, have introduced measures on the subject, and have worked valiantly in order that Congress might at last come to grips with it. It comes to grips with it in the bill which is now before the Senate. It is not what any of us wanted, but, as my friend from Minnesota has said, it recognizes the existence of the problem and accepts the moral responsibility of the Federal Government in a field too long overlooked by it.

To that extent, Mr. President, I very much hope that the bill may pass the Senate shortly, without what I am afraid will be restrictive amendments which will be offered on the floor by some of the Members of the Senate.

I repeat my congratulations to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I thank my friend from California.

Mr. President, I wish the RECORD to show that no Member of this body has been more diligent in getting action on this measure than has the junior Senator from California [Mr. KUCHEL]. I feel free to say that he has talked to me about it, as the chairman of the subcommittee, a dozen or more times. He has testified before the committee. I am deeply grateful to him for his helpfulness.

In that statement, Mr. President, I should like to include the Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER], who likewise came before the subcommittee and testified on a bill which he cosponsored with the junior Senator from California and the junior Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. President, there is no partisanship in this measure. There is only an effort to recognize, as the Senator from California has said, the principle of Federal Government responsibility.

We know that this bill is not as broad in its coverage as we would like it to be, but, at least, it comes to the point. That is the whole purpose of the measure.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. Is my understanding of this measure correct that it does not pertain to farmland or to property acquired prior to 1950?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. It does not pertain to so-called public lands; that is correct.

It applies to no property acquired before 1950.

Mr. CURTIS. My reference was not to public lands; but I refer to agricultural lands which have been taken in recent years for various governmental purposes. The bill does not deal with such land, does it?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. No, it does not.

Mr. CURTIS. I am very much interested in the problem to which the Senator has addressed himself. I certainly hope that at a later date—I realize that this late in the session great changes cannot be made in the measure—the discrimination—and it is discrimination—against prior acquisitions and against agricultural lands can be considered, and some relief granted.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I thank the Senator from Nebraska for his observation. I shall try to be exceedingly candid about the limitations of the measure. I would have the Senator know that the bill provides for a Federal board which, upon its own motion or application, can conduct studies and investigations, including specific field investigations, incident to the performance of any of its duties, as it may determine to be advisable, with regard to the fiscal and other problems of the taxing authorities, arising from the immunity of the United States to ad valorem, real, or personal property taxes imposed by such authorities anywhere. That includes agricultural land, and includes public and forest lands.

What I am trying to say to the Senator is that the payments now provided in the bill are to be made upon commercial and real properties in urban and suburban areas. But the authority of the Board to recommend payments by Congress for other lands is clearly spelled out.

So this is not a proposition which excludes public lands or rural areas.

Mr. CURTIS. Sometimes the property taken by the Federal Government in a city results in a sizable payroll in that community, which, in turn, helps the community.

In other instances very valuable farmland has been taken and has upset entire counties and townships in their tax bases. Yet, such farmland is held to be of a nature which is more or less unproductive, so far as the local economy is concerned.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. If land is taken by the Federal Government for industrial or commercial purposes, even if it is in the countryside, it is eligible for payment, if the financial hardship can be shown. No payment at all will be made unless financial hardship is demonstrated.

Mr. CURTIS. The case I had in mind occurred prior to 1950. The land was taken for military purposes. As I understand, that case would not come within the scope of the bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. It would not come within this particular proposal; except that if the land was taken for use as a military reservation, payments to the local governments may be made under other laws. An appropriation bill was passed only the other day providing $400 million in Federal aid to school districts where there are Federal activities which have made an impact on those districts. I happened to be the author of the original act. This payment would go to the locality.

Mr. CURTIS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a telegram I have received under date of July 17, 1956, from the senate interim committee on public lands, of the State of California. I call the telegram particularly to the attention of the distinguished minority leader and his colleague, the distinguished junior Senator from California [Mr. KUCHEL], because the interim committee, which has spent much time in a study of the subject, says, in part:

The United States Senate is respectfully urged to give immediate passage to S. 4183 by Senator HUBERT HUMPHREY and to speed this beneficial measure on its way so that the House of Representatives may act upon it prior to adjournment of the 84th Congress.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SACRAMENTO, CALIF., July 17, 1956.

Secretary of the Senate FELTON M. JOHNSTON and KEITH SEEGMILLER,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Resolution re urgency of congressional action on legislation for payments in lieu of taxes on Federal real property:

"Whereas the Legislature of the State of California has memorialized Congress on numerous occasions to give favorable consideration to legislation providing a system of payments in lieu of taxes on Federal properties; and

"Whereas the California State Senate feels such a great interest in this problem that it has created this State senate interim committee on public lands; and

"Whereas this interim committee for the past 2 years has worked actively and constantly toward the goal of action by the 84th Congress on such legislation; and

"Whereas, as a result of these activities and those of the counties and cities of America, the 84th Congress has had before it legislation based on the strong recommendations of the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations; and

"Whereas the United States Senate Committee on Government Operations on July 6 favorably reported out S. 4183, a greatly modified beginning measure for payments in lieu of taxes; and

"Whereas positive action by the 84th Congress is very much needed by the local governments who bear the burdens of Federal tax exemption: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the senate interim committee on public lands meeting in Sacramento in the State capitol this 14th day of July 1956, That the United States Senate is respectfully urged to give immediate passage to S. 4183 by Senator HUBERT HUMPHREY and to speed this beneficial measure on its way so that the House of Representatives may act upon it prior to adjournment of the 84th Congress."

SENATE INTERIM COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I am very grateful for the expression of interest and support by an official committee of the California Legislature concerning the proposed legislation. They recognize the limitations of the bill, but they are broadminded enough to support its general purpose.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

During the delivery of Mr. HUMPHREY'S remarks,

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Is it a privileged matter?

Mr. CLEMENTS. Yes; it is.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Yes; I yield for that purpose.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Judiciary, I report four bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bills will be received and placed on the calendar.

The reports referred to are as follows:

By Mr. EASTLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, without amendment:

H. R. 800. An act to amend section 1201 of title 18 of the United States Code to authorize the Federal Bureau of Investigation to initiate investigation of any kidnaping in which the victim has not been released within 24 hours after his seizure;

H. R. 6283. An act for the relief of Joseph J. Tierney; and

H. R. 10006. An act for the relief of Vincent P. Svelnis.

By Mr. EASTLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment:

S. 157. A bill for the relief of Louis S. Thomas and D. Grace Thomas.

FBI INVESTIGATION WITHIN 24 HOURS OF KIDNAPING

During the delivery of the speech of Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota,

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 800, one of the bills which has just been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, I told the acting majority leader that I would yield at any time for any measure which might be called up because we wish to make progress.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, certainly there is no opposition by either the majority leader or the minority leader to the request made by the Senator from Mississippi.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read by title, for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 800) to amend section 1201 of title 18 of the United States Code, to authorize the Federal Bureau of Investigation to initiate investigation of any kidnaping in which the victim has not been released within 24 hours after his seizure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi for the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, as the law now stands, a week is required, after a kidnaping occurs, before the FBI can enter the case. This bill will reduce that time to 24 hours.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, I am happy to yield for the purpose of the consideration of this bill. I am entirely in favor of the bill, and I commend the chairman of the committee for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill (H. R. 800) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELEASE OF RESTRICTIONS ON LAND BELONGING TO THE WEST MARKS BAPTIST CHURCH OF QUITMAN COUNTY, MISS.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I am glad to yield.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, there is at the desk House bill 9640. The bill has come from the House, and merely relates to a reversionary interest in eight-tenths of an acre of land which was sold by the Government a number of years ago to a small Baptist church in my State. The bill merely will remove the reversionary clause, so some money with which to remodel the church can be borrowed.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be laid before the Senate at this time, without having the bill referred to a committee. The bill has the clearance of the majority leader and the minority leader and the chairman of the committee, and the members of the committee have been canvassed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 9640) to require the Secretary of Agriculture to release certain restrictions on the real property heretofore conveyed to the West Marks Baptist Church of Quitman County, Miss., which was read twice by its title.

Mr. STENNIS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Minnesota very much indeed for his courtesy in yielding.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, I am very happy to cooperate with the Senator from Mississippi in behalf of the Baptist church.

Mr. STENNIS. On behalf of the church, I wish to thank the Senator from Minnesota. He has been most generous.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the following bills and joint resolutions of the Senate:

S. 3101. An act to authorize construction by the Secretary of the Interior of the Crooked River Federal reclamation project, Oregon;

S. 3113. An act to amend section 9 (c) (2) of the Merchant Ship Sales Act of 1946, as amended;

S. 3416. An act relative to employment for certain adult Indians on or near Indian reservations;

S. 3594. An act to reauthorize construction by the Secretary of the Interior of Farwell unit, Nebraska, of the Missouri River Basin project;

S. 4011. An act to amend section 650 of title 14, United States Code, entitled "Coast Guard", relating to the Coast Guard Supply Fund;

S. 4099. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. for the construction of a dam on the north branch of the Potomac River;

S. 4116. An act to increase the membership of the Senate Office Building Commission;

S. 4164. An act to provide for the appointment of a Federal Highway Administrator in the Department of Commerce, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 187. Joint resolution to extend the operation of the Emergency Ship Repair Act of 1954.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House:

H. R. 10184. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to convey property to the county of Pierce, State of Washington; and

H. R. 11554. An act to amend certain provisions of title XI of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, to facilitate private financing of merchant vessels in the interest of national defense, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House:

H. R. 9396. An act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to place guar seed on the free list; and

H. R. 10177. An act to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to provide that certain lathes used for shoe last roughing or shoe last finishing may be imported into the United States free of duty.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12350) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1957, and for other purposes; that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 14, 30, 33, 35, 39, 40, 44, 47, 51, 54, 56, 59, 62, 64, 65, 67, 70, 72, 73, 74, 77, 78, 82, 85, and 96 to the bill, and concurred therein, and that the House receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 18, 21, 22, 23, 27, 37, 52, 53, 57, and 86 and concurred therein severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9640) to require the Secretary of Agriculture to release certain restrictions on the real property heretofore conveyed to the West Marks Baptist Church, of Quitman County, Miss.

SECOND SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION BILL, 1957—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12350) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1957, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of July 26, 1956, p. 14877, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Arizona a question?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Do I correctly understand that the $400,000 item for the upper harbor in Minnesota is included in the bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I thank the distinguished chairman.

PURCHASE OF CRITICAL MINERALS—EXTENSION OF THE 1953 MALONE-ASPINALL ACT

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, Senate bill 3982, for which a $21 million appropriation has been provided in H. R. 12350, was an interim bill to keep the tungsten, fluorspar, columbium-tantalum, and asbestos mines open until the President's Cabinet Committee can come down with a permanent plan for the production of the strategic and critical materials without which we cannot make a jet engine.

It is a national defense act, Mr. President.

REMOVED TUNGSTEN FROM CRITICAL LIST

Tungsten, for example, has been on the critical list since 1934, and the continual argument has been that we have no tungsten in this Nation and must import it; and the bulk of it has been imported from South Africa, Burma, China, and, as we all know, China areas from which such shipments would be unavailable in wartime—and it is well recognized that such sales can be stopped in peacetime as the shipment of monozite sand was stopped by India.

FOUGHT A WAR TO GET TUNGSTEN

In addition, many people believe the Korean war might have been justified because large amounts of tungsten were available there and were imported after World War II started at great cost to our Government. We do not need to fight a war to get tungsten—the supply in this Nation is practically inexhaustible.

THE 1953 MALONE-ASPINALL ACT

The bill is an extension of the 1953 Malone-Aspinall Act which I sponsored in the Senate. That legislation included 8 critical minerals without which a jet engine cannot be made. It was designed to increase domestic production of these critical minerals. It resulted in increased production of such minerals—and in removing tungsten from the critical category.

COORDINATED OFFICE OF NATIONAL DEFENSE PURCHASE

The bill does not include the minerals of the original 1953 act, which the Director of the Office of National Defense has testified he can and will continue to purchase during the life of the act, which includes manganese, chromite, beryl, and mica.

I want to compliment the members of the House conference committee for receding from their position and agreeing upon a $21 million appropriation for the purpose of carrying out the purposes of the act.

The funds provided should keep the mines operating into 1957 when an additional appropriation can be provided.

COLUMBIUM-TANTALUM FROM NIGERIA

The greater part of the columbium-tantalum has been and is still coming from Nigeria, although we have one deposit in Idaho under a special contract. However, under the extension of the 1953 act, anyone who discovers a columbium-tantalum deposit will have a ready sale for it, and therefore the prospectors and explorers will go back into the hills.

Under the 1953 act we became more than self-sufficient in the production of tungsten, and, for the first time in nearly three decades, it is no longer considered a critical material. Under this legislation the mines will be kept operating until the President's Cabinet Committee has ample opportunity to present a permanent plan; whereas, if they shut down and some of them fill with water, we are back where we started.

S. 3982, approved by the Bureau of the Budget, was passed by both Houses and signed by the President. For it, $91 million was authorized by the Senate in H. R. 12350, with $35 million appropriated for the 1957 fiscal year.

NO CONNECTION WITH OFFICE OF NATIONAL DEFENSE

It has no connection whatever with the appropriation for strategic mineral purchases by Dr. Arthur S. Flemming, Director of the Office of Defense Mobilization.

To produce the critical minerals, without which we cannot make a jet engine, it is necessary to guarantee a unit price on each material above the world price to equal the difference in the effective wages, or revert to the Constitution in the regulation of foreign trade and the national economy, and adjust the flexible duty or tariff to equal the difference.

Mr. BIBLE. Mr. President, this measure means a great deal to the State of Nevada. The funds to support the minerals extension program will benefit my State's economy greatly, and give the mineral industry a hope for the future. The stand of the Senate conferees in supporting restoration of funds to start these mineral purchases is most commendable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its action on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 12350, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
July 26, 1956.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 14, 30, 33, 35, 39, 40, 44, 47, 51, 54, 56, 59, 62, 64, 65, 67, 70, 72, 73, 74, 77, 78, 82, 85, and 96 to the bill (H. R. 12350) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1957, and for other purposes, and concur therein.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 3, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$1,000,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 4, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$45,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 9, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum of "$13,968,000" named in said amendment insert "$10,000,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to amendment numbered 10, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$35,000,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 11, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum of "$22,000,000" named in said amendment insert "$18,000,000" and in lieu of the sum of "$1,315,000" named in said amendment insert "$1,215,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 12, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert:

"BUREAU OF PUBLIC ROADS

"Reimbursement to District of Columbia

"For reimbursement to the highway fund, District of Columbia, for part cost of construction of highway-railroad grade separation underpass at a point in the southwest section of the District of Columbia in the vicinity of East Capitol Street, $200,000, to remain available until expended."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 13, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert:

"Federal-aid highways (trust fund): For carrying out the provisions of the Federal-Aid Road Act of July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, which are attributable to Federal-aid highways, to remain available until expended, not more than $800 million, to be derived from the highway trust fund; which sum is composed of $186,500,000, the balance of the amount authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1955, $610,500,000, a part of the amount authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1956, and $30,401, $14,097, $1,034,766, and $985,204, the latter sums being for reimbursement of the sums expended for the repair or reconstruction of highways and bridges which have been damaged or destroyed by floods, hurricanes, or landslides, as provided by section 4 of the act approved June 8, 1938, section 7 of the act approved July 13, 1943, and section 9 of the act approved September 7, 1950, as amended (23 U. S. C. 13a, and 13b), and section 7 of the act approved June 25, 1952, and $935,532 for reimbursement of the sums expended for the design and construction of highway bridges upon and across dams in accordance with the act of July 29, 1946 (60 Stat. 709): Provided, That at such time, but no later than June 30, 1957, as the Secretary of the Treasury, after consulting with the Secretary of Commerce, determines that the amounts available and estimated to become available in the highway trust fund during the fiscal year 1957 are sufficient for carrying out, on a current basis, the provisions of the Federal-Aid Road Act of July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, this appropriation shall reimburse the appropriations for 'Federal-aid highways' for all expenditures subsequent to June 30, 1956."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 15, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$2,500."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 18, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$20,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 21, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert:

"FLOOD INSURANCE

"For expenses necessary to carry out the Federal Flood Insurance Act of 1956, including rent in the District of Columbia; services as authorized by section 15 of the Act of August 2, 1946 (5 U. S. C. 55a), at rates not to exceed $50 per diem for individuals; and expenses of attendance at meetings of organizations concerned with the work under this appropriation; $500,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall be effective only upon the enactment into law of the Federal Flood Insurance Act of 1956 (S. 3732, 84th Congress)."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 22, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum of "$750,000" named in said amendment insert "$200,000" and in lieu of the sum of "$13,225,000" named in said amendment insert "$12,675,000" and in lieu of the sum of "$1,010,000" named in said amendment insert "$980,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to amendment numbered 23, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum of "$4,275,000" named in said amendment insert "$4,025,000" and in lieu of the first sum of "$200,000" named in said amendment insert "$175,000" and in lieu of the second sum of "$200,000" named in said amendment insert "$100,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to amendment numbered 27, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert: "$21,000,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 37, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum of "$55,000" named in said amendment insert "$40,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to amendment numbered 52, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert:

"Salaries and expenses: For an additional amount for 'Salaries and expenses,' $270,000: Provided, That of this amount (a) $85,000 shall be available only upon enactment into law of H. R. 11695, Eighty-fourth Congress, or similar legislation, and (b) $45,000 shall be available only upon enactment of H. R. 11549 or S. 3958, Eighty-fourth Congress."

That the House recede from its disagreement to amendment numbered 53, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$150,000."

That the House recede from its disagreement to amendment numbered 57, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert:

"Grants for waste treatment works construction: For payments under section 6 of the Water Pollution Control Act, as amended, $50,000,000, to remain available only until June 30, 1958."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 86, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert: "$4,000,000."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to the Senate amendments numbered 3, 4, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 18, 21, 22, 23, 27, 37, 52, 53, 57, and 86.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have included in the RECORD a tabulation of the items considered in the second supplemental appropriation bill stating the budget estimates, House allowances, Senate allowances, and the allowances of the conference committee.

There being no objection, the tabulation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, I congratulate the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and express particular appreciation of the fact that the bill contains $2 million to implement the so-called Bush-McCormack Act, having to do with small flood-control protective works. This breaks the bottleneck of time in connection with the construction of small projects for flood protection in the stricken river valleys of New England and elsewhere. Protective works in many parts of the country would save the Government a great deal of money.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, as chairman of the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, I wish to express my appreciation for the fine work done by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN]. I think it is very important that the necessary adjustments have been made in the bill. Otherwise, the effects upon the mineral industry in various sections of the country would have been disastrous. I appreciate very much the work the Senator from Arizona has accomplished.

PRESIDENT'S COMMISSION ON PRESIDENTIAL OFFICE SPACE

The presiding officer laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4228) to provide for a President's Advisory Commission on Presidential Office Space, which was on page 3, line 1, strike out "1923" and insert "1949."

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, this amendment merely corrects an improper date in the bill, and I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

DISPOSAL OF NONCURRENT AND OBSOLETE CONGRESSIONAL PUBLICATIONS

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, as chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 268, which relates to the disposal of noncurrent and obsolete congressional publications. A similar resolution has been adopted every 4 years. The last time was in 1952, and prior to that in 1948. Every 4 years we try to dispose of useless documents.

The procedure which is followed is this: First, the Senator or Representative who may be concerned is notified. If he does not want the material, other Senators and Representatives are notified. If they do not want it, the departments of the Government are notified. After that, the remainder of the documents are sent to the Superintendent of Documents for disposal by him.

Whatever he receives from their sale as junk is credited to the miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STENNIS in the chair) laid before the Senate the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 268) authorizing the disposal of certain obsolete Government publications now stored in the folding rooms of the Congress.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, respectively, shall prepare a statement showing the noncurrent and obsolete congressional publications now stored in the folding rooms of the Senate and House of Representatives, respectively, and to submit an itemized list thereof in duplicate, to the Joint Committee on Printing, which is hereby authorized and directed to dispose of the publications enumerated on such list as follows:

First. A printed statement of such publications shall be submitted to each Senator, Representative, Delegate, Resident Commissioner, and officer of the Senate and House of Representatives, and any Member or officer or either House having any of such publications to his credit may dispose of the same in the usual manner at any time before October 1, 1956.

Second. Upon the expiration of the aforesaid time the Joint Committee on Printing shall furnish to all Members of the Senate and House of Representatives, respectively, as promptly as practicable, a list of the publications herein referred to then remaining in the folding rooms, and thereupon such publications shall be subject to the order of any Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, in the order in which they are applied for, for a period of 30 days after the day when such list shall be furnished by the Joint Committee on Printing, but no application for the transfer of these publications may be honored.

Third. The Joint Committee on Printing shall furnish a list of all such publications remaining in the folding rooms at the expiration of the last-named period to the various departments, independent offices, and establishments of the Government at Washington, including the Superintendent of Documents, Smithsonian Institution, Library of Congress, National Archives and Record Service, and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and such publications shall be turned over to any department, independent office, or establishment making written request therefor and shall be allocated in the order in which their application is made, and all such publications which shall remain in the folding rooms for a period of 30 days after such list shall have been furnished to the departments, independent offices, or establishments aforesaid shall be delivered to the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, for such disposition as he may deem to be in the best interests of the Government, and he shall submit a report to the Joint Committee on Printing showing the tonnage so disposed of, together with the amount of money derived from such sale which shall be deposited to the credit of miscellaneous receipts in the Treasury of the United States in accordance with existing law.

Fourth. No publication which is described in the list aforesaid shall thereafter be returned to the folding rooms from any source.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 268) was considered and agreed to.

PAYMENTS TO LOCAL GOVERNMENTS OF SUMS IN LIEU OF TAXES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4183) to authorize the payment to local governments of sums in lieu of taxes and special assessments with respect to certain Federal real property, and for other purposes.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, I have been listening with interest to the discussion of the bill by the able Senator from Minnesota. I hope it will be possible to get under way, at least some form of method of payments by the Federal Government to various local entities of Government in hardship cases.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. This is not simply my bill; it is a committee bill. I wish to make it perfectly clear that I claim no pride of authorship. The bill has been prepared by technical experts on the staff and by the members of the committee. There was a dissent on the committee but the bill is a committee bill.

Mr. NEUBERGER. I commend the Senator from Minnesota for his very forceful presentation of the committee bill in the Senate.

In my State there are a number of situations which this kind of bill might help to solve, if not solve it completely.

I cite a specific situation in the fine city of Grants Pass, Oreg., concerning which the city manager has written me at some length. He says, in part:

> Particularly, the United States Forest Service has their Siskiyou National Forest headquarters within the corporate area of Grants Pass. Their shop and yard area is completely surrounded by a residential area and is separated therefrom on three sides by city streets.

The area happens to be surrounded by a residential neighborhood of the city of Grants Pass. The people who live in that neighborhood want to get themselves out of the gumbo and dust, and to pave the streets. Of course, they are perfectly willing to assist themselves by paying proportionately their share of the improvement. But the United States Forest Service at present is unable to participate in the cost of any of those street improvements. Indeed, there has been an adverse ruling to this effect by the Comptroller General.

Yet the Forest Service is one of the chief owners and users of property in that area.

Under the bill which the Senator from Minnesota has introduced, and has discussed with such great clarity in the Senate, is there any possibility that the Forest Service would be able to participate in the street improvement program in the residential neighborhood of Grants Pass, Oreg.?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Absolutely; and not only be able to do so, but would. This is an instance of what are called special assessment levies. After the effective date of the act, the Federal Government would pay its fair share on the pieces of property it owned as compared with payments made on property owned by private persons, and with no discrimination. In other words, the tax rate which applied on private property would apply on the payment in lieu of taxes on the Federal property.

The payment for special assessments is one of the most important payments to be made under the bill, because so many communities are stymied, so to speak, by reason of large Federal holdings within the communities. When a community gets ready to pave a street or to install a storm sewer, a curb, gutter, or a new sidewalk, or to make any other improvement for which a special assessment is made, whatever the special assessment may be, the Federal Government heretofore has paid nothing. In all too many instances of that kind, the taxpayers of the community have had to bear a very heavy tax load.

The city of Grants Pass, Oreg., will never be happier than on the day the bill is passed.

So I urge that the bill should pass, for the benefit of and in order to help Grants Pass. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEUBERGER. I thank the Senator from Minnesota. I congratulate him upon the bill he has presented, and I assure him of my hearty support of the bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD correspondence I have had with the officials of the city of Grants Pass, Oreg., and with the association of Oregon counties, concerning this measure.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CITY OF GRANTS PASS, OREG.,
February 10, 1956.

Mr. RICHARD L. NEUBERGER, Senator,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR NEUBERGER: We are told that several bills are now before the Senate Government Operations Committee and the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee to authorize payments in lieu of taxes to municipalities on federally-owned property.

Our interest in these bills centers on the problem of providing the means and authority for Federal agencies to pay their fair share of the cost of building sewers, sidewalks, and street paving for that part of a street frontage along federally owned property.

Particularly, the United States Forest Service has their Siskiyou National Forest headquarters within the corporate area of Grants Pass. Their shop and yard area is completely surrounded by a residential area and is separated therefrom on three sides by city streets. Residents owning property abutting these same streets want to get themselves out of the mud and dust resulting from the unimproved nature of the street. The residents are willing to assess themselves to cover their proportionate share of the cost of improvements.

The United States Forest Service is unable to participate in the cost of any street improvement because of an adverse ruling from the Comptroller General. Local Forest Service officials are quite willing to participate in the street-improvement program and have the funds with which to pay for their share of the work.

It appears to us that an inequitable share of the Federal tax responsibility is placed on the taxpayers of the city of Grants Pass if they are to be expected to pay the entire share of costs of street improvement in front of federally-owned property. It is hoped that relief from such situations might be incorporated in the bills which are now under consideration in Congress.

May we respectfully solicit your support of legislation to relieve our city of an inequity in the sharing of cost of public improvement by reason of the existence of federally owned property in our city?

Yours very truly,

JOHN F. PORTER,
City Manager.

THE DALLES, OREG., February 8, 1956.

Hon. RICHARD L. NEUBERGER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Association of Oregon Counties is supporting request of National Association of County Officials for early hearings on bills providing payments in lieu of taxes on Federal real property. Will appreciate your requesting Senator MCCLELLAN, chairman of Government Operations Committee for such a hearing.

F. L. PHIPPS,
Executive Secretary, Association of Oregon Counties.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I wish to thank the Senator for his helpfulness and for his support.

I yield now to the Senator from Michigan and then I shall yield the floor.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN MICHIGAN

Mr. McNAMARA. Mr. President, I am frequently asked by my colleagues in the Senate about the unemployment situation in my State of Michigan. I wish I could give them some good news, but I have not been able to for many months. The latest official estimates from Michigan continue to be bleak.

January of 1956 started with more than 100,000 workers unemployed.

Since May of this year, more than 200,000 Michigan workers have been unemployed. The latest figures, for July, put the total at 230,000, or about 8.5 percent of the State work force.

Nor will it stop there. The September estimate is 250,000 to 260,000, when the auto plants lay off even more employees in the switch to 1957 models.

At the present time, several of Michigan's greatest industrial areas are on the Labor Department's list of areas of substantial labor surplus: Detroit, 9.2 percent; Flint, 10.1 percent; Lansing, 7.6 percent; and Muskegon, 7.5 percent.

And more than 38,000 Michigan workers had exhausted their unemployment benefits—maximum: 26 weeks—through June.

These statistics are massive and overpowering. If such a situation came along once in a decade or so, we might accept it as an uncontrollable act of fate.

The distressing thing is that heavy unemployment in Michigan has become more an annual occurrence than an exception. Irresponsible production scheduling by the auto companies, compounded by mad sales races between the giants, leaves the workers as helpless pawns.

The guaranteed annual wage principle launched by the United Auto Workers is a potential curb to this recklessness, but the program was too new to be completely effective this year.

The workers need protection. Corporation profits do not suffer by this temporary unemployment which lasts the entire summer. These profits even increase, thanks to favoritism of the big-business administration in Washington.

It is time some favoritism was shown for the workers.

A FINAL APPEAL FOR ACTION ON VETERANS LEGISLATION

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, 22 million ex-servicemen of the United States have been anxiously watching the final actions of this 84th Congress.

In particular, they and their loved ones have been deeply interested in the outcome of the vital veterans bills which the House of Representatives has approved, but which have remained in the Senate Finance Committee.

Mr. President, I have repeatedly appealed for the full Senate to vote on this important legislation. Again and again on the Senate floor, I have urged that we be given the chance by the Finance Committee to vote on these bills.

DON'T PIGEONHOLE THOSE WHO BLED IN FOXHOLES

Surely, the one group in our Nation most entitled to our earnest attention consists of the men who saved this Nation on the field of battle. Surely, the one group of bills which is most deserving of not ending up in a pigeonhole is the group of bills for those who fought and bled in foxholes.

From all over my State, I have heard from the veterans of Wisconsin, from American Legionnaires, members of the VFW, DAV, Military Order of the Purple Heart, and others.

In addresses and messages to veterans' conventions of my State, I, in turn, have pledged my support of sound legislation on behalf of our veterans.

It is a source of deepest regret to me not to be able to vote, therefore, on this legislation.

SENATOR WILEY'S 17½ YEARS OF SERVICE TO VETERANS

I am, of course, deeply grateful to the veterans of Wisconsin for the warm support which they have given to me.

They recall that it has been my privilege to serve the ex-servicemen of our country since the time I entered the United States Senate, 17½ years ago.

It was my privilege to have served as one of the original cosponsors of the GI Bill of Rights—the historic law, whose educational provisions came to an end just a few days ago. Those school provisions provided for the sound schooling of almost 8 million American ex-servicemen.

It has been my privilege to sponsor legislation on behalf of our disabled veterans—particularly our combat wounded, on behalf of the new veterans' facility at Wood; on behalf of increases in pensions to widows of veterans; on behalf of setting up a special Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee, and for many similar objectives.

SENATOR WILEY'S OPPONENT VOTED ANTIVETERAN

Veterans' leaders, in writing to me, have taken the initiative in pointing out the fact that, while I have a consistent record of serving the interests of ex-servicemen, my opponent in the Wisconsin Republican senatorial primary, has an exactly opposite record.

Time after time, my opponent has voted against the veteran. Time after time, he has sought to torpedo those who came through enemy torpedoes and shot and shell, and who did not expect that one of their own legislators would vote against them.

My own record stands for all to see as a consistent supporter of the GI.

The hour is late in the 84th Congress, but it is my earnest hope that it is not too late to revive veterans' legislation, which may unfortunately otherwise die.

I send to the desk now and ask unanimous consent for publication of a series of messages which I have received from Wisconsin and other veterans. In all instances where the messages have come from individuals writing officially on behalf of an organization, I have of course included their name.

In the instance, however, of messages from folks writing in an individual capacity, purely as individual citizens, I have respected the privacy and confidence in which they wrote.

I deeply appreciate these messages—both on the issue of H. R. 7886 and simultaneous opposition to the unwise recommendations of the Bradley Commission.

There being no objection, the messages were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 23, 1956.

Hon. ALEXANDER WILEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Urgently appeal for your support of H. R. 12038 and H. R. 7886, pending bills to ease the plight of disabled veterans. These measures provide critically needed adjustments in present veterans' program. Both were passed by overwhelming vote in House. In behalf of disabled veterans who look to you for fair and forthright decision, I earnestly ask your energetic efforts to secure Finance Committee approval and vote on the floor.

J. ADDINGTON WAGNER,
National Commander, American Legion.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 21.—Timothy J. Murphy, commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, today declared that "simple justice and the cost of living more than justify Senate and White House concurrence with House-approved legislation to increase compensation payments to service-disabled veterans by 10 percent."

Murphy, a prominent Boston attorney, pointed out that the House of Representatives, in a matter of a few days, had acted promptly to get H. R. 12038, the compensation bill, reported from committee and to the floor where it was approved by a unanimous 391–0 vote.

"This action," he said, "indicates the House's opinion as to the merits and worthiness of the compensation bill."

"Favorable Senate action on H. R. 12038, as well as on H. R. 7886, a vitally needed veterans' pension bill, also House-approved, which has been pending in the Senate for some time, when added to some good bills already approved, such as survivors benefits and educational aid for orphans, would constitute a reasonable program for veterans and their dependents in this Congress."

"Time is running out, but I hope the Congress stays in session until the compensation and pension bills have been enacted," Commander Murphy stated.

DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS AUXILIARY,
Milwaukee, Wis., July 21, 1956.

Senator ALEXANDER WILEY,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SENATOR: It was with pleasure that your letter was received and its contents gave me the assurance needed in your message of continued interest in the welfare of our disabled veteran and his dependents. We in Wisconsin may be justly proud of the congressional record of our senior Senator.

Thanking you for the literature which was enclosed with your letter, I remain,

Sincerely,

HARRIET NEHMER,
National Chaplain, DAVA.

AMERICAN LEGION AUXILIARY,
UNIT NO. 67,
Lake Mills, Wis., June 27, 1956.

Hon. ALEXANDER WILEY,
United States Senate,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WILEY: We the members of Clarence Bean-Warren George, unit No. 67, of the American Legion Auxiliary, urge your support of the American Legion-sponsored war veterans' security bill, H. R. 7886.

Sincerely,

Mrs. BETTY GERBER,
Secretary.

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS
POST, NO. 2977,
Jump River, Wis., June 25, 1956.

The Honorable ALEXANDER WILEY,
United States Senator,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Our post is genuinely concerned with the so-called economizing action being taken by the Bradley Commission.

We appreciate your past efforts regarding veterans affairs and we feel confident you will do all in your power to safeguard the hard earned veterans benefits now in effect.

Thank you.

Respectfully yours,

JOHN F. NAGEL,
Commander.

JENSEN-VAN THRULER
CHAPTER, NO. 15,
AMERICAN DISABLED VETERANS OF THE WORLD WAR,
Sheboygan, Wis., June 6, 1956.

Senator ALEXANDER WILEY: At our last monthly meeting a motion was made and approved to see to it that this bill H. R. 11310 be brought to your attention. With your help we could be sure that these veterans with service-connected cases would get what is coming to them. We, the members of Disabled American Veterans of Sheboygan, Wis., hope our compensation and pension program should be enacted into law prior to the adjournment of the present Congress.

Yours truly,

CARLSON KNOCKE,
Chapter Service Officer.

From a Legion leader in Oconomowoc:

"DEAR SENATOR: This is to inform you of our hearty approval of your expression of opposition to the report of the Commission headed by Gen. Omar M. Bradley. Support such as yours is invaluable to us, the veterans of World Wars I and II, as well as all veterans of combat actions of any sort, of the Armed Forces of the United States. We, as well as the widows and orphans of our less fortunate comrades in arms, appreciate your championing our cause.

"Your action assures you of the continued support of all the fair-minded people of Wisconsin, and, particularly, us, the veterans of both World Wars. We hope and trust that you will continue to fight in our behalf."

"HONORABLE SIR: I am submitting this petition to you, as a member of World War I and a member of the VFW to act in our behalf:

" "The World War I veterans seem to be the forgotten men. I believe this can be rectified by giving this pension.

" 'You have an outstanding record of accomplishment, that there is no doubt in mind you will do your best.'

"Very truly yours."

"DEAR SENATOR: I am writing to you asking and hoping you will vote for and help pass some kind of pension for us veterans of World War I. We are all getting along in years and so far have received very little benefits and they are always trying to take away the veterans hospital benefits. There are a number of bills pending in this Congress, some of which would really help some. You have always been favorable to the relief of us oldtimers at other times, so do hope you can again give us some help when it is before the Senate.

Do hope you will again be returned to the Senate this fall and heartfully thanking you for what you have done for me in the past, I beg to remain."

"DEAR SENATOR: I respectfully request your support of bill H. R. 11310 which provides an increase in the compensation for totally disabled service-connected veterans.

"You have always been a fighter for the veteran."

"DEAR SENATOR WILEY: I was very pleased to read a recent report of your talk in Appleton at the Reserve Officers Association of the United States in regard to your opinion of the Bradley Commission recommendations and in particular your stand against its recommendation to minimize and gradually eliminate veterans' pensions by tying them in with social security payments. Like yourself, I am definitely opposed to such action and I want to congratulate you in expressing yourself opposed to any such action."

From Pewaukee:

"As I am a World War I veteran, and am totally disabled, and cannot be gainfully employed it is quite hard to live. I am quite interested in what pension bill you pass on, and the President will sign into a bill before you adjourn for the summer. I have a petition which 45 residents have signed and were happy to sign.

"Can you let me know just when the veterans' bill or veterans' affairs will be brought up for voting. Another thing, will you furnish me with the names of those that vote against our pension bills.

"Mr. Senator WILEY, this community has always been 100 percent for you as long as I can remember. We hope you will do your very best in getting one of our bills into a law for us World War I veterans who are badly in need of help in our declining age and conditions. Thank you very kindly for your efforts.

"Yours in comradeship."

From Hartford:

"As a veteran of World War No. 1, I have recently attended several veterans' meetings as a member of the John E. Courtney Post, No. 19, American Legion.

"It seems that the veterans were disgusted with the way the Republican king-makers conducted the caucus.

"We all recall the same kind of deals that were handed out to Goodland and Zimmerman, but the people took care of the situation at the polls.

"You will find that many of the veterans who are Democrats are going to vote the Republican ticket at the September primary."

From an individual veteran in Milwaukee:

DEAR SENATOR WILEY: I am a service-connected, blinded veteran. I would appreciate it very much if you would give your attention to the passing of bill H. R. 12038 during this session of Congress.

Thank you very much.

DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS,
WEST ALLIS CHAPTER, NO. 19,
Milwaukee, Wis., July 25, 1956.

DEAR HONORABLE SENATOR WILEY: I wholeheartedly agree on bill S. 1636. My main concern is H. R. 12038, the bill on the increase in compensation for the disabled veterans. These disabled veterans have been brushed aside for so long that the only ray of light we see now, is this bill, H. R. 12038, to be voted and passed by the Senate.

In comradeship,

FRANK J. CZECHOLINSKI,
Commander.

Whereas the first order of business of the American Legion is to work for the welfare and benefit of our disabled veterans, their dependents, widows, and orphans; and

Whereas the veterans of World War I are now reaching the age in life in which many of them are forced by physical disability and conditions within their realms of employment that now forces them to subsist on a very small income; and

Whereas at the present session of the Congress, the American Legion had introduced H. R. 7886 known as the war veterans' security bill; and

Whereas in April the American Legion representatives and representatives of other veteran organizations had presented their thought before the House Veterans' Affairs Committee; and

Whereas the House Veterans Affairs' Committee since then has not seen fit to take further action on this or any other bill for the consideration of veterans affairs; and

Whereas on April 23, 1956, the so-called Bradley Commission report was submitted to the House Veterans' Affairs Committee for consideration; and

Whereas the Bradley Commission report does not bring any new or pertinent information on veterans' programs or veterans' benefits that is not already known to the House Veterans' Affairs Committee: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the 10th District Council of the American Legion, Department of Wisconsin, in conference assembled this 27th day of May 1956, at Mondovi, Wis., That we do heartily approve the stand of our national rehabilitation commission in their presentation of H. R. 7886; and be it further Resolved, That the district adjutant be instructed to send a copy of this resolution to Representative LESTER B. JOHNSON and urge him to use all of his influence to have the House Veterans' Affairs Committee to vote on H. R. 7886 as soon as possible and to further get it through the Rules Committee for consideration on the floor of the Congress and further that when this bill is up for consideration by the United States Senate that copies of this resolution be sent to Senator MCCARTHY and Senator WILEY, urging them to use all of their efforts to see that just and equitable legislation is passed for our veterans, their dependents, widows, and orphans and this to truly represent the thought of all 11,000 Legionnaires and auxiliary members of the American Legion and the 10th district of Wisconsin.

Adopted by the 10th district spring conference, May 27, 1956.

Attest:

DON STEVENSON,
10th District Commander.
ERNEST P. SOBOTTA,
10th District Adjutant.

PAYMENTS TO LOCAL GOVERNMENTS OF SUMS IN LIEU OF TAXES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4183) to authorize the payment to local governments of sums in lieu of taxes and special assessments with respect to certain Federal real property, and for other purposes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. In order to expedite whatever consideration may be made of the bill, I should like to ask unanimous consent to have added to the bill as a committee amendment an amendment which would clarify the relationships of the language in the bill to the TVA. We thought it had all been clarified. On second reading and second thought, there may be some doubt. The amendment would merely exempt such installations as TVA, as it does all other installations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota's amendment is as follows:

"This act shall not extend, in the case of the Tennessee Valley Authority, to power properties (including the portion of multipurpose properties allocated to power purposes) which are owned by or in the custody of the Authority. The Authority shall continue to make payments to States and local governments on account of its power properties and as a charge against its power operations in accordance with section 13 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933 (May 18, 1938; ch. 32, 48 Stat. 66), as amended by section 39 of the act of June 26, 1940 (ch. 432, 54 Stat. 626; 16 U. S. C. 831 (1)), and payments which may be required hereunder on account of nonpower properties shall be in addition to the payments required by section 13 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act, as amended."

2. Addition of the following immediately after the word "use" on page 17, line 9:

"No payments shall be made under this act on account of improvements constructed by a Federal agency after June 30, 1950, on land title to which was acquired by the United States or a Federal agency on or before that date."

3. Addition of the following after the word "property" on page 5, line 14: "(but not including use for a navigation dam or other navigation improvement or the navigation portion of a multipurpose dam or improvement)."

JOSEPH J. TIERNEY

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H. R. 6283.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title, for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 6283) for the relief of Joseph J. Tierney.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, the purpose of the proposed legislation is to pay the sum of $184.60 to Joseph J. Tierney as reimbursement for funds representing a judgment rendered against him in the courts of Massachusetts arising out of an accident on December 29, 1954, when he was performing his duties as a chauffeur in the post office in Boston, Mass. The Post Office Department recommends the passage of the bill and gives in detail a history of the case. The committee concurs in the Department's recommendation.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I have a very important bill, which is H. R. 1840, which is a part of title II of H. R. 9424, which has been reported by the Judiciary Committee, but I have not been able to get the bill up for action. I am very anxious to give Members of the Senate an opportunity to vote on H. R. 1840, which has passed the House with only 3 dissenting votes, and which has been reported by the Judiciary Committee. I had in mind offering——

Mr. CLEMENTS. Does the Senator desire to speak against the bill now pending? One objection would not interfere with the bill being considered by the Senate, as the unanimous-consent request has already been acted upon by the Senate.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I wanted to inquire if the bill was open to amendment, or whether it was submitted under a condition that no amendment which was not germane could be offered.

Mr. CLEMENTS. That is a question the Senator from Tennessee will have to address to the Chair.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Is the bill open to amendment——

Mr. CLEMENTS. Let me say to my friend from Tennessee that I take it there will be opportunities during the evening to present the matter he has in mind. I hope he will not hold up consideration of the pending bill, which involves $184. Of course, the lateness of the hour would make it possible for any Member of the body to hold up practically any measure which might come before the Senate.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I have no desire to hold up the measure which is now pending before the Senate.

Mr. CLEMENTS. If the Senator has no desire to hold up the measure, will he not withhold any discussion of the matter he is interested in, and let the Senate act on the pending business?

Mr. KEFAUVER. My fear is that no other House bills will come before the Senate from the Judiciary Committee. Would the Senator defer action on this matter to see if, by some agreement, consideration could be obtained for the bill to which I have referred.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The acting majority leader will be glad to have the pending bill temporarily laid aside, and I now make that unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL POSITION OF ASSISTANT DIRECTOR IN THE BUREAU OF THE BUDGET

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, I report favorably, without amendment, Senate Joint Resolution 199, which I send to the desk, and I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be stated by title, for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 199), to authorize an additional position of Assistant Director in the Bureau of the Budget.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby established one additional position of Assistant Director in the Bureau of the Budget, for which the compensation shall be the same as is now or may hereafter be provided for the two such positions heretofore authorized by law (31 U. S. C. 16a).

PAYMENTS TO LOCAL GOVERNMENTS OF SUMS IN LIEU OF TAXES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4133) to authorize the payment to local governments of sums in lieu of taxes and special assessments with respect to certain Federal real property, and for other purposes.

JOSEPH J. TIERNEY

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2868, House bill 6283.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read by title, for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 6283) for the relief of Joseph J. Tierney.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill (H. R. 6283) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESS REPORT ON THE BURKE FIELD–FRIENDSHIP AIRPORT SUBCOMMITTEE

Mr. MUNDT obtained the floor.

Mrs. SMITH of Maine. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEUBERGER in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mrs. SMITH of Maine. I thank the distinguished Senator from South Dakota for yielding to me for what will be a very brief statement.

Mr. President, I have noticed with fascination the great speed with which the Senate is driving for adjournment. I did not realize the speed with which the Senate is acting these days until I read an item in this afternoon's edition of the Washington News, which reports that the Burke Field-Friendship Airport Subcommittee had already taken action urging the airlines and the armed services to use Friendship Airport, instead of having a new field built at Burke, Va.

While I prefer Friendship over Burke, this is certainly news to me, for I was not notified that I was a member of the subcommittee until receiving a letter from the chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee [Mr. HAYDEN] a few hours ago—to be exact, at 12:45 this afternoon. If the subcommittee has taken such action, it has been taken without notice to me, without my knowledge, without my participation, and without my approval. Certainly that must also be true in the case of the other Republican member of the subcommittee, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. POTTER], since he is not even in the country at this time.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maine yield to me?

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, I have the floor.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield to me?

Mr. MUNDT. For what purpose does the Senator from Florida wish me to yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. I merely wish to assure the distinguished Senator from Maine that if the chairman of the subcommittee was quoted in any way in connection with the matter referred to, the quotation was incorrect, because certainly the chairman has not taken any action in that regard.

Mrs. SMITH of Maine. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield to me, to permit me to read into the RECORD the newspaper article to which I have referred?

Mr. MUNDT. Very well; I yield.

Mrs. SMITH of Maine. Mr. President, on page 5 of the Washington Daily News for Friday, July 27, 1956, the following appears:

HILL UNIT URGES: TRY FRIENDSHIP

A Senate Appropriations Subcommittee assigned to look into the problem of a second Washington airport today drafted letters to airlines and the armed services urging them to try using Baltimore's Friendship Airport.

The subcommittee said Friendship, if it works out well, would be an alternative to construction of a new field at Burke, Va. Maryland Senators have long backed such a plan.

The Senate Tuesday night rejected President Eisenhower's request for funds to build an airport at Burke, killing the project at least until the next session of Congress.

The subcommittee plans to hold hearings and conferences on the matter.

It consists of Senators SPESSARD HOLLAND, Democrat, of Florida, chairman; WARREN MAGNUSON, Democrat, of Washington, JOHN STENNIS, Democrat, of Mississippi, MARGARET CHASE SMITH, Republican, of Maine, and CHARLES POTTER, Republican, of Michigan.

I know only what I read, Mr. President.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I think I followed the reading of the article, but nothing in the article indicates——

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota will state it.

Mr. MUNDT. I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, I have not been asked to yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I gladly request that the Senator from South Dakota yield to me, so that I may make a brief statement.

Mr. MUNDT. I gladly yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I have followed the reading of the article, and I do not believe it contains any quotation attributed to the senior Senator from Florida. Am I correct?

Mrs. SMITH of Maine. Mr. President, if the Senator from South Dakota will yield to me, let me say that the Senator from Florida is correct, except that the subcommittee is referred to, and I would presume that any statement coming from the subcommittee would come from the chairman of the subcommittee, although I realize that the statement referred to may have come from someone else. In my brief statement I did not mention the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from South Dakota to yield again to me.

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. I should like the Senator from Maine to understand that the Senator from Florida was not quoted in the article, and has not been correctly quoted to that effect in any place.

Mrs. SMITH of Maine. I thank the Senator from Florida very much.

PAYMENTS TO LOCAL GOVERNMENTS OF SUMS IN LIEU OF TAXES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4183) to authorize the payment to local governments of sums in lieu of taxes and special assessments with respect to certain Federal real property, and for other purposes.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, before commencing my discussion of Senate bill 4183, I should like to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota will state it.

Mr. MUNDT. Was the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN] and me, which was sent to the desk, printed; and has it been distributed to the Members of the Senate? I do not have a copy of the amendment on my desk, and during this discussion I think that all Members of the Senate should have copies of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator's question is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MUNDT. Then let me suggest that at this time the pages distribute the amendment to all Senators.

Mr. President, Members of the Senate who have just entered the Chamber may not understand what the pending measure is. It is Senate bill 4183, which proposes to authorize the payment to local governments of sums in lieu of taxes and special assessments with respect to certain Federal real property, and for other purposes.

Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] recently addressed the Senate at some length regarding the reasons which persuaded the majority of the committee to report the bill favorably. He has given his arguments for advocating its passage at this time.

I now propose to discuss some of the deficiencies of the bill, as I see them. Since I am not certain how long I shall be able to proceed without interruption, I wish to be sure that the views of the minority of the committee are called to the attention of the Senate. Therefore, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, the minority report, as prepared by the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN] and myself, together with the individual views of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY].

There being no objection, the minority report and individual views were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MINORITY REPORT

This legislative proposal (S. 4183) opens up a vast, unrestricted, undefined new program of annual expenditures by the Federal taxpayers through their Central Government. It seeks to provide Federal payments "in lieu of taxes" to certain urban communities whose problems have developed since 1950 and to initiate a type of Federal expenditure which is certain to expand rapidly and widely, without first measuring and defining the potential costs involved or the final destination to which this new fiscal path will inevitably lead.

We, the undersigned members of the Committee on Government Operations, therefore feel compelled to file minority views on S. 4183 for reasons which we believe, in all sincerity, are most compelling.

At the outset, we desire to make it perfectly clear that, with the majority, we are convinced that there is an urgent need for legislative action to relieve local taxing authorities from certain types of unjustified and inequitable burdens and hardships imposed upon them as the result of large-scale Federal ownership of various types of property, which acquisition has operated to remove such property from the local tax rolls. The need for a comprehensive program of uniform action in this field has long been apparent and has been recently pointed up and documented by the excellent report and studies of the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations.

It is our sincere judgment, however, that the subject bill, S. 4183, fails to accomplish this objective, and would serve only to complicate further an already complicated situation, without granting appropriate relief to many of the hard-pressed local taxing authorities, now suffering from precisely the same problems this legislation proposes to correct for a favored few.

For the reasons set forth below, we are firmly of the opinion that we would be derelict in our duties and obligations to the American people, as responsible legislators if we were to lend our support to the pending measure:

1. The Congress does not have the requisite information upon which to act at this time.

S. 4183 provides for a 5-year program of (1) payments in lieu of taxes on industrial and commercial property acquired by the Federal Government since June 30, 1950, provided the local taxing authority can show that Federal acquisition has resulted in demonstrable hardship; (2) for payments of special assessments levied in urban communities after the date of enactment of the act; and (3) for payments in lieu of taxes on real property leased or sold to taxable persons under conditional sales contracts.

Although it would commit the Federal Government to making payments to local taxing authorities in the cases listed above, the Senate has no reliable information before it with respect to either the properties which would be covered by the subject bill or the potential cost of the program.

We recognize, of course, that it is difficult to determine the precise cost to the Federal Government of special assessments which local taxing authorities may levy on Federal real property in the future; we realize also that the potential cost of payments on property leased or sold under conditional sales contracts may also be difficult to obtain. The majority states that no cost estimates are provided because it is impossible at this time to obtain such estimates. We know, however, that cost estimates with respect to industrial and commercial property covered by S. 4183 can be obtained once these properties are identified; and we know that this information is presently available and can be ascertained by a proper study of these reports, and analyses already compiled by the GSA.

We therefore strongly disagree with the majority. It is our firm conviction that cost estimates can be obtained if a proper study is made of the coverage and scope of the pending bill. Such a study would enable the Congress to determine whether the costs of the program proposed would impose an unconscionable or undue burden upon Federal taxpayers and to effect adjustments which would keep the costs at a reasonable level, in order to insure that the Federal Treasury would be adequately protected.

To take action now on a bill which may cost the Federal Government several hundreds of millions of dollars during the next 5 years, without any firm indication of the precise extent of this obligation, would, in our judgment, demonstrate a lack of responsibility on our part and a dereliction of our solemn obligation to the Federal taxpayers.

Until such time as the Senate has before it the necessary information to enable Members of the Senate to assess the full scope and coverage of the program proposed by the subject bill, as well as reasonably accurate cost estimates, the Congress is not in a position to legislate. Certainly, no private enterprise in the world would undertake even a 5-year program without full knowledge of its extent and its costs. We know of no compelling reason why the Federal Government should depart from the practices of private business in this respect.

It should be emphasized that the passage of this legislation would establish a precedent for new Federal payments to communities from which it would be difficult if not impossible to retreat. Once started, the pressure would all be for the almost endless expansion of this concept of Federal payments to local communities with similar conditions or to other communities with different problems of like intensity and need. Once the Congress starts out on this uncharted sea of Federal expenditures, we shall find we have opened a virtual Pandora's box of related requests. Today, even the Bureau of the Budget and the majority members of the committee who voted to report this bill are unable to designate a figure naming the potential annual payments by the Federal Government which would be required if this legislation is adopted. Before the Senate enters upon such a voyage into the great unknown, we believe Congress should insist on establishing some points of reference and a chart clearly depicting to the Congress and the country whither we are actually bound.

2. S. 4183 is a discriminatory measure which will benefit certain urban communities without affording any relief whatever to the large majority of hard-pressed local taxing authorities, especially in rural communities.

As previously pointed out, the subject bill would provide payments in a very limited class of cases and to a very limited number of communities. Payments are limited, for the most part, to industrial or commercial properties acquired by the Federal Government after June 30, 1950. Payments for special assessments are limited to "urban and suburban areas," thus completely ignoring similar problems in rural areas and the many serious problems created by vast Government holdings in our so-called public land States. In justification of this formula, the majority states that the limitation as to coverage is necessary to keep the costs down. It is our position that if this bill is designed to remove inequities, this limitation on coverage and date of Federal acquisiton is completely unacceptable. Not only does it discriminate, without justification, against communities in which other types of Federal tax-exempt holdings are located, but it sets a completely arbitrary date limitation.

The Senate has not been furnished with an information which would justify making payments on a limited class of real property acquired by the Federal Government after June 30, 1950. We know of no reason why those communities which have Federal tax-exempt personal property, inventories, and other types of real property acquired prior to 1950 should not be given the same treatment and consideration, if they are able to demonstrate that the presence of Federal holdings and activities has resulted in serious fiscal and financial burdens for which they could be entitled to some relief as provided for properties covered by the bill.

In our opinion, the Congress would be violating its public trust if it were to enact legislation which would in effect increase the taxes of communities suffering economic hardships created by Federal installations established in 1948 or 1938 or 1928, or in some other year, in order to enable the Federal Government to make cash payments in lieu of taxes to certain other favored communities suffering identically the same economic hardships created by Federal installations established in 1952 or 1954 or in some other year after the rather mystic but completely arbitrary date of June 30, 1950. What right have we as the peoples' representatives to use the Treasury of all the people as a device for penalizing some so that others might profit?

It is our conviction that like circumstances should be treated with like remedies when they are caused by identical activities of the Federal Government. We reject the argument that "1950 should be used as a cutoff date so that the initial charges against the Federal Government will not be too great." To us, that indicates clearly that eventually it is expected that the act will be expanded. We wonder, how far? And at what great cost? And if communities with problems created prior to 1950 have equal claim against the Government for succor with those included in the convenient "after June 30, 1950" demarcation, why are not their problems considered at the same time?

Perhaps legally, Congress has the right to "pick and choose" by the selection of a calendar date but morally we believe we have the responsibility to meet like problems with like correctives, especially in a matter which by involving the Federal Treasury in an unmeasured and immeasurable program of expenditures is tantamount to adding indirectly to the tax burdens of all our people.

Finally, this bill gives no consideration to rural needs as against urban needs. Industries are usually located in urban areas. Other types of Federal activities, which are not covered under this bill, such as Indian reservations; game refuges; airbases; Army camps, posts and stations; and Federal grazing lands, are usually located in rural areas. Yet this bill would afford payments in lieu of taxes without affording any relief to hard-pressed rural communities. For example this bill would permit urban and suburban communities to make assessments against Federal property for sewer improvements, curbs and gutters, etc., but would not permit assessments against public land held by the Government for weed control, road maintenance and other services.

It is our firm opinion that any legislative action which may be taken with respect to this problem must give the same consideration to both urban and rural needs and should not be limited to one small class of properties which are usually located in urban areas. In short, what is needed is a long-range, comprehensive program, designed to treat all areas alike. Such a program, however, is only possible if we have the necessary facts and statistics upon which to base it. As noted previously, this information is available. All that is required is an accurate and complete study as to the extent of coverage that is necessary to provide equitable and essential legislation, and as to the cost factors involved, which we believe can be completed within the next 6 to 8 months. We would then be able to produce legislation which would be comprehensive in coverage and scope and would give relief to all distressed communities alike, regardless of the type of Federal property located within their respective areas, without regard to any artificial date of Federal acquisition, and without discrimination against rival areas.

The Senators preparing this minority report believe additional exploration, study, and analysis of all statistical information already compiled is required before Congress can act prudently or properly in writing and approving legislation on this very complicated subject. We propose later in this report a substitute measure providing for the compilation and submission of this information. What is needed, we believe, is not a quick step into the dark in a generous but injudicious effort to be of help to some, but a completely comprehensive piece of legislation which will meet all facets of this problem for once and for all in an effort to bring equity to all. Our laws in this area should rest on concepts of uniform treatment for like problems rather than on the capricious selection of a calendar date which divides "those who will have to pay more" from "those who will receive more from the Government," even though they confront identical problems created by precisely the same activities of the Federal Government of which they are all a part. The legislation required to meet this problem should be based on concepts of equity rather than on any plan which would evade major facets of the problem. What we need is legislation based on full study of all phases of all problems in this area which will fairly and properly relate urban and rural problems, old problems and new problems, and all aspects of the longstanding question of the extent to which the Federal Government should permit itself to be billed for payments in lieu of taxes on the vast and growing body of public property, public domain, and public holdings which is in the as-yet untabulated and unreported inventory of Uncle Sam's holdings. This, we believe, can and should be done. But passage of S. 4183 as reported to the Senate, as a part-time, part-help measure for some of the problems could well delay the enactment of the type of overall legislation required to bring together in one place for all to see and understand the relationships of the Federal Government in this field to the State and local governments. Before establishing firm precedents which could permanently commit us, we should first see and understand the full size of the complete problem.

3. This bill fails to provide for effective congressional review.

S. 4183 provides for the establishment of a five member Federal board which would exercise quasi-judicial functions. It would require that the Board shall receive applications for payments in lieu of taxes from local taxing authorities and issue orders directing the Federal owning agencies to make payments in amounts to be determined by the Board. The Board's decisions would be final and compelling.

The effect of such a provision is to give a five-member Federal Board the authority vested by the Constitution of the United States in the Congress, since once the Board ordered a payment to be made, the Congress would be obligated to comply and to appropriate the funds. Thus, the Congress and its Appropriations Committees would be relegated to a position of "rubber stamps," and deprived of their control over the resulting expenditures.

Such an abrogation of congressional responsibility is completely unjustified. To deprive the Congress of the United States of its constitutional responsibility for the protection of the Federal Treasury can never be justified, and no bill which would permit a Federal board to make final determinations with respect to the amounts of Federal funds which should be paid out, without any opportunity on the part of the Congress to review such expenditures, should be permitted to become law.

An abrogation by Congress: We call to the attention of all Senators, but especially those on the committees on finance and on appropriations, that not only once but several times the proposed legislation makes it clear that there is to be no congressional review of the decisions of the Board which the bill proposes to create. Once Congress has set this costly machine in motion, it completely loses control over the speed with which it moves or the expenditures which it creates.

There is not even the customary budgetary control by the Bureau of the Budget. There are no further determinations to be made by the Committee on Finance or by the Committee on Appropriations. All they can do is to provide the money that the Board orders to be paid by the Federal agencies involved. The bill is so drawn, even, that the agencies are ordered to make the payments from funds already appropriated where possible so that henceforth Congress stands by as a helpless "kibitzer" while the Board decides which communities participate and which are excluded, and as the Board makes what in effect are these great potential appropriations which under our Constitution it was expected only the Congress had authority to make and for which Congress should assume the responsibility.

4. S. 4183 fails to provide any criteria which the Federal board would be required to follow in determining whether a local taxing community has demonstrated financial hardship.

S. 4183 authorizes a Federal board to make payments to local taxing authorities for industrial or commercial-type real properties acquired by the Federal Government after June 30, 1950, where the Federal acquisition or use can be shown to have imposed a financial hardship on such communities. However, nowhere in the bill is there any indication of what is meant by a financial hardship. On the contrary, this determination is left entirely to the discretion of the Board, which is empowered to establish rules and regulations governing the determination of actions to be taken upon applications presented.

The effect of this omission is to vest in an administrative agency absolute authority to establish the standards upon which it will make payments to local communities as well as to the amount of payments it will make.

To establish an administrative body and to vest in it such absolute powers, without providing statutory guidelines in the form of criteria and some specific limitations on the amount of Federal funds it can expend, is a complete departure from sound legislative practice and constitutes nothing less than an unheard of and unwarranted abrogation by the Congress of its constitutional taxing and appropriating authority. Such procedure is not only of doubtful wisdom and legality, but it also sets a precedent for future action which may return to plague the Congress in the future.

5. S. 4183 would enable communities which exerted much effort and pressure to obtain Federal installations to obtain payments from the Federal Government because of the presence within their boundaries of such installations.

It is a well-established practice of many communities to exert much pressure and effort to induce the Government to construct various types of Federal installations within their boundaries, and many communities devote much time and effort to this practice. The advantages to a community of the presence of a large Federal defense or industrial installation are, of course, well recognized. Not only do they add materially to the prosperity and the general economy of the area, but they also constitute new sources of revenue in the form of income, personal property, and real property taxes received from increased income earned by residents of the community and from large numbers of new taxpayers who are brought into the community as employees of the installation. Although the presence of such plants often requires communities to furnish additional services in the form of schools, police and fire protection, and water and sanitation facilities, the costs involved are usually more than offset by the increased income and by the taxes which are paid to the State and community as a direct result of the locations of the plants in the selected area. Nevertheless, under the pending bill, if such communities were able to make any showing that the presence of such installation resulted in financial hardship, they would be entitled to payments as an additional cash dividend added to the other economic advantages and benefits brought to the community for being chosen as the site for an important Federal installation.

It is our firm position that when a community outbids other communities by making all sorts of concessions and offering a variety of inducements to the Federal Government to locate an industrial installation in its midst, that community should not be permitted to come to the Federal Government for payments in lieu of taxes to compensate for alleged financial hardships of which they should have fully anticipated, but now assert have resulted from the presence of the Federal installation. Furthermore, these installations often replaced a vacant warehouse or an empty lot from which the community has previously received little or no revenue. In effect, the bill thus establishes a precedent which would likely plague the Government in the future, since such communities would become convinced that they would be relieved of any necessary costs to the community in supplying services to the installation upon the showing of financial hardship, regardless of the economic benefits that accrue to the State and the community.

It would see a simple matter of justice and equity that legislation of this type should not make it possible to reward the successful community bidding for a Federal installation by then giving it payments in lieu of taxes, after the novelty of the new development wears off and the problems begin to appear, and to further injure the nonsuccessful community bidder by causing it to pay higher Federal taxes so that some of the income from its citizens could be siphoned off through the Federal Treasury to the community that successfully outbid it when invitations were extended for the Federal installation. But this legislation as proposed stands mute on this matter. Should it be enacted, communities could well promise the moon when urging Federal officials to locate a Federal installation in their environs, and then return to the Federal Government a few years later to seek their Federal bonus in lieu of taxes to pay for the services so enthusiastically promised while competing for the new development.

We want specifically to acknowledge the existence of some community problems created by Federal installations which were not invited in, but which were caused because the Federal Government insisted on locating a certain installation in some specified area. Clearly in these cases, equity rests with the local community and certain compensatory Federal payments are merited in lieu of taxes to meet the problems created by this Federal action. We believe legislation should be enacted to meet these problems directly. We favor its inclusion in the overall legislative approach which we propose as a substitute. But in simple candor we must meet our responsibilities as legislators by pointing out that the pending legislation is not limited to situations of this type nor to hardships which are caused by Federal intrusion into a contented community as against those which come as easily anticipated difficulties along with the constructive and helpful effects envisioned when communities send delegations to Washington seeking Federal installations in their areas.

6. Amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the minority.

We of the minority desire to reemphasize and reiterate our serious concern over the financial plight of local taxing authorities which are suffering actual financial hardships as the result of Federal acquisition of various types of property, which acquisition or ownership was not solicited locally and has operated to remove such property from the local tax rolls. We are convinced, however, that much-needed relief can only be furnished by the establishment of a comprehensive program which will equitably provide for payments to all communities which can show that the presence of Federal property within their boundaries has caused them to suffer financial hardships. Such a program must be equitable and nondiscriminatory; it must be based on uniformity of treatment and not upon artificially established categories of property or cutoff dates which bear no relationship to the situation. It must treat problems of the same cause and nature with the same remedies regardless of calendar date and regardless of whether the problem is created in an urban or rural community.

The Commission on Intergovernmental Relations found that at the present time the great majority of Federal agencies have no general authority to make payments in lieu of taxes on their properties; that existing provisions of law are quite diverse and result in different treatment for similar properties of various agencies. Thus, on some classes of property, some agencies pay taxes; others make payments in lieu of taxes; and still others make no payments at all.

According to the latest available information, there are presently on the books some 55 laws dealing with Federal payment of taxes or in lieu of taxes, or shared revenue arrangements. Of this number, some 20 provide for a sharing of revenue between Federal and State and local governments; 18 authorize payments in lieu of taxes; and 17 authorize the payment of direct taxes. The situation is clearly a patchwork or crazy quilt which requires comprehensive action if the Federal Government is to administer the program intelligently and assume its proper responsibility in these matters. The pending bill would merely add another patch, a 56th law to the present hodgepodge of unrelated laws on this complicated problem.

The amendment proposed by the minority would lay the foundation for the development and establishment of an organized, comprehensive program, designed to treat in like manner all communities, whether rural or urban, which have like problems. Because of the clear lack of adequate information upon which to base such a program, it is our judgment that a study must be made, making use of all of the valuable materials and studies which are now available.

The substitute amendment which we propose would establish a Federal interdepartmental commission, headed by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget and representatives of the Department of Defense, Justice, Interior, and Agriculture, and the Office of Defense Mobilization, General Services Administration, and the Veterans' Administration, as well as representatives of such other departments or agencies as the President may deem advisable. This Commission would be required to make a comprehensive study of all of existing legislation dealing with payments by the Federal Government of taxes, or in lieu of taxes, and special assessments, as well as payments made pursuant to revenue-sharing agreements, grants-in-aid and other related programs where some Federal responsibility may exist, in either rural areas or in urban communities.

The Commission would be required to submit to the President, for transmittal to the Congress, on or before March 1, 1957, a comprehensive report detailing its findings with respect to the nature and effect of previous enactments and its recommendations concerning the extent, if any, to which there is need for new legislation to provide additional financial assistance uniformly and under like circumstances to State and local governments to relieve hardship incident to the tax-exempt status of Federal property, with specified formulas and criteria for application of the program. The Commission would place before Congress the exact and measured dimensions of the whole problem created by Federal ownership or operation, as it pertains to the tax income of States and local communities. It would include a recapitulation of problems, for example, caused by Federal Indian reservations, by the land utilization program in many Western States, by forest lands, game preserves and similar Federal holdings along with any needed proposals for adjusting and providing payments in lieu of taxes which would be related equitably and fairly with proposals for such payments on Federal holdings in city areas.

In short it would provide Congress and the country with the whole picture at one time, and place proposals to meet any Federal responsibilities in this area in one reconciliable pattern of payments, rather than simply adding one additional and unprecedented payment-proposal of unpredictable size and cost to an already far too complicated labyrinth of legislation in this field. The Commission would cease to exist upon transmission of its report to the Congress.

CONCLUSION

It is our sincere judgment that such a study as that proposed by our amendment would furnish the Congress with the vital information needed to enable it to legislate promptly, intelligently, and comprehensively. It would occasion no delay, so far as communities are concerned, since any legislation considered by the Congress in the next session could provide a retroactive date for the program to begin January 1, 1957, should it be considered the appropriate action. Even though Congress in the closing and crowded days of the present session were to rush through a hastily and inadequately considered bill such as S. 4183 in its present form, payments to the favored selected communities could not begin before next year at the earliest.

Our proposed substitute would afford an opportunity for a realistic approach to a most complex problem and would not merely add an additional patch to the existing crazy quilt.

The advantages to be gained by the adoption of the substitute amendment are of such great importance that we urge its adoption. It would enable the Congress to have from an official and fully responsible interdepartmental commission all of the essential facts and cost factors available upon which to base an equitable program for payments in lieu of taxes, after the development of accurate and complete related information. This procedure would be clearly preferable to the adoption of a restricted program admittedly based on theory and on imponderables which have not yet been adequately evaluated. We believe this proposal to create a responsible official factfinding commission is also preferable to trying to present and consider during the crowded, closing days of this session, all of the needed amendments required by the committee bill if it is to provide equity for rural as well as urban problems and for all communities confronted by like problems whether originating before or after June 30, 1950.

For these reasons, we urge the rejection of S. 4183 and the adoption of the substitute proposal in lieu thereof which we have offered as a prudent, constructive, and positive approach to the problems which we all recognize, even though none of us today is able either to enumerate their quantity or to estimate the cost of their correction. No time need be lost by first getting the facts to which we are entitled, and much expensive embarrassment may be avoided if we get the official interdepartmental figures and recommendations before we venture out beyond the line of no retreat.

KARL E. MUNDT,
United States Senator (South Dakota).
THOS. E. MARTIN,
United States Senator (Iowa).

Amendments intended to be proposed by Mr. MUNDT to the bill (S. 4183) to authorize the payment to local governments of sums in lieu of taxes and special assessments with respect to certain Federal real property, and for other purposes, viz:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That this act may be cited as the 'Commission on Payments to State and Local Governments Act of 1956.'

"DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

"SEC. 2. (a) Although the United States is under no constitutional obligation to pay taxes, or to make financial contributions in lieu of taxes, to any State or to any political subdivision or instrumentality thereof with respect to any property of the Federal Government, the Congress has recognized that the exemption of Federal property from taxation by State and local governments has worked hardship upon such governments in a number of instances, and heretofore has enacted a number of legislative measures providing relief in varying forms for such governments.

"(b) It is the purpose of this act to provide for a comprehensive study of the nature and effect of such previous enactments, and for an investigation to determine the nature and effect of any further legislation which may be required for the relief of State and local governments from such hardship.

"(c) It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress that no such additional relief shall be made to any State or local government with respect to any Federal property devoted to any Federal activity the establishment or retention of which within the territorial jurisdiction of such State or local government at any time has been solicited by such State or local government.

"COMMISSION ESTABLISHED

"SEC. 3. (a) There is hereby established within the executive branch of the Government a Commission on Payments to State and Local Governments (referred to hereinafter as the 'Commission').

"(b) The Commission shall be composed of—

"(1) the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, who shall serve as chairman thereof;

"(2) one representative of each of the following departments and agencies of the United States Government, each of whom shall be designated by the head of the department or agency represented by him from officers or employees of such department or agency: the Department of Defense; the Department of Justice; the Department of the Interior; the Department of Agriculture; the Office of Defense Mobilization; the General Services Administration; and the Veterans' Administration; and

"(3) one representative of each other department or agency of the United States Government named by the President, each of whom shall be designated by the head of such department or agency from officers or employees of such department or agency.

"(c) The Commission shall select a vice chairman from among its members. A majority of the members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum. Any vacancy in the Commission shall not affect its powers, but shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made.

"(d) Members of the Commission shall serve without compensation in addition to that received for their services as officers or employees of departments and agencies of the Government, but shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of the duties of the Commission.

"STAFF OF THE COMMISSION

"SEC. 4. (a) The Commission may appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel as it deems advisable, without regard to the provisions of the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1949, as amended.

"(b) The Commission may procure, without regard to the civil-service laws and the classification laws, temporary and intermittent services to the same extent as is authorized for the departments by section 15 of the act of August 2, 1946 (60 Stat. 810; 5 U. S. C. 55a), but at rates not to exceed $50 per diem for individuals.

"DUTIES OF THE COMMISSION

"SEC. 5. (a) The Commission shall conduct a comprehensive study of the nature and effect of all previous enactments of the Congress providing for—

"(1) the payment to any State or local government of any tax or special assessment with respect to any Federal real or personal property;

"(2) the making of any payment to any such government in lieu of the payment of any tax or special assessment with respect to any such property; or

"(3) the rendition of assistance to any State or local government through the making of grants-in-aid, the sharing of revenues derived from properties of the United States, or through the furnishing of services or facilities by the United States.

"(b) The Commission shall conduct a comprehensive study and investigation of the extent to which State and local governments derive benefits directly or indirectly through payments made to them (1) by persons residing or employed upon Federal property, and (2) for or in connection with any property, trade, business, occupation, or transaction situated or occurring upon Federal property.

"(c) The Commission shall conduct a comprehensive investigation to determine the extent, if any, to which there is need for legislation by the Congress to provide additional financial assistance for State and local governments to relieve hardship incident to the tax-exempt status of Federal property. Such investigation shall include inquiry to determine—

"(1) the classes of Federal property, if any, with respect to which any such additional assistance should be granted;

"(2) the nature and extent of any such additional assistance;

"(3) the conditions, if any, under which such additional assistance should be granted;

"(4) the annual cost to the United States of providing such financial assistance with respect to each such class of Federal property and with respect to all such classes of Federal property; and

"(5) ways and means whereby State and local governments may be accorded effective right to apply property taxes in effect within their several jurisdictions to industrial plant equipment, materials, supplies, and inventories owned by private parties and used by them for commercial purposes within plant facilities owned or controlled by departments and agencies of the United States Government.

"(d) On or before March 1, 1957, the Commission shall submit to the President, for transmittal to the Congress, a comprehensive report containing—

"(1) the text of all provisions of law referred to in subsection (a), together with an analysis of the purpose and effect of each such provision;

"(2) the findings of the Commission as to the facts disclosed by its studies and investigations made under subsections (b) and (c) of this section;

"(3) its recommendations, consistent with the policy prescribed by section 2 (c), as to any additional legislation the need for which has been disclosed by its investigation under subsection (c) of this section; and

"(4) a detailed analysis of the relationship between any recommendations so made and the provisions of existing law set forth in compliance with paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(e) Upon the transmittal of such report to the Congress, the Commission shall cease to exist.

"POWERS OF THE COMMISSION

"SEC. 6. (a) To carry out the provisions of this act, the Commission, or any duly authorized member or employee thereof, may hold such hearings, sit and act at such times and places, administer such oaths, and require, by subpena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memorandums, papers, and documents as the Commission, or such member or employee, may deem advisable. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the Chairman of the Commission or any duly designated member or employee, and may be served by any person designated by such Chairman or member. The provisions of sections 102 to 104, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes (2 U. S. C. 192–194) shall apply in the case of any failure of any witness to comply with any subpena or to testify when summoned under authority of this section.

"(b) The Commission is authorized to secure directly from any executive department, bureau, agency, board, commission, offices, independent establishment, or instrumentality of the United States information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics for the purpose of this act. Each such department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, establishment, or instrumentality is authorized and directed to furnish such information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics directly to the Commission, upon request made by the Chairman or Vice Chairman.

"EXPENSES OF THE COMMISSION

"SEC. 7. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to establish in the executive branch of the Government a Commission on Payments to State and local governments."

INDIVIDUAL VIEWS OF SENATOR MCCARTHY

I shall support the amendment in the nature of a substitute which has been offered by Senators MUNDT and MARTIN to S. 4183.

In my opinion, the Mundt-Martin procedure as outlined in their substitute is a much more realistic and appropriate approach to the problems which S. 4183 seeks to correct than the specific, partial remedies proposed by the committee bill.

Among other things, the committee bill in my opinion would produce a completely unjustified discrimination among communities on the basis of whether or not the problems from which they suffer as a consequence of Federal installations were initiated before or after June 30, 1950. I can see no rational justification for adopting a program of Federal expenditures which would penalize people in communities with problems created by Federal installations made prior to June 30, 1950, in order to provide benefits and payments to communities suffering from the same problems growing out of installations made by the general Government after June 30, 1950.

In addition, I think that Senators MUNDT and MARTIN are correct in recommending against initiating a program of Federal expenditures of this type before sufficient facts and figures are available so that Congress can have a clear-cut estimation of the total costs involved.

The Mundt-Martin substitute has the virtue of establishing an interdepartmental provision to provide us with these facts while in the same time establishing a procedure whereby payments in lieu of taxes to communities can still be initiated as of January 1, 1957, which is clearly as early as any community could begin to receive benefits under the terms of the committee bill.

In the event that the Mundt-Martin substitute is rejected by the Senate and a majority of the Senate decides that it wants to act in this session on the legislative provisions contained in S. 4183, I shall seek by other amendments to correct some of the deficiencies of the proposed bill in order to give it a greater degree of realism and equity.

JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CIVIL RIGHTS BILL AT THE NEXT SESSION OF THE CONGRESS

Mr. CASE of New Jersey. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield for an inquiry to be addressed to the leadership on both sides of the aisle?

Mr. MUNDT. Yes, provided it is understood that in yielding for that purpose, I do not lose the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CASE of New Jersey. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the majority leader and the minority leader, I should like to inquire about a matter which has given me and, I know, a number of my colleagues deep concern.

Mr. President, we strongly support the civil-rights program of the administration, which has been substantially embodied in House bill 627, which the House passed recently.

This measure is in no sense punitive or extreme. It is moderate, realistic, and sound, and its enactment is very much needed.

I wish the bill could have been enacted into law at this session of Congress. I recognize that this is not possible. I recognize, too, that if an effort had been made during the closing days of the session to force consideration, a filibuster would have resulted, which would have endangered the entire legislative program, and led, among other things, to the almost certain defeat of legislation vitally necessary to the security and welfare of the Nation. This situation must not be repeated. We are determined to press at the next session of Congress for orderly but prompt consideration of the bill.

I therefore ask both the majority leader and the minority leader as individuals, and as undoubted leaders in the next session of Congress, if they will give assurance that, whichever party controls the Congress, they will use their best efforts to secure prompt and early consideration of that measure.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, the inquiry has been addressed to the majority leader and the minority leader. Inasmuch as the Senator propounding the question is on my side of the aisle, perhaps the distinguished majority leader will not feel that I am usurping any prerogatives by responding first to the question which was propounded to the leadership.

Speaking as minority leader, I will say, as I said on the floor of the Senate the other day, that I believe the calling up of a bill of this type in the last 4 days of the session is not a practical way of getting anything accomplished in the way of legislation of this kind, for the reasons which I publicly stated; namely, that under the rules three steps would have to be taken, provided the proponents of the measure could place themselves in a parliamentary situation to make the necessary moves.

First, there would have to be a motion to discharge the committee, if the committee had not reported the bill. That motion would be subject to unlimited debate. A cloture petition would have to be filed. Sixty-four votes would have to be obtained in the Senate in order to apply cloture. Each Senator would be entitled to 1 hour debate, even if cloture were adopted.

That would merely move the measure from the committee to the calendar. Then a motion would have to be made to proceed to the consideration of the bill or bills. That motion would be subject to unlimited debate, and again it would be necessary to go through the process of a cloture petition, and to obtain 64 votes. Again, each Senator would be entitled to 1 hour, even after the invoking of cloture.

Then we would be through with only the second step, at which point the bill would be before the Senate. It would then be subject to unlimited amendment, and cloture might have to be applied to each amendment, if it were possible to obtain the necessary 64 votes.

I think all of us who are familiar with the rules of the Senate and the tactical possibilities know that in the closing days of a session one cannot proceed with any hope of accomplishment with a bill of the character referred to.

I will say to the Senator that if the party which is now in the minority should take the responsibility for control of the Senate at the next session of Congress, of course, the procedure would have to be, first, that a bill must be introduced.

I would hope that such a measure could be considered early in the next session of Congress, not in the second year of the 85th Congress, but in the first year of the 85th Congress, and that following hearings—and certainly everyone, either for or against the proposed legislation, is entitled to be heard—the bill could be reported to the Senate, perhaps by March 1 or April 1 at the latest.

Then, if the bill had been reported to the Senate and had been cleared by the policy committee of the majority—if we should happen at that time to be the majority—I believe it would be incumbent upon me, as the leader, if I should hold that position at the time, to ask the Senate to consider the bill very early in the session, in order to avoid the parliamentary obstacle which otherwise, I am sure all Members of the Senate recognize, exists.

I am sure the Senator will also recognize that, until the bill has been introduced, until the committee has met, and until we see what kind of bill is reported, the able Senator would not expect merely a blank-check statement that, regardless of what it looked like, or how far it went, or whether it violated constitutional principles, there would be a blanket commitment to call up any kind of legislation. If the Senator is assuming legislation along the lines which the President has recommended—perhaps not word for word, but along those general lines—I would hope very much that the Senate could successfully act upon it at the next session of Congress.

Mr. CASE of New Jersey. My question was directed to the specific legislation recommended by the President.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I will say to the Senator that if that responsibility were mine—and, of course, that is a matter which is not in my control—I certainly feel that it should be brought up early. I would hope it would be brought up in 1957, and not in the last 4 days of the session in 1958, as was done in this instance, when a move was made in that direction, and there was discussion about obtaining consideration of that legislation in the closing days, when there were pending a great many other important bills, including social security, mutual aid, customs simplification, and other important measures which might have been jeopardized if we had been confronted with a full-scale, prolonged debate, or filibuster.

Mr. CASE of New Jersey. I am sure that the minority leader is fully cognizant of my awareness of the situation, and my refusal to engage in futile action this year.

If the Senator from South Dakota will yield further, I should be most grateful for an expression of views on the part of the majority leader.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the majority leader's views on the present parliamentary situation do not differ greatly from those expressed by the minority leader. The minority leader has made a very good statement as to parliamentary procedure. It sounded almost as though he might have been a teacher of that subject at one time.

What the Senate or any other legislative body does depends on what the majority of the members of the committee which controls the proposed legislation wants done. In my own case, when a committee reports a measure, I have the responsibility of bringing it before the policy group, composed of nine members. I do not know who will constitute that committee in the next Congress. I do not know whether it will be a majority or minority committee. I do not know who will be assigned to the committee which will have jurisdiction over the proposed legislation. I do not even know who will be the President next year.

I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that more bills have been scheduled, and fewer bills remain on the calendar at the close of this Congress than in the case of any other Congress with which I am familiar. As a general rule, I do not think it is good practice—and I do not believe members of the legislative bodies think it is good practice—to discharge committees from the consideration of bills pending before them. It may be that the Senate would want to do that. I certainly would not wish to be a party to any such movement.

All I can say to the Senator is that when the committee acts, if I am the majority leader, and if I have responsibility for scheduling any proposed legislation, I shall take prompt action to bring it to the attention of the group over which I preside, namely, the policy committee. In the event the policy committee feels that it is a bill which should be scheduled for action, it will be brought to the floor of the Senate.

During this Congress almost 3,000 measures have been scheduled, considered by the Senate, and passed. I think there will be left on the calendar when we adjourn tonight fewer than 50 bills.

I realize the great political implications involved in connection with the subject which the Senator from New Jersey has mentioned. I realize that great political pressures have been brought to bear in the past few days, not only in connection with this subject, but many other subjects.

Last night at 1 o'clock I received a telephone call from Texas regarding a piece of legislation which the person who called wanted stopped.

I was awakened this morning by a call from another city in my own State. The caller was delivering political threats. Having served for 20 years in a legislative body, I am accustomed to those things, particularly in the dying days of the session.

I determine my course only on the basis of my judgment telling me a bill is in the national interest. I do not expect every Member of the Senate to share my viewpoint on legislation. I try to be very tolerant of those who do not. I do think it is important to state that I also schedule bills for consideration with which I do not agree; but I bring them before the Senate in order that the Senate may have an opportunity to express itself on them, provided a committee has followed the proper procedure and has reported them, and provided they have been cleared by the policy committee. I do not know that there is anything further I can add.

Mr. CASE of New Jersey. I should like to ask one more question of the Senator, if he will yield. Do I understand correctly that, after ample time had elapsed for consideration of a bill by a committee, and after it appeared that the committee had given no consideration to the bill, the majority leader would not feel, in any circumstances, that he should assist any movement to discharge a committee from further consideration of the bill, and to bring that bill before the Senate?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I know of no duty of the majority leader which requires him to be put in a straitjacket. The majority leader has expressed his general opinion on the general legislative subject.

Mr. CASE of New Jersey. My inquiry was directed to a specific piece of legislation and was not an attempt to put the Senator from Texas into a straitjacket. No such attempt was intended.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The majority leader has attempted to make his position clear, and he believes he has.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I do not have the floor.

Mr. MUNDT. I do not believe I shall yield any further on this subject, because we have a very important matter before us. Perhaps as the evening progresses we can have further debate on that subject.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I have assured certain Senators, who have expressed the desire to discuss this subject at this session, that they will have an opportunity to do so before the Senate adjourns sine die.

Mr. MUNDT. Very well. I am in hope that we can.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. MUNDT. I have been standing here for 30 minutes, and I have not had a chance to say anything on the bill yet.

Mr. LANGER. Perhaps the Senator will yield to me later.

Mr. MUNDT. I shall be glad to do so later.

The majority leader has pointed out that the majority had scheduled more bills for consideration by the Senate at this session than in any other session during any given time. In my opinion they have scheduled one bill too many. Perhaps they would be making a better record if they had not scheduled this bill for consideration, but had, instead, stopped it, because this is such a revolutionary bill, and certainly is not a bill which should be brought up for discussion by the Senate at 4:15 o'clock in the afternoon.

ANTITRUST LEGISLATION

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I should like to impose upon the good nature of the Senator from South Dakota in order that I may briefly explain, before he gets launched on his subject, an important question which ought to be decided before Congress adjourns.

Mr. MUNDT. The Senator from South Dakota is a bit appalled by the size of the manuscript in the hands of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I do not read manuscript ordinarily in the Senate, and I am not going to read one now.

Mr. MUNDT. Could the Senator give me some idea of the dimensions of the term "briefly" as he used it in his request?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I do not believe it will take me more than 3 minutes.

Mr. MUNDT. I shall be happy to yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Senator very much.

There have been before the Senate several very important antitrust bills. One of them is H. R. 9424, to amend the Clayton Act, as amended, by requiring prior notification of corporate mergers.

The other bill, which came to the Senate in June, is H. R. 1840, on unlawful restraints and monopolies. It was introduced in the Senate by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] as S. 11. It was introduced in the House by Representative PATMAN as H. R. 11. The bill which passed the House was introduced by Representative ROGERS of Colorado. Both of those bills went to the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate.

In that committee we were permitted, by unanimous consent, on last Thursday to consider the first of those two bills. During the course of the discussion in committee that day, the Kefauver amendment was offered and was adopted by the committee. The result was that when the bill was reported with the Kefauver amendment added to the original antimerger bill, objection was made to the filing of the report, and the report was not filed until yesterday.

The Senator from Tennessee has been endeavoring to secure a decision by the Senate upon his bill, which is an amendment to the original antimerger bill. I tried to serve the Senator from Tennessee and the Senate by trying to separate the two bills. I do not believe that they can pass together. I should like, with the attention of the acting majority leader and the acting minority leader, to ask unanimous consent—but not before a quorum is called—that the Kefauver amendment, which is H. R. 1840, may be separated from H. R. 9424, by the withdrawal of everything but the text of H. R. 1840, and that a vote be taken on that bill. In that way, it will stand alone as the Kefauver amendment. That would give us an opportunity to have the judgment of the Senate on whether the bill should be considered at this session. If that should fail, an effort could be made to pursue another course.

I wanted to make this statement on behalf of the committee and on behalf of the Senator from Tennessee and in my own behalf, in order that the Senate might know the problem that is before us. Either we pass neither of the antitrust bills, or we pass one of them.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I have the floor. I yielded for 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FULBRIGHT in the chair). The Senator from South Dakota has the floor.

Mr. MUNDT. I yielded 3 minutes for a very illuminating discussion. I should now like to turn to my own discussion of a very important bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is right. However, I believe the Senator from Tennessee has only one question to ask. I shall not make my unanimous consent request until the Senator has finished his speech.

Mr. MUNDT. I appreciate that. If the Senator from Tennessee wishes to ask a question, I shall be glad to yield for that purpose.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Is the Senator from Wyoming going to suggest a short length of time, perhaps 30 minutes, for an explanation or debate on the bill in his unanimous-consent request?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. When the request is made, I believe we will have to do it, but these remarks now have been made merely so that the Senators who are present may know the problem which will be presented. I thank the Senator from South Dakota very much.

Mr. MUNDT. I am very happy to yield. I think it has been very useful for the Senate to be given that information.

Mr. President, the Senate has before it Senate bill 4183, reported from the Committee on Government Operations and bearing the name of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], authorizing the payment to local governments of sums in lieu of taxes and special assessments with respect to certain Federal real property, and for other purposes.

I said at the outset of my discussion that the point of view held by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN] and me is shared by a great many Senators from the so-called public land States, from States which do not have big metropolitan areas, but which do suffer from the same problems when the Government steps in as a big and mighty landlord in the area.

Probably the most significant word in the title of the bill is the word "certain," because it surely is true that this bill provides payments in lieu of taxes and special assessments with respect to certain real property. I might add that it is not only certain Federal real property, but it must be located in certain areas, and it must have located there at a very certain time. I should say, certain city areas. So, Mr. President, it is a bill containing in the title a key word to alert those Americans who are looking for legislation which covers the situation with some degree of uniformity and some degree of universality.

During the address of the Senator from Minnesota on this subject, it was brought out in various colloquies that certain types of Federal holdings were immune from any of the benefits of this bill, and that among the areas which are not going to receive any benefits by definition or by specification are the great public lands States of this country, States which happen to have in them Indian reservations, national parks, national forests, game and fish preserves, grazing lands, and a great variety of Federal holdings that fail to come within the narrow definition of being commercial or industrial operations and which, obviously, are excluded by the authors of the measure when they make the benefits apply only to urban and suburban areas.

Mr. President, one of the reasons why the Senator from Iowa and I, together with other Senators with whom we are associated and who have not signed the report because they are not members of the committee, but who share emphatically our point of view—one of several significant reasons why we are opposed to it in its present form is that it is grossly discriminatory. Any time we increase the tax burden of America we naturally increase the tax burden of citizens throughout the country.

So, Mr. President, what we have here is a Government device for inequitably distributing the tax burdens of America. It increases the tax burden of the people in rural areas to funnel money into certain urban areas where there are certain kinds of property meeting certain conditions, which originated at a very, very certain date.

Mr. President, I should like to point out further that the Senator from Minnesota, with more candor than enthusiasm, responded to an interrogatory by pointing out that while there are no cash benefits, while there are no cash payments, while there are no desiderata in lieu of taxes for rural communities, the committee did generously suggest that if the Board desired to do so it could study the problem, it could take a trip to an Indian reservation, it could go to a national park and look at the beautiful trees, but the bill makes no effort to treat rural properties in rural areas with the same logic with which it would treat properties in urban areas.

There is a gross, clear-cut discrimination which says, "We will provide for distressed areas, where there is Federal property in big cities, a cash subsidy; but for the same kind of conditions creating the same kind of distress in a rural area there will be no cash, no subsidy—just a continuing study and just the right to hope."

"It may be that someday they will be given the same favored treatment which the bill provides for certain kinds of Federal holdings in certain cities under certain circumstances"—but not now. All the rural communities get now is a study, a promise, and the right to hope.

So, Mr. President, that is the first big reason why the Senator from Iowa and I decline to go along with the majority of the committee. We recognize that Federal ownership creates a problem in areas around the country. The problem is acute in certain cities and it is equally acute in certain rural areas. We thought it would be a fine thing to treat the program with a uniform element of justice.

AID TO YUGOSLAVIA

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a letter I received under date of July 26, 1956, concerning the subject of aid to Yugoslavia. The letter gives definite information as to American foreign policy, its relationship to the Yugoslavian situation, and the relationship of Yugoslavia to Communist Russia.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JULY 26, 1956.

Senator HUMPHREY,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HUMPHREY: In retrospect, the following is an aspect of the Yugoslavia situation which should be a matter of record.

I understand, and you said that your vote favoring aid to Yugoslavia was a vote of confidence in the administration's discretion and qualified knowledge. As such, it was a good vote in this era of international intrigue.

However, our foreign policy seems characterized by two different concepts: (a) An effort to avert military conflict, and (b) an effort to win the war of ideology being waged against democratic capitalism and Marxist-Leninism. Aid to Tito is given to sustain our efforts in both of these conflicts.

But, and here is a point that to my knowledge has not been made, our aid to Tito is not an effort to aid his economy. We do not want to see a Tito proclaiming a prosperous communism for such is an impossibility or so it seems to me. Tito's adherence to Marxism is anathema to us. We do not want to encourage or to aid Tito's domestic economy. Rather, and this also is the domain of the Secretary of State, it should be proclaimed to the world that Tito's Marxism needs our aid, the aid of a democratic capitalistic state.

We have aided Tito economically and militarily, but always so that we could use him for our means and never to stabilize Tito's Marxism. This point should be made clear.

DON RYAN.

RECONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LANDS IN THE BENBROOK RESERVOIR PROJECT, TEXAS, TO FORMER OWNERS OF SUCH LANDS

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 12006.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 12006) to provide for the reconveyance of certain lands in the Benbrook Reservoir project, Texas, to former owners of such lands, where such lands are not required for public purposes, including public recreational use.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Works with amendments, on page 1, beginning with line 3, to strike out down to and including line 5 on page 2, and insert the following:

That in order to provide for adjustments in the lands or interests in land heretofore acquired for the Benbrook, Belton, Grapevine and Garza-Little Elm Reservoir projects in Texas to conform such acquisition to a lesser estate in lands now being acquired to complete the real estate requirements of the projects the Secretary of the Army (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized to reconvey any such land heretofore acquired to the former owners thereof, subject to the limitations set forth in section 2, whenever (1) he shall determine that such land is not required for public purposes, and (2) he shall have received an application for reconveyance as provided in section 2: Provided, however, That prior to January 1, 1958, no lands heretofore acquired for the Grapevine Reservoir project lying below elevation 557 feet shall be reconveyed pursuant to this act or revested pursuant to the act of October 21, 1942 (56 Stat. 797), and that prior to January 1, 1957, no lands heretofore acquired for the Garza-Little Elm Reservoir project lying below elevation 529 feet shall be so reconveyed.

On page 2, after the amendment just above stated, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. (a) In carrying out the purpose of this act, the Secretary is authorized to reconvey to the former owner, as defined in this section, all or any part of the land or interests therein heretofore acquired from such owner which the Secretary determines is not required for public purposes, including public recreational use: Provided, however, That whenever the former owner of such land has at any time after its acquisition by the United States sold or otherwise disposed of other land which has a common boundary with the land acquired from him by the United States he will be entitled to make application as provided in this section for conveyance to him of the same percentage of the land as the length of the common boundary of the land retained by him after such sale and the land of the United States bears to the total length of the common boundary of the land of the former owner and the United States, which boundary resulted from the acquisition by the United States of the land of the former owner, and the land so reconveyed shall constitute a single tract adjoining both the land of the former owner and the boundary of the real property of the United States as such boundary will exist after reconveyance by the Secretary of the land acquired by the United States from the former owner.

On page 3, line 7, to change the section number from "2" to "3"; on line 12, to change the section number from "3" to "4", and on line 15, to change the section number from "4" to "5."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The bill amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

EX-WAC ENDS 2,300-MILE HORSEBACK JOURNEY

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, as I was looking over my latest copy of the Great Falls Tribune I came upon one of the warmest human-interest stories that I have ever read. It is of particular interest to me because it concerns one of the fine communities in north-central Montana, the city of Malta.

Kathryn Elliot, an ex-Wac, has arrived home in Malta after completing a 2,300-mile horseback ride, 26 months after it began in Fort Lee, Va.

As the newspaper story points out, Kathryn would have arrived home many months sooner except for Brenda, Kathryn's half-blind saddle mare. Kathryn first met Brenda at a Fort Lee riding academy and became so fond of her that she could not bear to leave the horse behind. At the end of her Wac career Kathryn decided to return to Montana, only to discover that Brenda would not ride in a horse trailer, so she decided to ride Brenda all the way to Montana.

Kathryn and Brenda stopped off that first winter at Rhinelander, Wis., to visit an old Army buddy, Mary Silius. The second lap of the trip began last May with Kathryn riding Brenda and Mary driving a 1930 model A Ford, behind which was hooked a small trailer containing their camp equipment.

The two ex-WAC's completed their cross-country trip last Saturday when they arrived at Saco, a small town near Malta. On Monday they were given a grand welcome by the people of Malta and the surrounding community, including Kathryn's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Elliot, who have now sold their ranch and are living in the city.

Kathryn rode into town at the head of the parade with Mary bringing up the rear of the parade with the model A. In addition to Brenda, the 2 girls brought 4 dogs with them—Coco, a Scotch collie, a black spaniel, a basset hound, and a fox terrier.

In this day and age, when our newspapers are so full of crises and tragedies, it is, indeed, refreshing to read about the arrival of Kathryn Elliot and her entourage in Malta, Mont.

I ask unanimous consent that this article from the July 24, 1956, issue of the Great Falls Tribune be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EX-WAC ENDS 2,300-MILE HORSEBACK JOURNEY WITH ARRIVAL OF HER "ENTOURAGE" AT MALTA

MALTA.—Kathryn Elliot's 2,300-mile horseback ride ended here in her hometown Monday, 26 months after it began in Fort Lee, Va.

There was the matter of a year and a half stopover in Rhinelander, Wis., or the former Wac would have been home at least a year earlier.

The long layover in Wisconsin was because of Brenda, Kathryn's half-blind saddle mare.

When Kathryn first met Brenda, the mare was owned by a riding academy at Fort Lee. Kathryn, who spent all her early years on a ranch 10 miles north of Malta, became quite fond of the mare.

When Kathryn's enlistment was ended, she was reluctant to leave Brenda to the mercies of the riding academy's odd and sundry patrons and then learned nothing in the world could persuade Brenda to climb into a horse trailer.

Anyway, Kathryn didn't own a horse trailer, so she decided to ride Brenda all the way to Montana, stopping off that first winter at Rhinelander to visit an old Army buddy, Mary Silius.

Kathryn and Brenda arrived in Rhinelander early in the autumn of 1954. Kathryn got a job driving taxi, and Brenda was boarded out on a nearby farm.

In unfamiliar surroundings, Brenda got tangled up in some barbed wire and suffered severe cuts which required a veterinarian's care for several months.

The second lap of the trip began last May with Kathryn riding Brenda, and Mary driving a 1930 Model A Ford, behind which was hooked a small trailer containing their camp equipment.

Kathryn, Mary, and Brenda reached Saco Saturday. Since the Phillips County Saddle Club, of which Kathryn had long been a member, had arranged a formal welcome for Monday noon, the two girls and the brown mare cut across country Sunday to Saco Hot Springs, where they remained over Sunday night.

Monday morning about a dozen members of the saddle club rode out to the Stader School, 6 miles east of Malta, and met the wayfaring ex-Wacs.

There was a picnic lunch on the shady side of the schoolhouse. Many motorists drove from Malta. Among them were Kathryn's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Elliot, who now live in Malta, having sold their ranch.

After lunch, with Kathryn riding out front, the saddle club rode into town, Mary bringing up the rear of the parade with the Model A.

In addition to Brenda, the two girls brought four dogs with them—Coco, a Scotch collie, and a black Spaniel, a basset hound, and a fox terrier.

What will the two ex-Wacs do, now that their cross-country trip has ended?

"We plan to start a taxi service in Malta," Kathryn said. Brenda is comfortably stabled at the riding club's stable in a cottonwood grove on Milk River.

But some of Kathryn's old friends have their fingers crossed. "Wait until next spring," said one. "It wouldn't surprise me if she climbed on that horse again and rode into the sunset."

CERTAIN ELIGIBLE MINING CLAIMS FOR VALIDATION UNDER ACT OF AUGUST 12, 1953

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FULBRIGHT in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3941) relating to certain mining claims which were eligible for validation under the act of August 12, 1953, but which were not validated solely because of the failure of the owners to take certain action to protect their claims within the prescribed period.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, has the matter been cleared with the minority leader?

Mr. PURTELL. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PAYMENTS TO LOCAL GOVERNMENTS OF SUMS IN LIEU OF TAXES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4183) to authorize the payment to local governments of sums in lieu of taxes and special assessments with respect to certain Federal real property, and for other purposes.

Mr. MUNDT. I continue with my statement in opposition to the first point with respect to the bill in its present form and its amendment features. The Senator from Iowa and I have offered an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which would try to bring some degree of equity and universality to the bill. The pages have now distributed the amendment in the nature of a substitute to the desks of all Senators; and, so that it may appear at this point in the RECORD, without the necessity of its being read, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That this act may be cited as the 'Commission on Payments to State and Local Governments Act of 1956.'

"DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

"SEC. 2. (a) Although the United States is under no constitutional obligation to pay taxes, or to make financial contributions in lieu of taxes, to any State or to any political subdivision or instrumentality thereof with respect to any property of the Federal Government, the Congress has recognized that the exemption of Federal property from taxation by State and local governments has worked hardship upon such governments in a number of instances, and heretofore has enacted a number of legislative measures providing relief in varying forms for such governments.

"(b) It is the purpose of this act to provide for a comprehensive study of the nature and effect of such previous enactments, and for an investigation to determine the nature and effect of any further legislation which may be required for the relief of State and local governments from such hardship.

"(c) It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress that no such additional relief shall be made to any State or local government with respect to any Federal property devoted to any Federal activity the establishment or retention of which within the territorial jurisdiction of such State or local government at any time has been solicited by such State or local government.

"COMMISSION ESTABLISHED

"SEC. 3. (a) There is hereby established within the executive branch of the Government a Commission on Payments to State and Local Governments (referred to hereinafter as the 'Commission').

"(b) The Commission shall be composed of—

"(1) the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, who shall serve as chairman thereof;

"(2) one representative of each of the following departments and agencies of the United States Government, each of whom shall be designated by the head of the department or agency represented by him from officers or employees of such department or agency; the Department of Defense; the Department of Justice; the Department of the Interior; the Department of Agriculture; the Office of Defense Mobilization; the General Services Administration; and the Veterans' Administration; and

"(3) one representative of each other department or agency of the United States Government named by the President, each of whom shall be designated by the head of such department or agency from officers or employees of such department or agency.

"(c) The Commission shall select a vice chairman from among its members. A majority of the members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum. Any vacancy in the Commission shall not affect its powers, but shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made.

"(d) Members of the Commission shall serve without compensation in addition to that received for their services as officers or employees of departments and agencies of the Government, but shall be reimburse for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of the duties of the Commission.

"STAFF OF THE COMMISSION

"SEC. 4. (a) The Commission may appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel as it deems advisable, without regard to the provisions of the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1949, as amended.

"(b) The Commission may procure, without regard to the civil-service laws and the classification laws, temporary and intermittent services to the same extent as is authorized for the departments by section 15 of the act of August 2, 1946 (60 Stat. 810; 5 U. S. C. 55a), but at rates not to exceed $50 per diem for individuals.

"DUTIES OF THE COMMISSION

"SEC. 5. (a) The Commission shall conduct a comprehensive study of the nature and effect of all previous enactments of the Congress providing for—

"(1) the payment to any State or local government of any tax or special assessment with respect to any Federal real or personal property;

"(2) the making of any payment to any such government in lieu of the payment of any tax or special assessment with respect to any such property; or

"(3) the rendition of assistance to any State or local government through the making of grants-in-aid, the sharing of revenues derived from properties of the United States, or through the furnishing of services or facilities by the United States.

"(b) The Commission shall conduct a comprehensive study and investigation of the extent to which State and local governments derive benefits directly or indirectly through payments made to them (1) by persons residing or employed upon Federal property, and (2) for or in connection with any property, trade, business, occupation, or transaction situated or occurring upon Federal property.

"(c) The Commission shall conduct a comprehensive investigation to determine the extent, if any, to which there is need for legislation by the Congress to provide additional financial assistance for State and local governments to relieve hardship incident to the tax-exempt status of Federal property. Such investigation shall include inquiry to determine—

"(1) the classes of Federal property, if any, with respect to which any such additional assistance should be granted;

"(2) the nature and extent of any such additional assistance;

"(3) the conditions, if any, under which such additional assistance should be granted;

"(4) the annual cost to the United States of providing such financial assistance with respect to each such class of Federal property and with respect to all such classes of Federal property; and

"(5) ways and means whereby State and local governments may be accorded effective right to apply property taxes in effect within their several jurisdictions to industrial plant equipment, materials, supplies, and inventories owned by private parties and used by them for commercial purposes within plant facilities owned or controlled by departments and agencies of the United States Government.

"(d) On or before March 1, 1957, the Commission shall submit to the President, for transmittal to the Congress, a comprehensive report containing—

"(1) the text of all provisions of law referred to it in subsection (a), together with an analysis of the purpose and effect of each such provision;

"(2) the findings of the Commission as to the facts disclosed by its studies and investigations made under subsections (b) and (c) of this section;

"(3) its recommendations, consistent with the policy prescribed by section 2 (c), as to any additional legislation the need for which has been disclosed by its investigation under subsection (c) of this section; and

"(4) a detailed analysis of the relationship between any recommendations so made and the provisions of existing law set forth in compliance with paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(e) Upon the transmittal of such report to the Congress, the Commission shall cease to exist.

"POWERS OF THE COMMISSION

"SEC. 6. (a) To carry out the provisions of this act, the Commission, or any duly authorized member or employee thereof, may hold such hearings, sit and act at such times and places, administer such oaths, and require, by subpena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, and documents as the Commission, or such member or employee, may deem advisable. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the Chairman of the Commission or any duly designated member or employee, and may be served by any person designated by such Chairman or member. The provisions of sections 102 to 104, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes (2 U. S. C. 192–194), shall apply in the case of any failure of any witness to comply with any subpena or to testify when summoned under authority of this section.

"(b) The Commission is authorized to secure directly from any executive department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, independent establishment, or instrumentality of the United States information, suggestions, estimate, and statistics for the purpose of this act. Each such department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, establishment, or instrumentality is authorized and directed to furnish such information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics directly to the Commission, upon request made by the Chairman or Vice Chairman.

"EXPENSES OF THE COMMISSION

"SEC. 7. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act."

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, there is a second very important discriminatory feature of the bill which I call to the attention of Senators, because I am afraid that having had the bill placed before them so late in the session, with all the confusion and turmoil attendant upon the closing hours or closing days, or if we should decide really to give adequate consideration to the bill, at least the closing week or two of the session, it seems to me that every Senator should read on page 2 a most amazing, discriminatory feature, which reads as follows:

Taxes upon real property removed after June 30, 1950, from the tax rolls of local governments by reason of its acquisition or use by the Federal Government for industrial or commercial purposes, where the acquisition or use by the Federal Government imposes financial hardship on the local government.

This is a novel device in Federal legislation. It says that a town or a city which was fortunate to have had a Federal imposition enter into its area after July 30, 1950, will receive the benefit of a rich payment in lieu of taxes from Uncle Sam. In other words, if Uncle Sam moved his installation into a community on the 1st of July 1950 the local taxpayers will be relieved of a lot of burden which they would normally have to pay, and which they have been paying throughout the years, and which the people in the rural areas of America, including the farmers and ranchers of South Dakota, always have to pay.

If the Federal Government moved in on the 1st day of July 1950, the Federal Government, out of its rapidly diminishing Treasury, is going to send out green checks to make payments in lieu of taxes.

But what about the community across the State line or across the river or on the other side of the mountains, where the same kind of Federal installation moved in on the 29th day of June 1950, 2 days earlier? Everything else is the same. There is the same imposition, the same hardship, the same delegations coming to Washington, the same Federal interference with private industry, the same great tax-exempt privilege for the Federal holdings. The one difference is that in one town the Federal Government moved in on the 29th day of June 1950; in the other town, the Federal Government came in 2 days later.

The bill provides that where an industry moved into a town on June 29, 1950, the taxes of the people will be increased in an already tax-burdened community. Because of the new imposition, the taxes will be hiked. There will be new levies and a bigger tax bite.

What will be done with the money? It will be moved down the road 3 or 4 miles, or 10 or 15 miles, and will be given to a town having the same kind of federalized industry which moved in on the 1st day of July 1950, 2 days later.

Talk about dscriminatory legislation; talk about legislation conceived in haste and attempted to be passed in confusion in the closing moments of the session; I feel certain the sponsors of the bill would never have dared to bring this kind of bill in even as early as 12 o'clock noon of adjournment day. No; they waited until they could almost hear the first dim rumblings of the adjournment bells. That is the time to put through a piece of proposed legislation like this, which says to one community of the same size, having the same kind of decent Americans, and the same problems, "Sorry, old top; you are elected to be the all-American chump. We are going to make your taxes higher, because 'it didn't happen to you' at the right moment on the clock. We'll use your increased tax money to help decrease the taxes of your contributors in your competitor communities."

Mr. President, 48 hours would make the great difference between getting a tax bonanza and a tax penalty under the same circumstances. I feel sure that if we had a chance to consider the bill carefully during several days of debate on the Senate floor, discriminations like that would be eliminated.

I feel certain there are many strange supporters of the bill, among which I think I find the United States Chamber of Commerce, who really have studied carefully neither its actual provisions nor its ultimate implications. I say I think I find them, because they seem to blow hot and cold when they write to me about it. The Washington office of the United States Chamber of Commerce seems to say, "We are against socialism and against socializing, but we believe this is a pretty good idea; but"—and one of the buts is, "We do not think it is a good rule to apply in the country areas. We think it is all right in the big towns. Some of our friends in the big cities like it. Let us give it a trial run."

I guess there are not many members of the United States Chamber of Commerce among the ranchers and farmers in the rural towns and communities of America. In all events, the United States Chamber seems to favor for certain big cities what it disapproves for our great public-land States and rural areas.

I am sorry I did not bring my file of correspondence along. I did not even imagine the bill would be before the Senate at this late hour. I came fairly unprepared to discuss the bill, but in the course of the evening I expect it will be considered at length. I shall certainly not permit passage of this bill until I am sure all Members know for what they are voting in these waning hours of the 84th Congress.

I have here several volumes containing the inventory of Federal property on which it is proposed to make payments in lieu of taxes.

Even a partial list of the Federal property which it is proposed to relieve from taxation by having the Federal Government pay sums in lieu of taxes would be impressive. It is a pretty good-size list. I do not have time for all of it. I was pretty sure Senators would not want to vote away the people's money to make payments in lieu of taxes without knowing what they were doing. So I wanted to be able to answer any questions which might be raised.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. If the Senator had read the bill—I supposed he had—he would know that before any community would be enabled to receive benefits under the bill, it would have to demonstrate hardship under very definite criteria.

The Senator further knows that the only way those documents would be applicable to the bill would be if some amendments which the Senator from South Dakota intended to propose, and which he has discussed, were to be adopted. And then those documents would become reference material for the Federal Treasury.

The bill is limited to a very small number of payments. It is limited to those communities that have demonstrable hardship.

As the Senator has quite aptly pointed out, he is making a long speech, but he is short on facts; he is long on rhetoric, but he is short on substance, because the bill is limited specifically and definitely to certain criteria.

One of the complaints of the Senator in the committee was that the bill did not do enough for his people. He wanted it to apply to more people. Yet he fears now it is going to be a big bonanza. The bill is not even a bonanza. The payments as prescribed in the bill are so small that the main complaint which was made by the proponents of the bill was that they would not get something out of it.

We cannot have it both ways. We have to make up our minds where we stand.

I suggest that the Senator from South Dakota read the majority report and not simply the minority views. I suggest that he read the studies which have been conducted over 20 years. It is the equivalent of a postgraduate course on the subject in South Dakota or Minnesota, if he will read it.

Mr. MUNDT. The Senator from Minnesota is quite right. Up to now I have been engaging simply in the rhetorical prelude to my factual statement. But I shall present a great many statistics and facts as we proceed.

I shall try to avoid the mistake my distinguished friend from Minnesota made and I shall not discontinue my speech as he did before I get down to the facts. During his rhetorical presentation, he was interrupted so many times that he never did get down to the factual data.

I seek to continue this discussion so we can get down to specifics as we proceed with this debate. The Senator is exactly correct when he states that in these documents there are included items which the committee excluded from the bill; but which I am confident Senators will agree should be included so we can treat all communities alike, this being proposed legislation passed by a public body which should consider the problems of its city and country cousins with the same consideration.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. If the Senator from South Dakota will yield, since he is going to give us a dissertation on this bill, and since he is so very able, in his dissertation I hope he will take the 55 pieces of legislation which have been mentioned—55 separate forms of payment in lieu of taxes—and analyze them; and maybe we will not have so many tears over those who are going to be excluded, because they have already been included in other bills. The documents which the Senator mentions are very imposing documents.

Mr. MUNDT. I was unable to bring all my documentation. This is the first installment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Under provisions of law which were established long ago.

I know the Senator from South Dakota is fair. I know he believes in equity and justice. On the basis of that, after having delivered a great speech, which will be most interesting, if not thoroughly documented, I am sure he will find it necessary to vote for the bill, because he is a fair man, and because he wants to see progress made in this great field of Federal-State relationships. I want to thank the Senator.

Mr. MUNDT. I have been so swayed by my colleague's testimony to my fairness, that before drawing another breath, I ask unanimous consent that I may have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as appendix C, a list of revenue-sharing Federal properties.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

[The matter referred to will appear hereafter in the RECORD.]

Mr. MUNDT. They are not exactly 55 in number, but they are, according to the hearings, 21 in number, which is still a large number. It proves the point I shall make a little later. When we have 21 different approaches to one problem, the way to cure it is the way the Senator from Iowa and I suggested—make a thoroughgoing, interdepartmental study, with some reports which would synthetize the problem and put it under one head and give us one solution, instead of adding a new area of disruption and inequity—just one more poorly conceived patch on our present crazy quilt of legislation on this subject.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a point of correction?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. The report of the staff of the committee and the report of the General Services Administration to the Committee on Appropriations show conclusively that there are 55 existing laws in which there is some kind of Federal payments to local communities. I think that is a matter of factual evidence that should be submitted in the debate. In order to have that data in the RECORD, I ask unanimous consent that the majority report may be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks, so that these facts can be clear, even if the judgment on the facts is not.

There being no objection, the report (No. 2424) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Government Operations, having considered various bills relating to payments in lieu of taxes, reports favorably an original bill, S. 4183, to authorize the payment to local governments of sums in lieu of taxes and special assessments with respect to certain Federal real property, and for other purposes, and recommends that the bill do pass.

PURPOSE

S. 4183 would establish a temporary program of payments in lieu of taxes and special assessments on a very limited category of real property which has been removed from local tax rolls as a result of Federal acquisition. The major category of payments authorized would be at the discretion of a Federal board which would administer the program, and numerous additional safeguards have been included in order to insure against any undue or unjustified payments. It would also provide that the board shall conduct a comprehensive study and make a case-by-case analysis of virtually every phase of fiscal and related problems of local taxing authorities arising out of Federal immunity from local real and personal property taxes, including the operation of existing programs. The Congress would receive semiannual reports from the board on the operation of the program and, within 2 years after the date of enactment, a comprehensive report, accompanied by appropriate proposed legislation, detailing its recommendations on the necessity for a continuing policy.

Nothing contained in this bill would have any effect upon existing payments or revenue-sharing arrangements authorized by law.

S. 4183 is a modest attempt to deal with a problem which the Committee on Government Operations and other committees of the Congress have studied and considered for more than 7 years. It represents the firm conviction of the committee that no comprehensive program is possible, and that the only feasible approach to the problems involved is by means of a limited program of payments in lieu of taxes, coupled with a case-by-case consideration by an administrative board of the relative merits of individual cases. This bill would implement, in principle, many of the major recommendations, relative to payments in lieu of taxes, of the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations. It has the support of the administration, and embodies the views and amendments submitted to the committee by the Bureau of the Budget.

This bill would authorize, for a 5-year period, (1) a very limited program of payments in lieu of taxes on industrial or commercial real properties acquired by the Federal Government after June 30, 1950; (2) payments of special assessments levied after the effective date of the act in urban or suburban areas, if such assessments were also levied on real property owned by other taxable persons; and (3) payments in lieu of taxes on the interest of the Federal Government in real property leased or sold to private persons under conditional sales contracts, if such property were owned by a taxable person.

The program would be administered by a five-member, bipartisan Federal Board for Payments to Local Governments, appointed by the President, subject to Senate confirmation. A taxing authority would be required to file an appropriate application, specifying the Federal property involved, the basis of its claim and the period for which the claim is made (not to exceed 12 months in any single application). The Board, after determining the existence of a probable basis for the claim, and conducting a hearing, if a basis is found to exist, would be required to determine and certify to the controlling Federal agency the amount of payment to be made to the local taxing authority. In the case of industrial or commercial real property, however, the applicant would be required to make a showing that Federal acquisition of such property has resulted in a financial hardship to the community in question. The actual payment to be made would be based upon the amount of local taxes which would have been payable had the property been privately owned, increased by additional expenditures incurred by the taxing authority in furnishing services to the Federal property, and diminished by the aggregate of local-type governmental services furnished by the controlling Federal agency, further diminished by any additional credit against Federal liability resulting from any exemption, immunity, or reduction in the tax rate or amount, if such are available, under State or local law, to private persons as an inducement to engage in industrial or commercial activities within the territorial jurisdiction of the particular tax authority. The Board's decisions are made final and would be conclusive upon all tax authorities and Federal agencies, and may not be questioned by any court or Government accounting office.

Specific provision is made to insure that this bill will not affect payments by Federal agencies under existing programs authorized by law; that Federal property under an existing program would be excluded from the coverage of this bill and would not be subject to additional payments for the same period; and that in no event could the Federal payment on industrial or commercial real property exceed the amount of the tax which would be payable if such property had been developed and used by a taxable person for a typical private industrial or commercial use, either within the jurisdiction of that tax authority or in nearby comparable communities.

The Board, either on its own motion or upon application by a tax authority, would be required to make various studies relative to (1) fiscal and other problems of local taxing authorities arising out of Federal immunity from real and personal property taxes; (2) the nature and extent of payments to local taxing authorities under other Federal programs; including grants-in-aid and revenue-sharing programs; and (3) the nature and extent of benefits derived by tax authorities directly or indirectly through persons residing or employed upon Federal property and for or in connection with any property, trade, business, etc., situated or occurring upon Federal property. The Board would be required to report semiannually to the President and the Congress with respect to its operations during the preceding period and to file, no later than 2 years after the date of enactment, a comprehensive report, accompanied by appropriate proposed legislation, detailing its recommendations on the necessity for a continuing policy for compensating local tax authorities for losses sustained incident to the presence of Federal tax-exempt property within their jurisdictions, and with respect to the future treatment of properties for which payments are temporarily authorized under Public Law 388, 84th Congress (former RFC properties).

The Board would be authorized to employ personnel and procure the services of consultants, at rates not to exceed $50 per day, to conduct hearings or investigations, and to examine witnesses and compel their attendance by subpena. It would be required to maintain an accurate stenographic record of all testimony, a transcript of which would be filed in the office of the Board. The Board would cease to exist on December 31, 1963, 2 years after the terminal date for the filing of applications for payments.

Finally, the bill would establish a 12-member advisory committee, composed of representatives of the Federal Government, State governments and local taxing authorities, appointed by the President, which would be required to conduct studies of the administration of this act, as well as all other Federal legislation authorizing payments of taxes or in lieu thereof, by Federal agencies to local tax authorities, and problems arising in connection therewith. This committee would be required to consult with the Board, upon its request, in an advisory capacity in the solution of such problems, and transmit from time to time to the Board and to the President for transmittal to the Congress, a report summarizing the results of its studies, together with recommendations for administrative or legislative changes considered necessary or desirable for efficient, economical and equitable administration of such provisions of law.

General

State and local taxing authorities have been seriously concerned, particularly since 1939, over the increasing acquisition by the Federal Government of various types of property which has operated to remove such property from local tax rolls. Local governments depend upon property taxes for more than half of their total revenues, so that they are particularly concerned when the Federal Government acquires real estate and thereby removes it from the property tax base while at the same time activities on or associated with the Federal property may impose service burdens upon these local governments. From time to time, the Congress has acknowledged responsibility for reducing, to some extent, the adverse effects of these acquisitions upon local government revenues and fiscal structures by enacting numerous statutory provisions which authorize payments by certain Federal agencies and departments or upon certain types of properties. However, the great majority of Federal agencies have no general authority to make payments on their properties. Furthermore, existing provisions of law are quite diverse and result in different treatment for similar properties of various agencies. Thus, those provisions of law which do exist fail to present any clear-cut, uniform policy. On some classes of property, some agencies pay taxes; others make payments in lieu of taxes; and still others make no payments at all.

The seriousness of the general problem appears to have been magnified by the outbreak of the Korean war in 1950, when large-scale Federal acquisitions of defense production facilities throughout the country resulted in the removal of substantial parcels of real property from local tax rolls. In addition, local taxing authorities have been and are being deprived of personal property tax revenues on inventories of such properties as a result of provisions in procurement contracts under which title to such inventories passes to the Federal Government prior to completion.

Studies of Federal-State-local tax relations

During the past 20 years, the fiscal problems of local governments resulting from Federal acquisition and control of real property, and the impact of Federal immunity from State and local taxation have been the subject of almost continuous study by governmental, quasi-governmental, quasi-governmental and private groups which have filed some 9 reports with recommendations.

The first of these was initiated by the President of the United States in 1935 when he appointed a committee consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Attorney General, and the Acting Director of the Bureau of the Budget, and directed them to undertake a study of Federal ownership of real estate and of its bearing on State and local taxation. This committee made a brief study and submitted its report and recommendations to the President in 1938 (Federal Ownership of Real Estate and Its Bearing on State and Local Taxation, H. Doc. No. 111, 76th Cong., 1st sess.).

Following one of the recommendations of this committee, the President established a Federal Real Estate Board to study and make appropriate recommendations regarding the situation in different communities adversely affected by the loss of tax revenues on land acquired by the Federal Government. This Board submitted a 50-page report with recommendations to the President and the Congress in 1943 (Federal Contributions to States and Local Government Units With Respect to Federally Owned Real Estate, H. Doc. 216, 78th Cong., 1st sess.). The Board continued in a quiescent state until 1951 when it was finally dissolved.

During much of this same period, the Treasury Department, through a special committee, was conducting a study of the entire subject of Federal-State and local fiscal relations, including payments in lieu of taxes. This committee submitted a 595-page report (Federal, State and Local Government Relations, S. Doc. 69, 78th Cong., 1st sess.).

In January 1948, the first Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch (Hoover Commission) retained the Council of State Governments to make a comprehensive study of the entire field of Federal-State relations. The Council submitted a 297-page report to the Commission in July 1948, which report was transmitted to the Congress in March 1949 (Federal-State Relations, S. Doc. 81, 81st Cong., 1st sess.).

In April 1949, the Secretary of the Treasury invited representatives of State and local governments to a conference on intergovernmental tax problems. Payments in lieu of taxes to State and local governments was one of the subjects under discussion, and the conference requested the Bureau of the Budget to work out comprehensive recommendations on this subject. The results of this undertaking will be discussed below.

During the same month, the Treasury Department prepared a staff memorandum (Payments to State and Local Governments on Federally Owned Real Estate, April 5, 1949, joint hearings before the Subcommittees on Intergovernmental Relations of the House and Senate Committees on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, 81st Cong., 1st sess., pp. 238–248) which it submitted for committee consideration.

In September 1952, the Associate General Counsel, Housing and Home Finance Agency, prepared a 61-page study on the subject of payments to local governments in lieu of taxes, for the section on municipal law of the American Bar Association (mimeographed memorandum prepared by Joseph Guandolo).

In May 1954, a detailed, comprehensive study of the whole subject of Federal landownership and the public land laws was prepared for and issued by the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives (Preliminary Report on Taxes and Other In-Lieu Payments on Federal Property, Committee Print No. 23, 83d Cong., 2d sess.). This 133-page report contains a comprehensive analysis and factual presentation of virtually every phase of Federal-State-local relations as relates to Federal payments of taxes or in lieu thereof to local governments, and contains all of the pertinent statutes on the subject.

In March 1955, the General Services Administration submitted to the Senate Committee on Appropriations an inventory report on Federal real property in the continental United States, as of December 31, 1953, prepared at the request of that committee, a summary of which was issued as Senate Document No. 32, 84th Congress. This inventory covers all land, buildings, and other structures and facilities located within the continental limits of the United States, title to which is vested in the United States or in wholly owned Government corporations. A copy of this report was also filed with the Committee on Government Operations.

In February 1956, the General Services Administration submitted to the Committees on Appropriations and Government Operations a second inventory report covering Federal real property in the continental United States, as of June 30, 1955 (S. Doc. 100, 84th Cong.). This 112-page summary report reflected refinements in the data submitted earlier, and stated that considerable progress had been made in improving real property records throughout the Government. An inventory report on Federal real property outside of the continental United States, as of June 30, 1955, with complete supporting data, was submitted in March 1956 (S. Doc. 109, 84th Cong.).

In addition, numerous studies dealing with the impact of Federal tax immunity on State and local government fiscal structures have been prepared, from time to time, by various State and local government associations.

These materials contain a detailed breakdown, as of June 30, 1955, of every piece of real property owned by the Federal Government, both inside and outside of the continental limits of the United States, tabulated both by States and by agencies.

Finally, in June 1955, the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations submitted a 311-page report with recommendations, which was accompanied by 15 additional volumes, totaling in all approximately 2,200 pages. One of these volumes was a 197-page report entitled "Payments in Lieu of Taxes and Shared Revenues," which contained an exhaustive study of the entire subject, with detailed recommendations concerning future Federal policy with respect to payments to State and local governments for Federal property holdings located therein.

Committee action in the 80th, 81st, and 82d Congresses

Following a meeting of members of congressional committees and governors, called for the purpose of studying Federal-State tax relations, held in Chicago on September 26–27, 1947, the Senate Committee on Government Operations (then the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments) was designated to conduct a special study of the problems of coordination of Federal and State taxes, with the objective of strengthening the tax structures of local and State governments and compensating them for losses of revenues from former sources of taxation. In its report to the Senate (S. Rept. No. 1054, 80th Cong.) stress was placed by the committee on the importance of assuring the Federal, State, and local tax systems are adequate to the job assigned to them and on the need for determining whether they fit together into a combined tax system which is equitable, administratively efficient, and economically sound.

During the past 7 years, this committee has had pending before it numerous bills dealing with various aspects of Federal-State-local tax relations, in general, and of payments of taxes or in lieu of taxes, in particular.

In 1949, during the 1st session of the 81st Congress, the committee considered three Senate measures relative to the establishment of a National Commission on Intergovernmental Relations which would have been required to study and make recommendations with respect to various aspects of intergovernmental relations, including intergovernmental tax immunities. Joint hearings were held by the Subcommittees on Intergovernmental Relations of both the Senate and House Committees on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. At the hearings, which lasted for 5 consecutive days, 267 pages of testimony and exhibits were received and more than 20 witnesses were heard. A new committee bill, S. 1946, was reported favorably on June 13, 1949 (S. Rept. No. 488, 81st Cong.), but failed of passage following an objection on a call of the Senate Calendar.

In 1950, the committee considered S. 3147, which had been drafted by its Subcommittee on Intergovernmental Relations. It was introduced by Senator HUMPHREY, for himself and 42 other Senators, and was substantially similar to S. 1946. The bill was reported favorably on June 22, 1950 (S. Rept. 1856, 81st Cong.), but failed of passage following an objection on the call of the Senate Calendar.

In 1951, during the 82d Congress, Senator HUMPHREY introduced S. 2268, which had been prepared and submitted to the committee by the Bureau of the Budget, after extensive study, in fulfillment of the assignment it had accepted at the 1949 intergovernmental relations conference, described in the preceding section, that the Budget Bureau develop a comprehensive set of recommendations on this subject. This bill was a broad, comprehensive measure designed to establish a uniform policy throughout the Federal Government with respect to payments of taxes or in lieu of taxes. It would have replaced some 20 piecemeal statutory provisions with 5 broad types of payments to State and local governments on federally owned real estate and included payments on a limited category of tangible personal property. No action was taken on this measure during the 82d Congress.

The committee also had before it a bill, S. 1166, recommended by the Hoover Commission, which proposed to establish a temporary Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, which would have been required to study the subject and report its recommendations to the Congress within a limited time. Since the committee members preferred to have the benefit of the report of this proposed Commission, it decided to take no action on S. 2268, but reported favorably S. 1166 on July 12, 1951 (S. Rept. 544, 82d Cong.). The bill failed of passage, following an objection on the call of the Senate Calendar.

Committee action in the 83d Congress

During the 83d Congress, the committee devoted considerable time and effort to the subject of intergovernmental relations, with special reference to payments in lieu of taxes to local taxing authorities. Early in 1953, hearings were held on S. 1514 and related bills to establish a Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, required to study, report, and submit recommendations, relative to various phases of Federal-State-local fiscal and other relations, to the President and the Congress. This bill was reported favorably on May 4, 1953 (S. Rept. 215, 83d Cong.), passed the Senate on May 6, and became Public Law 109, 83d Congress, on July 10, 1953.

The committee also had before it in the 83d Congress three bills which were designed to provide varying measures of relief to hard-pressed communities. S. 788, introduced by Senator HUMPHREY (identical to S. 2268, 82d Cong.), was designed to establish a uniform policy throughout the Federal Government with respect to payments in lieu of taxes. S. 2473, introduced by Senator KNOWLAND, was designed to provide a permanent, continuing system for payments by the Federal Government to State and local taxing units adversely affected by Federal acquisition, ownership, or use of defense production facilities. H. R. 5605 was designed to furnish temporary relief for local taxing authorities who were under an undue and unexpected burden as the result of the transfer of taxable real property from a Government corporation to another Federal department or agency, which transfer operated to take such property out of taxation.

The committee held hearings on S. 2473 in 1953, and again in 1954, in connection with its consideration of H. R. 5605. Following considerable further study, the committee decided to defer action on S. 788 and S. 2473, first, because their broad scope and coverage required further analysis, and second, because the committee was advised by the Bureau of the Budget that the President would formulate no policy with respect to the subject matter of these bills until he had an opportunity to review the final findings and recommendations of the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations which was then engaged in an intensive study of the areas covered by these measures. The committee decided, however, that the financial plight of the very small number of local taxing authorities which would be covered by H. R. 5605 entitled them to some measure of relief. Accordingly, it reported the latter bill favorably on July 21, 1954 (S. Rept. 1966), but it failed of final passage following an objection on the call of the Senate Calender.

Committee action in the 84th Congress

During the 84th Congress, the committee had before it 10 bills dealing with the various aspects of payments of taxes or in lieu of taxes by the Federal Government to local taxing authorities, which fell into 5 major categories: (1) The establishment of permanent and overall policies and procedures with respect to payment by the Federal Government of taxes or in lieu of taxes, represented by S. 1566 (HUMPHREY, KUCHEL, and GOLDWATER); S. 1657 (BUSH); S. 2390 (KNOWLAND); and S. 2754 (MALONE); (2) the establishment of a limited program of payments by the Federal Government in lieu of taxes with respect to Federal real and personal property acquired during and subsequent to the Korean war, represented by S. 826 (BENDER); (3) the establishment of a temporary, short-term program for the relief of local taxing authorities, designed to alleviate their acute fiscal difficulties, pending a more permanent solution, represented by S. 888 (MARTIN, of Pennsylvania) and S. 2377 (POTTER); (4) the establishment of a program authorizing payments of a very limited type, such as special assessments for public improvements, represented by S. 3534 (SCHOEPPEL) and S. 3785 (MAGNUSON); and (5) the elimination of certain types of Federal tax immunity with respect to State sales and use taxes on personal property, represented by S. 2100 (THURMOND). All but one of these bills, S. 3785, were introduced during the 1st session of the 84th Congress.

In 1955, during the first session of the 84th Congress, the committee considered and approved S. 2377 (similar in essential respects to H. R. 5605, 83d Cong., as reported by this committee and S. 888, 84th Cong.). This bill was reported favorably, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute containing language identical to a companion measure, H. R. 6182, previously approved by the House of Representatives. After agreeing to the committee amendment, the Senate, on July 30, 1955, passed the companion measure, which became Public Law 388 on August 12, 1955. This act provided temporary relief for local taxing authorities by restoring to the tax roll certain real property which had been held by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and was subject to local taxation, but which had been taken out of taxation by the transfer of such property to other Government agencies.

In July 1955, the committee held a preliminary hearing on the seven bills which were then before it. Further action was deferred, however, pending an opportunity to examine and evaluate the report and recommendations of the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, and the receipt of the administration's comments and views on the pending bills. Following this hearing, the staff was directed to make an exhaustive analysis of the pending bills and the pertinent recommendations of the Intergovernmental Relations Commission and its Study Committee on Payments in Lieu of Taxes and Shared Revenues, which had been referred to the committee on June 27, 1955. This study was embodied in a 17-page staff memorandum, to which was attached a 52-page appendix, all of which were incorporated in the record of the hearing. (Hearing before the Committee on Government Operations, United States Senate, 84th Cong., 1st sess., Payments of Taxes to State or Local Taxing Units, pt. I, July 25, 1955.) The bulk of the testimony received at this hearing was from various individuals and groups concerned with payments of taxes or in lieu of taxes to State or local taxing authorities. Since the executive branch agencies had not yet formulated a policy on this subject, they did not desire to present their views at that time.

Hearings on the pending bills in the second session of the 84th Congress were held on April 19 and 20, 1956. Although all of the executive branch departments and agencies were invited to participate, with the exception of the Department of Defense and the Bureau of the Budget, they preferred to submit their views in the form of written statements for the record. For the most part, these statements contained detailed analyses of the effect of the various bills on the reporting agency, and evidenced much painstaking effort. The position of the executive branch was presented by representatives of the Bureau of the Budget and the Department of Defense, in the form of oral testimony, supplemented by supporting materials which were submitted for the record.

Since the record in support of the pending bills had been fully presented at the earlier hearings by representatives of various State and local government associations, and was fully set forth in the report of the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, witnesses from these associations agreed to limit their testimony to brief summaries and to the submission of statements for the record.

At the hearings, a representative of the Bureau of the Budget stated, in effect, that the administration was fully aware that large-scale Federal acquisition of real property, and Federal tax immunity may, and often does, result in serious financial hardships to local governments. However, the presence of Federal installations often results in benefits to a community which more than offset the burdens. Furthermore, care must be taken to preserve the traditional Federal immunity from local taxation. Accordingly, the solution was not to inaugurate a broad system of payments in lieu of taxes, which might involve the expenditure of huge sums of money, but rather to seek an accommodation which would lessen the severity of the Federal tax immunity, while avoiding a major breach of existing immunities and incorporating adequate safeguards against unnecessary or excessive Federal payments.

It was the position of the administration that the basic principle of an appropriate system must be that in a particular taxing jurisdiction, there is a demonstrable hardship caused by the recent removal of Federal properties from the tax rolls, and that the hardship is of such depth and importance that special Federal financial assistance is warranted.

The administration spokesman stated that—"the magnitude of the problem has led us to conclude that a limited and careful start should be made, through suitable legislation, toward making payments where communities demonstrate financial distress because of revenue loss directly attributable to the removal of taxable real property from the tax rolls as a result of Federal acquisition."

Based upon these considerations, the administration was unable to support any of the major bills pending before the committee, but was prepared to support legislation which would achieve a proper balance between a fair payment to the recipient local government and a fair charge to the National Government. It was their position, however, that such legislation should include (1) a limited designation of the kinds of acquired Federal properties which may be the subject of payments, (2) precise definitions of eligibility for particular categories of property, and (3) rules for charging for special services rendered to the National Government and crediting special benefits conferred by the National Government. With such an approach, the administration felt it should be possible to define and control the policy commitment and the resulting financial obligation of the Federal Government, in those cases where a substantial impairment of the finances of the local government is directly attributable to the removal of property from the tax base as a result of Federal acquisition.

Summing up its position, the Bureau of the Budget stated:

"We recommend that legislation be enacted now to provide the authority and mechanism for payments, during a period of 4 or 5 years, in cases of demonstrable hardship involving the recent removal of real estate from the tax rolls by reason of its acquisition by the National Government for industrial or commercial purposes, and including provision that during that period there shall be detailed field studies of specific local situations. We believe that additional legislation should await a reasonable period in which to acquire experience in administering this limited policy."

COMMITTEE ACTION

General

Following consideration of the testimony contained in the 477-page record of the hearings, the committee concluded that (1) because of the complexities inherent in the subject, and the large number of variables involved, it was unable to recommend favorable action on any of the pending bills; (2) that since the factual pattern varied in the 16,778 cities and 3,049 counties in the United States which may possibly be affected by Federal tax immunities, the only approach which would furnish a measure of relief to those local governments which are hard pressed as a result of Federal acquisition, was through a limited program of payments in lieu of taxes, coupled with a case-by-case consideration by an administrative board of the relative merits of individual cases; (3) that any further legislative action would have to await the accumulation by such a board of information concerning specific local needs and situations, compiled on a case-by-case basis, following field studies; and (4) that no amount of general study, unrelated to the specific variable factors in each individual case, would serve any useful purpose.

The committee was supported in these conclusions, not only by the Bureau of the Budget, which has had these matters under study for many years, but also by a number of the sponsors of the major bills pending before the committee, who testified in the hearings that, in their judgment, bills proposing to establish broad comprehensive programs had not received favorable action over the years because such an approach is not feasible.

Following further consideration and discussion, the committee directed the staff to prepare a bill embodying the considerations listed above. After a series of conferences with representatives of the Bureau of the Budget, the committee approved the subject bill, with an amendment proposed by Senator COTTON, which was designed to make available to Federal property any tax benefits which might be available, in any taxing jurisdiction, to private persons as an inducement to locate their establishments within the particular jurisdiction.

The committee's decision to approve a program providing for three categories of payments was based upon the following considerations:

(1) With respect to special assessments levied after the effective date of the act, it was felt that since a special assessment results in an ultimate improvement to the property, thus adding to its value, there is no reason why Federal agencies should not pay for improvements to their properties in the same manner as private taxable owners, provided, of course, the assessment is levied on real property owned by all other taxable persons.

(2) With respect to payments in lieu of taxes on the Federal Government's interest in real property leased or sold to private persons under conditional sales contracts, the property is being used for private purposes, and is operated by private, taxable persons, and the interest of the Federal Government is only that of a landlord, in the case of leased property, and is purely temporary in the case of property conditionally sold.

(3) With respect to industrial or commercial property acquired after June 30, 1950, the guiding consideration was the fact that the Federal use of such property is, for the most part, identical to that of private taxable property used to produce for the same purposes. Thus, if the property were privately owned, it would pay taxes; the mere fact of Federal ownership should not deprive the local taxing authority of taxes in cases where Federal acquisition or use has resulted in a hardship to the community. In the event that the local taxing authority is unable to demonstrate to the Federal administrative board that Federal acquisition has resulted in hardship, no payments would be made. The June 30, 1950, cutoff date was chosen because this date would cover the increased Federal acquisition of real property of this type, incident to the Korean war. In addition, it will serve to keep the cost of this program within reasonable bounds.

Cost

The committee gave considerable attention to the probable cost of the program established by S. 4183, and concluded that only rough estimates can be made, because it is impossible to forecast the special assessments which local taxing authorities are likely to levy on Federal property in the future; and it is difficult to estimate the cost of Federal payments on the Federal interest in real property leased or sold under conditional sales contracts, since the State laws with respect to such properties vary considerably, and the value of the Federal interest as well as the tax equivalent of that interest are difficult to estimate.

Concerning industrial or commercial real property acquired by the Government after June 30, 1950, although the properties falling into this category are generally identifiable, the potential cost of Federal payments on such properties cannot be determined without a prior determination of (1) their assessed value; (2) applicable local tax rates for each specific piece of property; (3) the adjustment which would be applicable under the formula provided in section 9 of the bill; and (4) whether or not Federal acquisition of the property in question has resulted in a financial hardship to the local taxing authority, and the extent of such hardship in terms of demonstrated financial loss.

With respect to the assessed value of the properties involved, although the cost to the Federal Government of each property is known, assessment practices in the thousands of assessment districts throughout the United States vary widely; and even in a single assessment district, the ratio of assessed value to full value may differ for similar properties. Finally, since each local taxing authority requesting payment under this act would be required to demonstrate to the Federal board that Federal acquisition has resulted in financial hardship, no estimate can possibly be made of the number of applications for payments which will be made or which applicants will qualify for payments. Furthermore, even if the Federal board finds that an applicant qualifies and hardship exists, the application of the formula contained in section 9 of the bill makes it impossible to provide a cost estimate, since no forecast may be made as to which factors will be applicable in a given case, which cases will be entitled to payments following the application of the formula, or the amounts which will finally be payable.

With the foregoing limitations in mind, the Bureau of the Budget has advised the committee that the payments for special assessments would probably range between $200,000 and $300,000 per year; payments for property leased or sold under conditional sales contracts might be in the neighborhood of several million dollars per year; and payments on commercial or industrial real property might run between $10 million and $20 million annually. It was stressed, however, that the numerous individual differences and imponderables involved made these estimates more in the nature of a guess than a reliable estimate.

From the foregoing it is clearly apparent that these questions can never be resolved by a general study, but can only be determined by an administrative board on the basis of its consideration of all of the factors involved in each case which comes before it.

Criteria of hardship

As previously shown, local taxing authorities would be entitled to payments in lieu of taxes on industrial or commercial real property acquired by the Federal Government after June 30, 1950, only where it can be shown that Federal acquisition or use of such property imposes financial hardship upon the local taxing authority. The determination of the existence of this hardship is left to the Federal administrative board established by the bill, which is authorized to prescribe appropriate rules and regulations, and which would establish criteria of hardship for its guidance.

The committee felt that the Board should have some leeway in the establishment of these criteria. However, it is the committee's intention and understanding that in determining whether financial hardship exists the Board will consider, among other matters, the following factors:

(1) The extent to which Federal acquisition or control has increased or decreased the volume of services necessarily rendered and the amount of expenditures necessarily incurred by a taxing authority during any period for which payments are claimed;

(2) The extent to which such acquisition has increased or decreased the revenue resources available to such tax authority;

(3) The extent to which such acquisition or use has been demonstrated to have directly (a) increased to an unreasonable degree the tax burden of taxpayers of a tax authority, (b) diminished substantially the aggregate value of the real property included within the real property tax base of such tax authority, or (c) resulted in an overloading of the facilities and services of such tax authority;

(4) The extent to which such acquisition has resulted directly or indirectly in a general economic benefit to a tax authority by reason of the activity of Federal agencies; and

(5) The extent to which assistance from the government of the State is available to a tax authority in making financial readjustments to alleviate any distress occasioned by the acquisition, control or use of real property by Federal agencies.

Qualifications of Board members

As indicated earlier, the program of limited payments and large-scale studies proposed by this bill would be administered by a five-member, bipartisan Federal Board for Payments to Local Governments, appointed by the President, subject to Senate confirmation. It is quite apparent that this body will have an enormous amount of work to do if it is to accomplish its very important mission. Aside from its quasi-judicial functions, its major responsibilities will relate to the case studies of local situations which it will be required to make, and to its formulation of recommendations with respect to the future policy of this Government in the field of Federal payments to local taxing authorities in lieu of taxes.

It is the committee's sincere hope that the President will appoint to this Board individuals who are thoroughly qualified, by reason of background and training as well as some experience in the field of fiscal affairs or intergovernmental relations, in general, and Federal-State-local fiscal and tax relations, in particular.

CONCLUSIONS

S. 4183 represents the culmination of more than 7 years of continuing efforts by this committee to develop a program which would afford some measure of relief to local communities which have suffered losses as the result of the presence of Federal-tax-immune property in their jurisdictions, but which would not do violence to the principle of Federal tax immunity or constitute an undue burden on the Federal Treasury.

Through the years, many hundreds of witnesses have been heard; many volumes of testimony have been compiled; and numerous reports have been made by interested groups and carefully studied by the committee.

Based upon these many years of study and consideration, the committee has come to the following conclusions:

1. There is an urgent need for immediate legislative action to relieve local taxing authorities from unjustified and inequitable burdens and hardships which have been imposed upon them as the result of large-scale Federal acquisition of various types of property which has operated to remove such property from the local tax rolls.

2. Because of the extremely complex nature of the subject and the many variables which are involved, it is not possible to devise a comprehensive program which will operate in a fair and equitable manner, and which is not likely to involve huge expenditures of Federal funds and possible "windfall" payments to communities which have actually been benefited rather than harmed by the presence of Federal installations.

3. The only equitable type of program which is possible is one in which payments are based upon individual cases and situations as they are presented and documented, and as information relative to each situation is compiled, evaluated, and assessed on its merits.

S. 4183 would provide for the beginning of such a program, on a 5-year trial basis. It would permit modest payments in limited areas and, in its major aspects, would permit payments only to those local taxing authorities which are able to show that, after weighing the benefits resulting from the presence of Federal installations against the burdens imposed on local taxpayers and local taxing authorities, they were still suffering financial hardship.

The committee desires to emphasize that, despite any statements to the contrary, this is most definitely not a giveaway program, it will not open the gates to unlimited and unrestrained payments by the Federal Government to local communities, and it is not discriminatory.

The committee has taken care to incorporate in the bill adequate safeguards and various protective measures to insure that no community will receive payments to which they are not entitled. Some of these protective measures are: (1) a provision denying payment to any community which is receiving a Federal payment for the same property under another Federal program, and with respect to commercial or industrial property; (2) the 1950 cutoff date; (3) the requirement of a showing of demonstrable hardship; (4) a rigid formula for determining the amount of payments, in the event of a showing of eligibility and entitlement; (5) a provision that in no event can the Federal payment exceed an amount equivalent to the amount of the tax, had the property been privately owned by a taxable person; and (6) a provision that the Federal property will receive the same tax benefits offered by a taxing authority to private, taxable persons.

Any allegation that this bill is discriminatory is entirely without merit. It is true that the coverage of this bill is limited, and numerous communities will not receive payments if the Federal, industrial, or commercial property in their jurisdiction was acquired prior to June 30, 1950. However, without a cutoff date, the cost of this program would have been exceedingly high, and the 1950 cutoff date represents the beginning of a period of expanded Federal acquisition. Moreover, because the bill covers only a limited category of property, that does not make it any more discriminatory than the 55 existing laws which authorize some type of Federal payments to local communities, covering some and excluding others. Finally, it is stressed that this is not permanent legislation, although it may possibly point the way to permanent legislation. If there are defects in the operation of this program, as applications and evidence which are presented to the Federal administrative board are analyzed and developed, the board will make reports and recommendations to the Congress for improvements, and the Congress will then be in a position to make the final determination, in each area, based not upon abstract studies, but upon concrete, documented evidence.

It is the firm conviction of the committee that this program is extremely important in another connection. At the present time, the real property holdings of the Federal Government have reached enormous proportions and entail tremendous expenditures. If Federal agencies are required, in proper cases, to make such payments as are provided for in the subject bill, it should serve as an incentive to these agencies to dispose of numerous substantial holdings of commercial or industrial real property which should be in the hands of private industry and on the tax rolls of the communities in which they are located.

Finally, it may be stated that S. 4183 satisfies neither the opponents nor the proponents of a Federal payment-in-lieu-of-taxes program. It is, however, a sincere effort to solve a most perplexing problem and to pave the way, in a realistic fashion, for such improvements as may be needed, based upon the 5-year experience under this program.

It is the committee's sincere conviction that S. 4183 is the beginning of a program which is reasonable and logical and will enable the systematic compilation on a case-by-case basis of information relative to the needs of each community in which Federal property is located. The administrative board established by the bill is required to report to the Congress concerning its activities every 6 months; and the comprehensive report required to be submitted within 2 years, based upon the cases adjudicated by it and the field studies conducted with respect to other types of cases, will furnish the Congress with a solid foundation upon which further policy determinations may be based.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Outline of bill

This bill consists of 10 sections, of which the first 3 specify a short title, declare the general policy and establish special definitions. Sections 4 and 5 establish a Federal Board for Payments to Local Governments and prescribe its duties. Section 6 establishes an advisory committee and prescribes its duties, and section 7 details the proceedings of the Board. Section 8 provides for payments to be authorized and contains certain limitations; section 9 provides for the determination of payments and section 10 authorizes necessary appropriations.

Section 1. Short title

The act may be cited as the Payments to Local Governments Act of 1956.

Section 2. Declaration of policy

Subsection (a) states that, although the United States is under no constitutional obligation to pay taxes or make financial contributions in lieu of taxes to States or local subdivisions thereof with respect to Federal property, the Congress declares that it is national policy to avoid demonstrable financial hardship upon such local governments caused by the exemption of Federal real property from taxation by local governments, and declares it to be the policy of the United States to make contributions to local governments in lieu of (1) special assessments levied after the effective date of the act, (2) taxes on the interest of the Federal Government in real property leased or sold under conditional sales contracts to taxable persons, and (3) taxes on real property removed after June 30, 1950, from the tax rolls of local governments by reason of acquisition or use by the Federal Government for industrial or commercial purposes, where the Federal acquisition or use imposes financial hardship on the local government.

Subsection (b) declares that, in consideration for the payments authorized, the Congress expects the recipients thereof to make available to the Federal Government, its property and its officers and employees, and their families, all public services normally provided by them, upon the same terms and conditions as such services are made available to or with respect to other property and individuals.

Section 3. Definitions

Some words and phrases in the bill are defined restrictively or used in a special sense. Some of these are as follows:

"Federal agency" means any department, agency, officer, or independent establishment in the executive branch of the Government of the United States, and any corporation now or hereafter subject to the provisions of the Government Corporation Control Act (31 U. S. C. 846).

"Federal property" means any real property the legal title to which is held by the United States or any Federal agency.

"Controlling agency" when used in relation to any Federal property means the Federal agency which is charged with the duty of administering such property.

"State" means any State of the United States (District of Columbia is excluded).

"Tax authority" means any county, city, municipality, tax district, or other political subdivision or public entity of any State having authority under the law of such State to levy within its territorial jurisdiction any tax or special assessment upon real property.

"Tax" means any tax of general application levied according to value by any tax authority upon real property situated within its territorial jurisdiction, but does not include any tax levied upon the manufacture, purchase, sale, transfer, or use of any property, or any income derived from any property.

"Special assessment" means any levy, other than a tax, imposed after the date of enactment of this act by any tax authority directly upon real property situated within its territorial jurisdiction to defray the cost of any public improvement.

"Real property," when used in relation to any tax or special assessment, means any interest in land, and any improvement thereon, if such interest or improvement constitutes real property under law in effect within the tax authority imposing such tax or special assessment.

"Industrial or commercial use," when used in relation to any Federal property, includes any use made of such property for (1) the mining, manufacturing, fabrication, or repair of any article or commodity, (2) the generation of electrical energy, (3) the transportation of individuals or property, (4) the sale or leasing of any property, commodity, or service, and (5) the storage of property incident to any of the uses heretofore enumerated, but does not include the use of any such property for (a) the housing of individuals for which rent is received, (b) the storage of any agricultural commodity, and (c) any purpose for which the property, if privately owned or used, would by reason of its use be exempt from tax under laws applicable within the tax authority of its situs.

Section 4. Federal Board for Payments to Local Governments

This section establishes a bipartisan Federal Board for Payments to Local Governments, composed of 5 members, appointed by the President, subject to Senate confirmation, who would serve at the pleasure of the President. They would receive annual salaries equivalent to the salary of the Commissioner of the United States Court of Claims ($14,800), and would not be permitted to engage in any other business. The chairman of the Board would be designated by the President; a vacancy in the Board would not impair the right of remaining members to exercise all of the Board's powers; and three members would constitute a quorum. The Board would be authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel as may be necessary for the performance of its functions, subject to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1949; to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the performance of its duties; and to procure the services of consultants at rates not exceeding $50 per day. It would cease to exist on December 31, 1963.

Section 5. Duties of the Board

Subsection (a) requires the Board to prescribe required uniform rules, regulations, and forms for the filing by tax authorities of applications for payments authorized by the act, the examination of such applications and the conduct of hearings thereof, and the determination of action to be taken upon such applications.

Subsection (b) provides that when any application is filed by one or more tax authorities, the Board shall examine such application to determine whether it states a probable basis for the making of any such payment, and if such probable basis is found to exist, to conduct a full and fair hearing upon such application. Upon the basis of evidence received at such hearing or obtained by field investigations authorized by subsection (c), the Board is required to prepare its report setting forth its findings of fact and conclusions as to the merits of such application; and then enter its order thereon, prescribing the amount, if any, awarded to each applicant, and the portion thereof to be paid by each controlling agency administering real property chargeable in whole or in part for such award.

Subsection (c) requires the Board, from time to time, either on its own motion or upon application by one or more taxing authorities, to conduct such studies and investigations, including field investigations, as it deems advisable, with regard to (1) fiscal and other problems of tax authorities arising out of Federal immunity from liability for payment of real and personal property taxes imposed by such authorities; (2) the extent to which such authorities derive benefits directly or indirectly from Federal payments under other provisions of law providing for payments of taxes, in lieu of taxes, grants-in-aid, sharing of revenues derived from properties of the United States, and the furnishing of services or facilities by the United States; and (3) the extent to which tax authorities derive benefits, directly or indirectly, through payments made to such authorities by persons residing or employed upon Federal property and for and in connection with any property, trade, business, occupation, or transaction situated or occurring upon Federal property.

Subsection (d) requires the Board, every 6 months, to submit to the President, for transmittal to the Congress, its report concerning its operations during such period, containing full and complete information concerning applications received and payments ordered by the Board during such period, together with such other information as may be helpful to the Congress in evaluating the operation of the act, and all other provisions of law authorizing payments of taxes, or in lieu of taxes, to States and to tax authorities.

Subsection (e) requires the Board, not later than 2 years after the enactment of the act, to submit to the President, for transmittal to the Congress, a report detailing its recommendations on the necessity for a continuing policy for the compensation of tax authorities for losses sustained incident to the presence of tax-exempt Federal property within their territorial jurisdiction, accompanied by appropriate proposed legislation to carry the program into effect. This report is required to be accompanied by appropriate proposed legislation to carry into effect any pertinent recommendations and shall include specific recommendations with respect to the future treatment of properties for which payments are temporarily authorized under Public Law 388, 84th Congress.

Section 6. Advisory committee

Subsection (a) provides for the establishlishment by the President of an Advisory Committee on Payments to Local Governments, composed of 12 members appointed by the President, of whom 6 would be officers or employees of Federal agencies, and 3 each from State governments and local tax authorities; 1 member would be designated by the President to serve as chairman.

Subsection (b) provides that this Committee would have the duty of (1) studying the administration of the act and all other Federal legislation authorizing Federal payment of taxes or in lieu of taxes to local tax authorities, and problems arising in connection therewith; (2) consult with the Board, upon its request, in an advisory capacity in the solution of such problems; and (3) transmit from time to time to the Board, and the President for transmittal to the Congress, a report summarizing the results of its studies, together with its recommendations for administrative or legislative changes which it may consider necessary or desirable for the efficient, economical, and equitable administration of such provisions of law.

Subsection (c) provides that committee members who are Federal officers or employees would receive no additional compensation for services rendered under the act; all others would receive compensation not in excess of $50 for each day of service, as the President may prescribe; and all members would be entitled to reimbursement for necessary travel and other expenses incurred in the performance of their duties under the act.

Section 7. Proceedings of the Board

Subsection (a) authorizes the Board, or any authorized member thereof or examiner designated thereby, to conduct any hearing or investigation authorized by the act; to administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses and receive evidence anywhere in the United States; and to require by subpena the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence relevant to the matter under inquiry. Attendance of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence may be required from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing; and witnesses summoned shall be paid the same fees and mileage paid witnesses in United States district courts. The Board is authorized to invoke the aid of any district court in the event of disobedience to a subpena, in requiring attendance and testimony of witnesses and production of documentary evidence; and such district court may, in the event of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpena issued to any person, issue an order requiring such person to appear and produce documentary evidence, if so ordered, and to give evidence relating to the matter in question. Failure to obey such a court order may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

Subsection (b) requires hearings of the Board to be public, and provides that each applicant in any proceeding shall have the right to present its case with the assistance of counsel, to offer oral or documentary evidence, submit rebuttal evidence, and conduct such cross-examination as may be required for a full and true disclosure of the facts. An accurate stenographic record is required to be taken of the testimony of each witness, and a transcript of such testimony must be filed in the office of the Board.

Subsection (c) provides that upon entry of the Board's order upon any application for payment under this act, the Board shall give notice thereof to each tax authority which was a party to such application; each such order will become final 60 days after its entry, unless the Board during such period has granted a rehearing upon request of any applicant who joined therein; not more than one rehearing may be granted upon any application; and an order entered by the Board after a rehearing shall become final upon its entry. The Board is required to transmit a certified copy of each final order to each tax authority joining in the application upon which such order was entered, and to each Federal agency charged thereby with the payment of any part of any award made thereby.

Subsection (d) provides that each final order of the Board shall be final and conclusive upon all tax authorities and all Federal agencies, and shall not be questioned by any court or any accounting officer of the Government.

Subsection (e) authorizes the Board to secure from any Federal agency any information necessary to carry out its functions under this act; and each Federal agency is authorized to furnish such information to the Board upon request.

Section 8. Payments authorized

Subsection (a) provides that in accordance with the policies declared in section 2 of this act, and upon application made by one or more tax authorities with respect to one or more parcels of Federal property situated within the territorial jurisdiction of such authorities, the Board shall order payments to be made to each such authority in such an amount, if any, as the Board determines to be payable under section 9.

Subsection (b) requires that each application for payments shall specify the Federal property with respect to which claim is made for payment, the basis upon which such claim is made, and the period of time for which such claim is made.

Subsection (c) provides that each application for any payments made by any tax authority under this act shall be for a period not in excess of 12 months, beginning not earlier than January 1, 1957, and ending not later than December 31, 1961. It provides further that no more than one application may be filed with the Board for any period with respect to the same Federal property; and no application for any period may be filed after 6 months following the end of such period.

Subsection (d) prohibits payment under this act with respect to any parcel of Federal property for any period for which a tax authority is eligible to receive Federal payments with respect to the same property under any other provision of law authorizing payments of taxes or in lieu of taxes on real property, or under any revenue-sharing arrangement. Finally, nothing contained in the act shall bar the making of any payments under any other provision of law or revenue-sharing arrangement. (This is to insure that no tax authority will receive any payment under this act on property for which it is already eligible for Federal payments under any existing programs, and that this act will in no way affect such existing programs.)

Subsection (e) requires that upon certification by the Board to any Federal controlling agency of any final order awarding any payment to any tax authority under this act, such Federal agency shall pay such award from funds appropriated to such agency in the amount specified in the award.

Subsection (f) provides that the failure of any Federal agency to make timely payments authorized with respect to any Federal property would not subject such agency or any purchaser of property from such agency to the payment of any tax, penalty or penalty interest, or other charges. Likewise, it would not subject the Federal property to any lien, attachment, foreclosure, or other proceeding not specifically authorized by the act.

Section 9. Determination of amount of payments

Subsection (a) establishes three categories under which payments may be made under the act and provides that a tax authority may claim under one or more of these categories, and may collect the aggregate amount to which it can show entitlement. The first of these relates to special assessments, levied after the enactment date of the act, if such assessment was also levied upon real property owned by taxable persons; payments in this category would be the amount payable if such property were owned by private, taxable persons. The second category relates to real property leased or sold to private persons under a conditional sales contract; payments in this category would be the amount of tax which would be payable by a private, taxable person, diminished by the amount of any real-property tax payable by any lessee or purchaser with respect to such property for such period. The third category relates to real property acquired by the Federal Government after June 30, 1950, and which is devoted to or held for predominantly commercial or industrial use.

Subsection (b) provides that with respect to property in the third category, the amount payable, if any, would be a sum equal to "the nominal Federal liability," defined as the amount of real property tax which would have been payable if the property had been owned by a taxable person; increased by "the specific Federal liability," defined as the aggregate amount of the expenditures necessarily incurred by a tax authority during the tax period in furnishing directly to or on behalf of such property any facilities or services of kinds not customarily furnished by such tax authority to or on behalf of other properties of like class; and reduced by "the credit against Federal liability," defined as the agregate value of governmental services of kinds normally furnished by tax authorities which, during such period, were furnished within the territorial jurisdiction of such tax authority by Federal agencies controlling such property; and further diminished by any additional credit against the Federal liability resulting from any exemption, immunity or reduction in the tax rate or amount, if such are available, with respect to real property under State or local law, to private persons as an inducement to engage in industrial or commercial activities within the territorial jurisdiction of the particular tax authority.

Subsection (c) provides that no payment determined by the Board to be payable to any tax authority with respect to any Federal property shall exceed the amount which would be payable if such property had been developed and used by a taxable person for a typical private industrial or commercial use, either within the jurisdiction of that tax authority or in nearby comparable communities.

All payments authorized by this section will be made subject to the limitations and qualifications contained in section 8.

Section 10. Appropriations

This section authorizes appropriations to each Federal controlling agency, such sums as may be required for the discharge of its duties and obligations under this act.

Mr. MUNDT. I think it is a good idea, and I should like to have the majority report printed at that point.

I think this tends to illustrate the confusion, when we have one governmental report stating that there are 21 pieces of legislation affecting Federal-local relations and another report which puts the number at 55. It is another indication that in the last 15 minutes or 15 hours or 15 days—whatever time it proves to be is all right with this Senator, but almost one of the last items before adjournment—we should not be acting on something which has this much confusion involved.

If Senators will read the amendment in the nature of a substitute which is on their desks, I think they will agree the way to end this confusion and these interminable studies is to provide for an interdepartmental study which can come up with one set of recommendations and really make progress, if there is a desire to free communities from problems which are older than July 1, 1950, as well as communities which have newer problems; and if there is a desire—and in this one I wish to emphasize the proviso, if there is a desire—to treat problems in rural areas with the same generosity that this bill proposes to treat problems in city areas, if they meet certain circumstances.

Before I get down to specifics, there is another generalization I should like to comment on. I would not call it a bill to provide payments in lieu of taxes. I would call it a bill to subsidize a new socialistic era in America. That is why I was shocked to find that the United States Chamber of Commerce was toying with the idea of supporting this proposal, breathing first a little hot and then a little cold, but winding up pretty much in the camp of those who say, "Let us take a whirl at it. Let us give it a trial. Let us see how it will work out in practice."

By way of illustration, here we have community A, and here we have community B. They are 50 miles apart, in the same State. Community A has an industry that moved there on the 1st of June 1950. Community B has an industry that moved in on the first of July 1950—30 days apart. Community B is a distressed area. So is community A. Problems have developed. Persuasive barristers come to Washington and appeal to the board by saying, "We have got to have help. We have got to have payments in lieu of taxes. Uncle Sam has moved in (of course, we asked him to come in). Now we have a Government operation where there used to be private employment and private enterprise. So we want payments in lieu of taxes. Otherwise we will go under."

Remember, the citizens of community A are going to be taxed for the support of community B, just as the farmers in South Dakota and in North Dakota are going to have to channel money into community B, which has these problems, and which had an industry move in on July 1.

What happens to community A? This is the way to start socialization. The way to stop socialism is not to pick up the check of every community that has a Federal installation. It is to turn Government-owned-and-operated factories back to private ownership. What is going to happen to community A, a community also having problems, but having private industry, 50 miles away from the socialized enterprise being run by Uncle Sam?

Community A is going to find it is having greater unemployment. It begins to falter and lag behind in its taxes. So we can envisage the chamber of commerce in community A getting people to come to Washington to talk to representatives of this Government of ours and saying, "Look, we want Uncle Sam to take over our shoe factory, or our watch factory, or our machine tools fabricating company. We want Uncle Sam to lease the plant, because otherwise it is going to close up, or its activities are going to decrease, or unemployment is going to increase. Uncle Sam, please take over."

Back in the minds of those persons will be the realization that if Uncle Sam does take over, it means that Uncle Sam, as treasurer, will start pouring money into the community in the way of payments in lieu of taxes. Thus, we subsidize and encourage the growth of socialism.

So what happens to community C? If the chamber of commerce or anybody else in America can devise a better scheme to subsidize socialism, to advance its spread, to make its expansion essential, I defy him to produce a better one. Eventually, Gresham's law of money is going to operate. The worst situation is going to destroy the best situation, and there will be a constant pulling downward in the direction of having more and more communities come to Washington and asking that Government operations move in, in an attempt to maintain their employment and maintain their school systems, and so they can get in on the ride—which means they will receive payments from Uncle Sam in lieu of taxes. Mr. President, that frightens me. It frightens me when great bodies which I respect—as I do the United States Chamber of Commerce—say, "We have socialism in our midst, and the Government does not pay taxes. So let us have the Government pay taxes, and thus encourage more communities to adopt socialism."

Mr. President, I am opposed to socialism; my record in opposition to it is very clear. But the way to stop it is to discourage its spread, not to put a premium on it, and make it essential to the preservation of a community. The way to stop it is to take the Government out of all these unnecessary activities and return them to private ownership, where private owners will pay the taxes which are expected of them as ordinary individual taxpayers in the communities.

ANALYSIS BY CONGRESSIONAL QUARTERLY OF CONGRESSIONAL SUPPORT OF PRESIDENT EISENHOWER

During the delivery of Mr. MUNDT's remarks,

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield to me, so that I may discuss another matter for a number of minutes, if it is understood that in doing so, he will not lose his right to the floor?

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, I am happy to yield, if it is understood that I may yield for the purpose requested by the Senator from Kansas, and that I may be recognized at the conclusion of his remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. I thank the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. President, I request that my remarks appear in the RECORD at the end of the remarks of the distinguished Senator from South Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 16, 1956, I commented on the Raymond Moley column in the July 16 issue of Newsweek, and included Mr. Moley's article in my remarks. Mr. Moley in his column had taken to task the purported factual recording of votes by Congressional Quarterly, and specifically its presentation of so-called support-for-President-Eisenhower votes. Mr. Moley charged that the Congressional Quarterly presented its statistical data in such a way as to create a bias in favor of the Democrats.

When I read the Moley column, I felt that it deserved the consideration of my colleagues who read the RECORD, and of the many other readers of the RECORD who subscribe to it to follow political trends; and, as chairman of the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, I was anxious that those of my colleagues who are candidates this year should be apprised of Mr. Moley's views.

The following day, I received a letter from Thomas N. Schroth, executive editor of Congressional Quarterly. Mr. Schroth concluded his letter with a request. He said:

> In the interests of fair play and the national policy of hearing all sides, particularly in an election year, we hope that you will give equal prominence on the floor of the Senate, to this letter and the attached analysis of Mr. Moley's figures which you put into the RECORD yesterday.

Of course, I will comply with his request. I now ask unanimous consent that Mr. Schroth's letter of July 17, and his analysis of Mr. Moley's figures may be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, I shall do more than that, I am going to give him the "equal prominence" he asks, by analyzing his letter and its claims as thoroughly as I know how.

First, Mr. Schroth compares the functions performed by Congressional Quarterly with those of the Associated Press. The Associated Press requires no defense from me. It is a news-gathering agency, and has never attempted to place any evaluation on the news which it furnishes its member papers. If the Congressional Quarterly had confined itself to merely factually reporting the activities of Congress, there would be no basis for any criticism by me or by other Senators whose voting records have been unfairly editorialized upon by the Quarterly.

In proof of its purported nonpartisan nature, the letter cites the number of newspapers who use the service. This is somewhat far-fetched for that purpose. Of course many newspapers use Congressional Quarterly. I subscribe to it; many Senators and Members of the House of Representatives do also. I am sure neither Mr. Moley nor I has questioned its value as a ready sourse of information on the activities of Congress. What we are questioning, however, is, not what it does, or how many people buy it, but how it presents its facts; the degree of editorial embellishment it employs; and, to put it bluntly, the obvious fact that it slants the explanation of its statistics, and even some of the statistics themselves.

Mr. Schroth next cited alleged Republican examples of use of their material to prove that the Republicans believed the Congressional Quarterly to be fair. He referred to the Senate Republican Policy Committee Memo No. 28, of July 21, 1955.

What Mr. Schroth is pointing to is a line on the second page of the memo which said:

> Survey shows Democrats lagging on President's program.

But Mr. Schroth conveniently did not cite the next two pages of the memo, which sharply criticized the statistical techniques employed by the Congressional Quarterly. I want to read pages 3 and 4 of this Senate Republican policy committee memo. It begins:

> WHO PROVIDES THE WINNING MARGINS?
> Congressional Quarterly makes some point that Democrats supplied the winning margin in 29 of the President's 33 victories in the Senate and all 18 of his 18 victories in the House. (CQ's test is whether Republican support alone was adequate to insure the President's victory in each case.)
> HOW VALID IS A COMPUTATION LIKE THIS?
> 1. With more Democrats than Republicans in Congress, some Democratic votes are needed to pass almost all bills (except in rare cases when unpaired absences may give Republicans a temporary majority—hardly possible on any major party issue). Why should these necessary Democratic votes be called a "winning" margin—implying Democratic support of the President and Republican opposition?
> 2. In the Senate many matters require two-thirds votes (treaties, vetoes). Both Democratic and Republican votes are needed to make up this two-thirds. Why should the Democratic votes be considered the "winning" margin? If enough Republicans had not voted with the President, the Democrats alone could not have carried the issue. Why not credit those Republicans with the "winning" margin?
> 3. Winning margin statistics are loaded when there are 2, 3, or more votes on amendments to a single measure (as was the case on the Formosa Resolution, the $20 tax cut, trade agreements extension, and the mutual-security measure). Multiple votes like these give a false impression of the number of winning margins. The picture is further confused when some votes are for an amendment and against the bill or vice versa.
> 4. The absurdity of claims to winning margins is shown by the fact that 90 percent of the Democrats might vote against the President's proposal, but if 10 percent help 100 percent of the Republicans to pass the bill, this 10 percent would be considered a "winning margin"—that President Eisenhower owes all to the Democrats. For example, suppose 78 Members of the Senate are present and voting (40 Democrats and 38 Republicans) as often happens. Republicans alone, even if 100 percent voted in favor of the President's measure (indicating solid party support), could not enact it. The Democratic votes alone could do it if they voted solidly for the bill which would never be the case if Republicans were solidly lined up for it, too, as on a party issue. If 36 (or 90 percent) of the Democrats opposed the President and 4 joined with the 38 (100 percent) Republicans, the measure would pass 42–36, and it would be said that the Democrats furnished the winning margin, even though 90 percent of them opposed the President. Would it not be just as correct to say that in the same vote 4 Republicans who might have opposed the President, but did not do so, supplied the winning margin? Isn't the real interpretation of situations like this that it was not the picayune Democratic margin that supplied the victory, but the 100 percent solid Republican support?
> 5. These so-called winning margins merely reflect the fact that few measures in Congress are ever passed without the crossing of party lines. Does it give a true picture of party performance to use this routine practice to give "winning margin" credits to either Republicans or Democrats? President Truman evidently did not think so when he lambasted the Republican 80th Congress which put the "winning margin" on many of his measures (and supplied the committee leadership and support of his measures as well).
> If tests of party support of the President are to be run, let's not run them ragged, but base them on fairer, more reliable yardsticks of party performance.

I want to turn now to a series of analyses of various issues of the Congressional Quarterly, to make clear the basis of the criticism leveled at it.

In its August 26, 1955, issue, it states, on page 1007, that during the first session of the 84th Congress, President Eisenhower had 44 victories in the Senate, and that Democrats "supplied the margin of victory 39 times." On the next page, the Eisenhower defeats are listed. But it omits attributing the defeats in any of these cases to votes supplied by the Democrats. Obviously, an unbiased presentation of those so-called defeat votes would treat victories and defeats in the same manner. Furthermore, it must be remembered that during the 84th Congress the Democrats had a numerical majority in both Houses; and one could attribute all legislation to the Democrats, inasmuch as they controlled the committees, and decided the form in which bills were reported, and which measures were to receive consideration by the Congress.

A more critical examination of the Senate yea-and-nay votes in connection with the Eisenhower victories shows that a number of those were on treaties which were ratified with no opposition. On the other hand, as Mr. Moley pointed out, there were many votes which were not listed by the Congressional Quarterly, but which do reflect victories or defeats for the President.

For example, to cite just one instance, there was the amendment submitted by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT]—who has graciously yielded to me—to House bill 6042, the Defense Department Appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1956. The purpose of the Mundt amendment was to eliminate section 638 of the bill. This section placed restrictions on the Defense Department in disposing or transferring to private contractors certain functions which could be performed more satisfactorily by private enterprise. The Mundt amendment was defeated, 48 to 33. Of the 33 votes cast for the amendment, 32 were cast by Republicans. Of the 48 votes cast against the amendment, 39 were cast by Democrats.

Significantly, Congressional Quarterly omits this amendment vote as an Eisenhower defeat although they make clear that it was a Republican loss on page 77 of the Congressional Quarterly Almanac covering 1955. Nor can the Quarterly plead an oversight, or that this was not an issue on which President Eisenhower had not publicly expressed himself. This is what the President wrote when he approved H. R. 6042:

Section 638 deals with the authority of the Department of Defense to rid itself of many of the manifold activities that it has been performing with its civilian personnel, and that can be adequately and economically performed by private industry without danger to the national security. That section states that funds appropriated in the bill cannot be used to enable the Secretary of Defense to exercise this authority if, in the case of any activity of the Department proposed to be terminated, the Appropriations Committee of the Senate or the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives disapproves such proposed termination.

The Constitution of the United States divides the functions of the Government into three departments—the legislative, the executive, and the judicial, and establishes the principle that they shall be kept separate. Neither may exercise functions belonging to the others. Section 638 violates this constitutional principle.

I believe it to be my duty to oppose such a violation. The Congress has the power and the right to grant or to deny an appropriation. But once the appropriation is made the appropriation must, under the Constitution, be administered by the executive branch of the Government alone, and the Congress has no right to confer upon its committees the power to veto Executive action or to prevent Executive action from becoming effective.

I have cited this example to prove that Congressional Quarterly does not adhere to its supposed policy of determining whether a vote is for or against President Eisenhower by his public statement on such issues.

Let us see how the Quarterly puts together its statistical facts.

On page 58 of volume 10 of the Congressional Quarterly Almanac for 1954, in explaining the method of analyzing Eisenhower-issue roll salls, it says:

On this analysis, all Eisenhower-issue roll calls have equal statistical weight. Differential weighing might be desirable but cannot be done objectively.

A comparatively minor roll call, such as the one on ratification of the opium treaty, affects individual and over-all scores as much as a major roll call, such as the one by which the Senate rejected the Bricker amendment or the ones by which flexible farm price supports were approved.

If Senator A voted with the President on all roll calls except the one on the opium treaty, on which he voted against, he would have the same support and opposition scores as Senator B, who voted against the President on the Bricker amendments but with Mr. Eisenhower on all other roll calls, including the one on the opium treaty.

Similarly, controversial roll calls have no more statistical weight than noncontroversial votes, some of which were unanimous.

I am sure that none of my colleagues would agree that a vote on the ratification of an unopposed treaty should have the same weight as a vote for or against flexible farm price supports or for or against the Bricker amendment. I doubt that any expert on legislative procedures would agree that equal statistical weight should be applied to controversial and noncontroversial issues. The opium treaty referred to by Congressional Quarterly, a treaty against sin, was unopposed. It was ratified 71 to 0.

I believe I have made my point. And if every newspaper using the Congressional Quarterly material will realize the statistical method by which support for President Eisenhower is measured, I will feel that this discussion has served a very worthwhile purpose.

The 11th Annual Congressional Quarterly Almanac, covering the year 1955, repeats the listing of Eisenhower victories and defeats which appeared in the August 26, 1955, issue of the Congressional Quarterly, pages 1007–1009, to which I have already referred. Hence there was no effort to correct the errors.

Page 76 of this same Congressional Quarterly Almanac lists, quote, "Senate Democratic Losses." They include the following: Two votes on the disposal of rubber facilities recorded on March 23, 1955; a vote on the Capehart amendment to the Defense Production Act to permit continued employment in Government during peacetime of persons of outstanding experience and ability on a without-compensation basis which was adopted 46–45 on July 19, 1955; and a vote on the confirmation of John A. Hall to be Director of Locomotive Inspection, agreed to 43–41 on July 29, 1955. Now, obviously, if these were Democratic losses, as the Quarterly labels them, conversely, they must be Eisenhower victories. But you will search in vain to find them in the section dealing with Eisenhower defeats and victories.

The New York Times on July 16, 1956, in commenting on a speech by Adlai Stevenson at Rockport, Maine, said:

In his speech prepared for tonight, Mr. Stevenson said that the closing of the 84th Congress would end "another of democracy's experiments with divided government," the President of one party and the congressional majority of another.

He added that the Democrats were entitled to "legitimate pride" in a record of responsibility during the Eisenhower administration.

"No one can fairly charge," he said, "that the Democrats have placed party above country, or tried to make political capital out of irresponsible opposition."

I am still reading from the New York Times:

Mr. Stevenson cited the Congressional Quarterly as recording that Democrats had supplied the margin of victory in 39 of 44 Eisenhower victories in Congress in 1955.

The figures Mr. Stevenson cites are the very figures criticized in Mr. Moley's column. They are subject to the deficiencies and loopholes I have cited. I am sure that if Mr. Stevenson knew how they were put together, he would not have used them as factual material.

Let me go on with further analyses of how Congressional Quarterly presents data.

In its Quarterly Almanac, Volume 9, 1953, it reviews the 1st session of the 83d Congress, the first Republican Congress with a Republican President since President Hoover's Administration. On page 77 appears the heading, in large type: "President Prevailed on 74 of 83 1st-Session Rollcall—Tests of His Program—Needed Democratic Aid 58 Times." Thereafter in standard type, it says:

Fifty-eight times Democrats saved the President from munching charred crumbs * * * their votes providing the margin of victory when Republican defections or absences imperiled the happy glow.

I must object here to the use of such adjectives as "munching charred crumbs" or "imperiled the happy glow" in what purports to be a factual statistical journal.

Six pages later in the smallest readable type Congressional Quarterly provides itself with an "out" to cover against possible attacks of statistical error or editorial slant. Here is how they softened the blow:

In those 83 tests the President's position won out 74 times * * * but the President and his congressional supporters in the Republican Party needed help from the Democrats in scoring 58 of their 74 victories.

Note the difference in emphasis. The headline shouts: "Needed Democratic Aid 58 Times." The fine print explains:

The President and his congressional supporters in the Republican Party needed help from the Democrats in scoring 58 of their 74 victories.

There is no explanation of the fact that during most of this period the late beloved Republican leader, Senator Taft, was ill and necessarily absent. After his death, the Republicans no longer had numerical control of the Senate, and it is the Democratic votes cast with the Republican votes that the Quarterly is talking about.

I would not feel as strongly about Congressional Quarterly's self-imposed standards and criteria, if these were applied equally in all cases. It will be illuminating, therefore, to go back to the 80th Congress, when there was a Republican Congress with a Democratic President. What was the Quarterly's standard of values then?

Volume 7 of the Quarterly Almanac for 1948 explains their criteria thusly:

HOW CQ KEEPS PARTY UNITY AND BIPARTISAN SCORES

In making its party unity and bipartisan support studies, Congressional Quarterly classifies every record vote as follows:

1. A party-line vote is one on which a majority of Republicans vote one way and a majority of Democrats vote another.

2. A bipartisan vote is one in which a majority of Republicans and a majority of Democrats vote the same way.

Since both parties seldom attempt to bind their membership to a given position on an issue, the record of a party is set by the way the party members vote. The party unity percentage, therefore, is a measure of the degree of a member's support of his party's policies as expressed by the actual votes of a majority of those of his political persuasion. This sometimes will produce a party record that may be at variance with "party line" as set by the administration or the top party leaders.

Bipartisan votes are on issues on which there is no substantial difference between the two major parties, though there may be a good deal of controversy within each party. Foreign policy is the prime example of the type of issue on which majorities of the two major parties are in agreement, though minorities in each party dissent. Another type of bipartisan vote is that on which there is little or no controversy of any type.

In other words, Mr. President, when a Republican Congress was in the position of supporting President Truman, as it did on so many issues, including the establishment of the Marshall plan during the 80th Congress, Republican votes were considered as bipartisan votes and not as "rescues." The term "rescues" was first used when Democrats first voted for President Eisenhower's program.

Significantly, the Congressional Quarterly for 1948 did not even carry the list of issues constituting the Truman program on which he was "rescued" and I emphasize that word, by the Republican 80th Congress. The technique of adding a heading which implies that the Democrats "rescued" President Eisenhower is one which was not adopted prior to the 83d Congress.

The editors of the Congressional Quarterly are well aware of the fact that many issues are bipartisan and do not represent victories for either side. There is no excuse for including such bipartisan support scores in tabulations showing support for President Eisenhower.

The Congressional Quarterly has been regarded by newspapers and others as a nonpartisan authoritative source of information on Congressional affairs. But the very fact that the Congressional Quarterly separates the bipartisan issues and lists them as they do, but then turns around and proceeds to include them in measuring the support for President Eisenhower, is proof that the presentation of Congressional data by this periodical is neither objective nor accurate.

The other Congressional Quarterly feature which Mr. Moley criticized dealt with the support given President Eisenhower by individual Senators and Representatives. The Congressional Quarterly measures support for the President in terms of votes on their selected issues which they consider to be included in the President's program.

If any President submits 100 proposals to the Congress and 50 of them are of a noncontroversial nature, no Senator who is recorded could possibly have a score of less than 50 percent. The inclusion in the Quarterly's tabulation of issues passed with little or no opposition, automatically narrows the spread between those Senators who have had to battle for the President's program, and those who support him on only noncontroversial issues.

All of us who serve in the Congress know that we give great consideration to the opinions of our party leaders. That is the reason we elect party leaders. If a Democratic Senator supports President Eisenhower on every issue where his party leaders also support the President, but opposes the President on every issue where the Democratic Party leadership is in opposition to the President, the question may properly be raised as to whether such a Senator is supporting the President or the leadership of his own party.

The Congressional Quarterly's method of showing support in percentages makes it impossible for any editor to determine what the true facts are. The Congressional Quarterly explains on page 82 of volume 9, the Congressional Quarterly Almanac for 1953, that in measuring effective support:

> Failures to vote are counted as "times at bat," so that such failure reduces effective-support score as much as an "anti-Eisenhower" vote.

The inclusion of the bipartisan issues in measuring support scores makes such a criteria manifestly unfair. Every Senator knows that when noncontroversial issues are scheduled, on which no opposition is expected, we attempt to meet the many other responsibilities each of us has in Washington. And on such occasion we may be absent from the floor when a vote is taken. Obviously, we are not deserting the President when we are not recorded on an issue which is agreed to by a majority of 70 to 0.

I believe I can best illustrate the validity of my criticism if we examine the reporting of my own voting record.

In its weekly report of August 26, 1955, Congressional Quarterly published my support of President Eisenhower. I was given a score of 50 percent on the 30 foreign policy issues which they included in the President's program. As a matter of the record, there were 33 such votes, not 30. I voted 19 times, and out of this number 17 times were for the administration's program, or an average of 89.5 percent. Seven of the 33 votes were taken on June 2, 1955. Several months before that date I had accepted an engagement which required me to be in my hometown of Ness City, Kans. Yet because I was unavoidably absent, and missed these seven votes, they were counted as being against President Eisenhower's program. Let me stress that not voting is included statistically as negative voting.

Nor am I alone in my views on the weaknesses and editorial slant of the Congressional Quarterly data. The senior Senator from Maine [Mrs. SMITH] has written me on this point. I have her permission to use her letter and will read it now, and ask unanimous consent that it be printed in full at this point in my statement.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES,
July 20, 1956.

The Honorable ANDREW F. SCHOEPPEL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR SCHOEPPEL: I have read with interest your comments on the analyses made by the Congressional Quarterly.

I think that you may be interested in an experience which I had that bears out your observations about its Eisenhower support box score.

Last year one of our Republican colleagues used the Congressional Quarterly to chide me because the May 20, 1955, issue of the Congressional Quarterly reported that my support score of President Eisenhower was only 52 percent.

I think you will be interested in my reply to him. I wrote:

"You would place me in the same category with Representative OLIVER BOLTON, a stanch Eisenhower supporter, whose absences this year, like mine, were counted in the Congressional Quarterly analysis as votes against Eisenhower. Just as an illustration, Representative BOLTON is listed as giving the President this year only 11 percent overall support and only 14 percent support on foreign policy as compared to the 91 percent support on foreign policy last year.

"I was absent on nine of the votes this year in the Congressional Quarterly analysis—and all nine were marked as being against the President in spite of the manner in which I was announced. For example, were the absences not used against my Eisenhower score but rather my announced positions included, the record would show that this year my record on overall Eisenhower support is not 52 percent but 89 percent and on foreign policy is not 73 percent but 100 percent."

I believe that Congressional Quarterly does provide a valuable service. But I think that its publishers have a very serious obligation to avoid editorial slanting in their analyses if for only two reasons: (1) the very name of the publication causes many people to believe that it is an official publication of Congress, and (2) it represents itself to be completely objective.

Sincerely yours,

MARGARET CHASE SMITH,
United States Senator.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Maine has raised the interesting point, that many people may believe that Congressional Quarterly is an official or semi-official publication of the Congress. I intend to study this matter fully to determine whether legislation should not be introduced to protect the use of the name "Congressional" just as the Congress has protected the use of such words as "United States" and "Red Cross" from commercial exploitation.

Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent at this point to include as part of my remarks a letter I received from the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN] whose name was mentioned in Mr. Schroth's letter to me. Senator MARTIN'S letter completely refutes the statement that the junior Senator from Iowa used Congressional Quarterly material in his 1954 campaign.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., July 25, 1956.

The Honorable ANDREW F. SCHOEPPEL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR SCHOEPPEL: Thank you for your request for information in connection with Mr. Schroth's letter to you of July 17 concerning Mr. Raymond Moley's article in Newsweek which you inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. You asked me for my comments on Mr. Schroth's statement that "In Iowa, Senator THOMAS E. MARTIN, Republican, also cited Congressional Quarterly throughout the campaign to advance his own cause and attack Senator Guy Gillette, Democrat, Iowa, whom he defeated."

I used the Congressional Quarterly table for the year 1953 showing the poor support of President Eisenhower by my opponent. In this table they had listed in one column votes in support and in another column votes in opposition to President Eisenhower's position. This table was labeled "relative support," and the percentage of support votes to opposition votes could easily be computed and a Senator's position among all the Senators could be determined. Votes on bipartisan rollcalls contributed to a Member's active support score, and many important policy issues were omitted. Even though I disagreed with their selection of issues, I used this table for the 1953 session of Congress. My computation based on their "relative support" table for 1953 showed my opponent as standing in 89th place among the 96 Senators in support or lack of support of President Eisenhower.

This table showing relative support was discontinued by the Congressional Quarterly in 1954 and new sets of figures were compiled showing in separate tables the active support and active opposition. I made known to Congressional Quarterly my objection to their selection of issues and the possible use of one table and not the other.

Page 906 of the Congressional Quarterly for the week ending July 16, 1954, carried a story on the Iowa Senate race. It contained a Congressional Quarterly voting score card measuring support for President Eisenhower on the few votes in Congress taken prior to July 1, I was shown as having supported President Eisenhower a lower percent of the time than my opponent. My low score was due in part to several trips I made to Iowa preceding the primary election held on the first Monday in June 1954. I had given President Eisenhower good support—much better than their report indicated, but absences from noncontroversial and uncontested rollcalls selected by Congressional Quarterly counted against my record just as much as a vote in opposition on a highly contested issue. My opponent's Congressional Quarterly support score was based in part on his votes on noncontroversial issues. I should add also that I was present on every rollcall where my vote was needed to protect the President's program.

Later, I made a complete analysis of my voting record and that of my opponent for the entire 1954 session of the 83d Congress. I had felt that the Congressional Quarterly's method of measuring support for President Eisenhower was unfair and accordingly I prepared my own analysis based on votes on the issues which were a part of the President's program, and which were opposed by the Democrat leadership in the House and the Senate. This is the table I used in my general election campaign against Senator Gillette in 1954 and it showed conclusively that my support of President Eisenhower was far above that of my opponent.

I did not cite or use Congressional Quarterly figures on votes recorded in Congress in the 1954 session. As a matter of fact, I cancelled my subscription to the Congressional Quarterly when it expired.

With best wishes, I am

Sincerely yours,

THOS. E. MARTIN.

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, the Congressional Quarterly is the only private publication in its field. It, therefore, has a virtual monopoly on this type of service. Like many monopolies, it must expect the more searching scrutiny of its operations. This requires that those of us, who are anxious to see a completely nonpartisan reporting of congressional activities, examine material in the Quarterly on a careful and critical basis. The editors of the Congressional Quarterly should be the last to resent attempts to do this.

It is the peculiarities and aberrations in the statistical procedures of the Quarterly which provide a solid basis for the criticism which I have made. I certainly believe that the listing of rollcalls and other data in the Quarterly serves a very helpful purpose. However, I am concerned when the Congressional Quarterly attempts to editorialize on their significance. Newspapers, in many instances, have uncritically adopted the Quarterly's headlines. The newspapers in many instances, do not attempt to interpret these headlines on the basis of the detailed Congressional Quarterly procedures which I have described.

Mr. Schroth, in his letter to me, said:

You may remember that it was William Allen White, in 1908, who first presented, with great difficulty, the complete record of a Senator in a campaign. We think that you will agree with us that the reporting of the complete record of the 84th Congress would be a shambles if newspapers had to unscramble the contradictory claims of partisan sources.

Certainly the newspapers, who maintain Washington correspondents, should expect their reporters to "unscramble the contradictory claims of partisan sources." They would not need Washington reporters at all if they were merely to accept the Congressional Quarterly's own evaluation of its nonpartisan character and therefore print the findings of the Congressional Quarterly as their own. Mr. Moley's complaint was that apparently at least one paper had done just that. My own personal experience and the experience of the Senior Senator from Maine also supports Mr. Moley's contention.

I have shown that these editorial remarks are slanted to favor the Democrats against the Republicans. Furthermore, the statistical techniques which are used to produce the data for the headlines are subject to serious criticism. I hope my observations will assist the Quarterly in producing more objective reports in the future.

Mr. President, I am hoping that Mr. Schroth, executive editor of the Congressional Quarterly, will now give this statement, along with his letter, equal prominence in the Congressional Quarterly, as I have given to his letter of July 17.

EXHIBIT A

CONGRESSIONAL QUARTERLY,
Washington, D. C., July 17, 1956.

Hon. ANDREW F. SCHOEPPEL,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR SCHOEPPEL: We feel that your challenge of the nonpartisanship of Congressional Quarterly on the Senate floor yesterday was made without full knowledge of the extensive use which has been made of Congressional Quarterly's facts and figures by the Republican national committee, the Senate policy committee, and individual Republican Congressmen when the statistics have favored their cause.

The complete accuracy and lack of bias of Congressional Quarterly is demonstrated by the diversified politics of the great number of newspapers, Members of Congress, and organizations who have used its material. The nonpartisanship of Congressional Quarterly has never been affected by the personal beliefs of any of its editors any more than the nonpartisanship of the Associated Press has ever been challenged because its president over many years has been Robert McLean, of the Philadelphia Bulletin, or by the fact that the late Col. Robert R. McCormick sat on its board.

When Leonard Hall, chairman of the Republican National Committee, was questioned by reporters on the CBS Face the Nation program about Senator KNOWLAND's disagreement with the President on a particular issue, he answered by citing the minority leader's 94-percent Eisenhower support score, and, to prove it was accurate, said: "These are not my figures. These are Congressional Quarterly's figures."

Perhaps you would be interested in just a few examples of Republican boasts, quoting Congressional Quarterly material:

From a news release, Republican National Committee, October 20, 1954: "Eisenhower got 53 percent better cooperation from Congress than Truman."

From the Senate Republican policy committee memo No. 28, July 21, 1955: "Survey shows Democrats lagging on President's program."

From the Senate Republican policy committee memo No. 32, August 18, 1955: "President's batting average drops under Democrats."

In the 1954 campaign Senator THOMAS H. KUCHEL, Republican, of California, who defeated Representative Sam Yorty, Democrat, of California, repeatedly cited Congressional Quarterly's Eisenhower support and other figures in his campaign and attacked his opponent's record from Congressional Quarterly reports. In Iowa Senator THOMAS E. MARTIN, Republican, also cited Congressional Quarterly throughout the campaign to advance his own cause and attack Senator Guy Gillette, Democrat, of Iowa, whom he defeated.

Congressional Quarterly's files have countless other examples of Republican publicity quoting Congressional Quartely's material. We also have similar quotations from Democratic sources as well as complaints from the Democrats when they think Congressional Quarterly's statistics are not to their advantage.

We feel that the manner in which Congressional Quarterly's material is used by papers as Republican as the Oakland Tribune, the Kansas City Star, and Chicago Tribune, as conservative Democrat as the Richmond News Leader and the Montgomery Advertiser, as liberal Democrat as the Louisville Courier-Journal and the New York Post, proves beyond a doubt, the nonpartisanship of Congressional Quarterly.

You may remember that it was William Allen White, in 1908, who first presented, with great difficulty, the complete record of a Senator in a campaign. We think that you will agree with us that the reporting of the complete record of the 84th Congress would be a shambles, if newspapers had to unscramble the contradictory claims of partisan sources. Congressional Quarterly's impartial reports are accompanied by documentation so thorough that each editor has been able to check the hundreds of items and draw his own editorial conclusions.

In the interest of fair play and the national policy of hearing all sides, particularly in an election year, we hope that you will give equal prominence on the floor of the Senate, to this letter and the attached analysis of Mr. Moley's figures, which you put into the RECORD yesterday. We might add that Newsweek, which published Mr. Moley's challenge of Congressional Quarterly's methods, has used Congressional Quarterly's material extensively for years, without any question of its accuracy and impartiality.

Sincerely,

THOMAS N. SCHROTH,
Executive Editor.

CONGRESSIONAL QUARTERLY
NEWS FEATURES,
Washington, D. C., July 13, 1956.

Mr. JOHN DENSON,
Editorial Director, Newsweek,
New York, N. Y.

DEAR MR. DENSON: Raymond Moley (Newsweek, July 16) is entitled to take whatever issue he pleases with Congressional Quarterly's methods of analyzing the votes of Senators and Representatives. But his statement that these methods "created a fatal bias" in Congressional Quarterly's findings is the first such challenge to Congressional Quarterly's nonpartisan policies, long recognized by responsible journalists.

For 11 years, at great cost in money and effort, Congressional Quarterly sought methods for recording the activities of Congress that would be free of the very bias Mr. Moley attempts to impute to Congressional Quarterly. However one chooses to judge the success of this effort, it remains a fact that Congressional Quarterly's solid reputation among editors and politicians of both parties rests on its factual, nonpartisan, and unbiased approach. It is a serious matter to have that good repute sullied in such a casual fashion.

While we have no wish to quarrel with Mr. Moley's method of determining the extent to which Republicans and Democrats have supported President Eisenhower, it is impossible to refute his charge of bias in Congressional Quarterly's method without at the same time pointing out the curious paradox in his own analysis.

Mr. Moley contends, in effect, that support of the Republican leadership in House and Senate is the same as support for President Eisenhower. He confuses party regularity with effective support for the President's own program, as transmitted in messages to Congress or in other statements.

The validity of this concept may be judged in the light of the Senate's vote on June 28 on a move to cut out of the foreign aid bill all assistance to Yugoslavia. President Eisenhower had asked for aid to Yugoslavia, and his Secretary of State had made a strong plea to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to allow the aid.

Yet it was Senator STYLES BRIDGES (Republican, New Hampshire), chairman of the Senate Republican policy committee, who offered and urged the amendment to cut off aid to Yugoslavia. Said Senator BRIDGES: "I want to say that no one has higher regard for President Eisenhower than I, * * * but that does not preclude me from performing my constitutional duty to debate this issue."

When the roll was called on Senator BRIDGES' amendment, 15 Democrats and 23 Republicans (including Senator BRIDGES and Minority Leader WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND, Republican, California, voted for it, while 29 Democrats (including Minority Leader LYNDON JOHNSON, Democrat, Texas, Majority Whip EARLE C. CLEMENTS, Democrat, Kentucky, and 21 Republicans voted against it. Thus a majority of Republicans present and voting supported their own leadership against the President, while a majority of Democrats supported their leaders and the President against his own leaders.

Nevertheless, according to the method accepted by Mr. Moley of determining who supports the President, the majority of Republicans who voted to cut off aid to Yugoslavia would be credited with backing the President, while the majority of Democrats who voted against the cut would be charged with opposing the President.

By the same token, use of this method precludes consideration of the House vote July 5 on the Powell antisegregation rider to the school aid bill. The President was clearly on record in opposition to the rider. Yet a 3-to-1 majority of Republicans followed Minority Leader JOSEPH W. MARTIN, JR., Republican, Massachusetts, Assistant Leader CHARLES A. HALLECK, Republican, Indiana, and Whip LESLIE C. ARENDS, Republican, Illinois, in voting for the Powell amendment, while a majority of Democrats voted against it. However, since Majority Leader JOHN W. MCCORMACK, Democrat, Massachusetts, also voted for the rider, one could not say the two leaderships were opposed. Thus, using the method Mr. Moley advocates, the vote on the highly controversial Powell amendment, which was opposed by the President, could not be included in tabulating support for the President.

So much for the leadership standard of measuring Presidential support. Now for CQ's method, which, incidentally, was established before President Eisenhower was elected. CQ computes two separate items: support for the President and party unity.

In computing support for the President, we tabulate only those roll calls which are clear-cut tests of his program and leadership. In short, it must be proved from his own public statements whether we would have voted "yea" or "nay" if he had been Congressman Eisenhower.

Mr. Moley complains that this method, as used in CQ's Weekly Report of August 26, 1955, and included in the 1955 CQ Almanac, resulted in a "curious selection of issues," since it included many roll calls on which there was little or no opposition by Members of either party, and excluded other record votes on which the two parties were opposed.

We see nothing "curious" about a method which credits the President with a "victory" and the Members of Congress with an "assist" when they vote unanimously or nearly so for a measure which he has requested. Nor do we see anything "curious" about a method of measurement which ignores rollcalls on which the President's views are not a matter of public record, even though these votes may reveal sharp splits between the parties. Such votes, whether or not the President has revealed his views on the subjects, are recorded as separate statistics, known as party unity votes.

The ground rules for CQ's analysis of Presidential support, set forth in full in the issue to which Mr. Moley refers, acknowledge the difficulty of devising an unassailable method. But they concluded that "CQ decided that any attempt to eliminate or weight rollcalls would be subjective and "arbitrary." If this method leads to a "curious selection of issues," it is at least free of the subjective and arbitrary assumption that the President's Congressional leaders inevitably and invariably do his bidding.

May we suggest that Mr. Moley keep his eye out for CQ's forthcoming analyses of Presidential support and party unity during the second session of the 84th Congress, in order that he may clarify the apparent confusion regarding these two standards of voting and the rules by which the standards are applied.

Very truly yours,
THOMAS N. SCHROTH,
Executive Editor.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, its reading clerk, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the following bills of the Senate:

S. 2567. An act to authorize the appointment and retirement of Darrell C. Williams as a lieutenant commander, United States Navy;

S. 3787. An act relating to the management of the Red Lake Indian Forest and sawmill; and

S. 3881. An act authorizing the demolition and removal of certain greenhouses and other structures on square 576 west in Washington, District of Columbia, and the construction of other facilities in place thereof, at the Botanic Garden Nursery, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2226) to authorize the Attorney General to dispose of the remaining assets seized under the Trading With the Enemy Act prior to December 18, 1941, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate, severally with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 1012. An act for the relief of Juan Jose Moya Ramirez;

S. 2093. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Army, acting through the Corps of Engineers, to undertake certain public works and grant compensation for certain property damages as a result of the construction of the Oahe, Gavins Point, and Fort Randall Dams and Reservoir projects, Missouri River; and

S. 3941. An act relating to certain mining claims which were eligible for validation under the act of August 12, 1953, but which were not validated solely because of the failure of the owners to take certain action to protect their claims within the prescribed period.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11742) to extend and amend laws relating to the provision and improvement of housing and the conservation and development of urban communities, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SPENCE, Mr. BROWN of Georgia, Mr. PATMAN, Mr. RAINS, Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. GAMBLE, and Mr. TALLE were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had severally agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the following bills of the House:

H. R. 5274. An act extending to the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico the power to enter into certain interstate compacts relating to the enforcement of the criminal laws and policies of the States;

H. R. 6709. An act for the relief of Harry M. Caudill; and

H. R. 11969. An act to require certain safety devices on household refrigerators shipped in interstate commerce.

The message also announced that the House had severally agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bill and joint resolutions of the House:

H. R. 7536. An act to amend the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, so as to require that certain vessels carrying passengers for hire be fitted with radiotelephone installations;

H. J. Res. 615. Joint resolution for the relief of certain aliens; and

H. J. Res. 649. Joint resolution for the relief of certain aliens.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the following concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 275), in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 7619), to adjust the rates of compensation of the heads of the executive departments and of certain other officials of the Federal Government, and for other purposes, the Clerk of the House is authorized and directed to make the following corrections:

In section 104 (a), strike out subsection (b) following section 104 (a) (4) and insert the said subsection (b) immediately preceding section 105.

In section 118, strike out "116" and insert "117."

In section 9 (d) of the amendment made by section 401, strike out "first or second" and insert in lieu thereof "second or third."

The message returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the engrossed bill (H. R. 3489) to amend the Federal Employees' Group Life Insurance Act of 1954 to bring employees of Gallaudet College within its coverage.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 1154. An act for the relief of Hal A. Marchant;

S. 1184. An act for the relief of Frank R. Davis;

S. 2419. An act for the relief of Dr. Anton M. Lodmell;

S. 2823. An act for the relief of William C. Brady and Joyce Brady;

S. 2834. An act for the relief of Yue Yin Wong (also known as William Yueyin Wong);

S. 3064. An act for the relief of Thomas J. Smith;

S. 3266. An act to authorize officers of the Coast and Geodetic Survey to act as notaries in places outside the United States;

S. 3314. An act to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to pay the expenses of an Advisory Committee on Soil and Water Conservation;

S. 3347. An act for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Webb;

S. 3361. An act for the relief of Egbert Carlsson;

S. 3363. An act for the relief of Miroslav Slovak;

S. 3386. An act to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to establish a commission for the celebration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of Theodore Roosevelt," approved July 28, 1955;

H. R. 2845. An act to amend the Veterans Regulations to provide additional compensation for veterans having the service-incurred disability of loss or loss of use of both buttocks;

H. R. 5808. An act for the relief of Judith Kao;

H. R. 7643. An act to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1939 and the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 with respect to foreign tax credit for United Kingdom income tax paid with respect to royalties and other like amounts;

H. R. 7728. An act to provide that the Department of the Navy shall not be required to reimburse the Reconstruction Finance Corp. for the transfer of certain real property at Columbus, Ohio;

H. R. 8157. An act to provide for the burial in the Memorial Amphitheater of the National Cemetery at Arlington, Va., of the remains of an unknown American who lost his life while serving overseas in the Armed Forces of the United States during the Korean conflict;

H. R. 9348. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act incorporating the Archaeological Institute of America' to increase the value of real and personal property that such institute may hold";

H. R. 9631. An act to ratify and confirm the sale of certain real property of the United States;

H. R. 9875. An act to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide that the tax on admissions shall apply only if the amount paid for the admission exceeds 90 cents;

H. R. 10984. An act for the relief of Nikolai L. Khokhlov;

H. R. 11197. An act to provide for the retention in public ownership of certain lands around the Jim Woodruff Reservoir, Fla. and Ga., being administered by the Florida Game and Fresh Water Fish Commission;

H. R. 11489. An act to exempt from taxation certain property of the American Institute of Architects in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 11702. An act to provide for the sale of lands in reservoir areas under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Army for cottage site development and use;

H. R. 11821. An act for the relief of Esterlee Hutzler Weinhoeppel;

H. R. 12254. An act to provide additional time for the Tariff Commission to review the customs tariff schedules;

H. J. Res. 472. Joint resolution for the relief of certain aliens;

H. J. Res. 620. Joint resolution for the relief of certain aliens;

H. J. Res. 636. Joint resolution for the relief of certain aliens;

H. J. Res. 639. Joint resolution for the relief of certain aliens;

H. J. Res. 651. Joint resolution to waive certain subsections of section 212 (a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act in behalf of certain aliens;

H. J. Res. 662. Joint resolution for the relief of certain relatives of United States citizens;

H. J. Res. 681. Joint resolution to waive the provision of section 212 (a) (6) of the Immigration and Nationality Act in behalf of certain aliens; and

H. J. Res. 695. Joint resolution to suspend the application of certain Federal laws with respect to personnel employed by the House Committee on Ways and Means in connection with the investigations ordered by House Resolution 331 and House Resolution 606, 84th Congress.

INVESTMENT OF THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT IN HYDROELECTRIC PUBLIC POWER

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, some time ago I wrote to the Legislative Reference Service, to the Director of that Service, Mr. Ernest S. Griffith, posing a number of question relating to the extent of the United States Government's investment in hydroelectric public power.

I ask unanimous consent to have the letter which I directed to Mr. Griffith, under date of January 10, 1956, printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 10, 1956.

ERNEST S. GRIFFITH,
Director, Legislative Reference Service, Library of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. GRIFFITH: I have had a number of requests for information concerning the extent of the United States Government's investment in hydroelectric public power. Furthermore, questions have been asked of me along the following lines:

1. How much does the Federal Government have invested in hydroelectric power facilities, including generation plans and transmission lines?

2. How are these electric facilities paid for or amortized?

3. Do Federal hydroelectric systems make any payment to the Treasury? Do they make money for the Government?

4. Do hydroelectric facilities make any financial contribution to irrigation and reclamation?

5. Do Federal hydroelectric plants pay taxes, or make any payments in lieu of taxes? If so, how much?

6. Is the TVA paying its own way?

7. Does the TVA make a profit and, if so, where does the profit go? Is it reinvested, or does it come back to the Treasury?

8. Does the TVA pay taxes—local, State, or Federal?

9. What is the total Government investment in TVA? Will that investment ever be paid off out of the earnings?

The above questions are typical of the many inquiries I receive. I would greatly appreciate having someone in the Legislative Reference Service do a complete study for me on this question of public power on the part of the Federal Government along the lines that these questions indicate. The questions should not be interpreted as being exclusive. There is undoubtedly other information that will be pertinent and valuable.

I will appreciate your cooperation and helpfulness in this project.

Sincerely yours,

HUBERT H. HUMPHREY.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, I should like to note that I received from the Library of Congress, under date of March 21, 1956, a very excellent paper answering the questions I asked of the Library of Congress, and I hope that my colleagues will take the time somewhere along life's way to read the report from the Library of Congress. A number of questions have been asked by the public in general concerning the investment of the United States Government in hydroelectric public power facilities as to whether these investments were productive of resources and revenues to the Government; also questions relating to the Tennessee Valley Authority; as to whether it is paying its own way, as to whether it makes a profit, as to whether it pays revenue to local governments.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS,
Washington, D. C., March 21, 1956.

Hon. HUBERT H. HUMPHREY,
United States Senate
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HUMPHREY: This is in reply to your letter of January 10, 1956, in which you requested information concerning the investment of the United States Government in hydroelectric public power. You listed several questions as typical of the inquiries received on the subject.

There is enclosed a compilation of factual information together with some analytical comments on the general subject of Federal hydroelectric power development. Power development by the Tennessee Valley Authority has been included in greater detail.

It is pertinent to mention that the Second Hoover Commission Task Force on Water Resources and Power performed some good work in bringing the facts together on hydroelectric power development by the various Federal agencies. Regardless of one's viewpoint concerning the soundness of the conclusions or recommendations in the report, it is believed that the Report of the Task Group on Power Generation and Distribution contained in pages 275–598, volume 2 of the Task Force Report on Water Resources and Power, presents, in addition to its analysis, a complete factual study of the subject. This report contains not only summary information but contains detailed data relating to 7 Federal power systems or project groups including the Tennessee Valley Authority. In view of this recent study and the wealth of information available therein, the enclosed study which is based both on Hoover Commission compilations and the latest Agency reports, has been confined primarily to the questions listed in your letter.

We hope that you will find that it fulfills your needs.

Sincerely yours,

WALLACE R. VAWTER,
Senior Specialist in Engineering and Public Works.

FEDERAL INVESTMENT IN HYDROELECTRIC POWER

FEDERAL HYDROELECTRIC POWER IN RELATION TO TOTAL CAPACITY

Power is generated and sold in the United States by about 1,000 privately owned utilities, by State or local public bodies, and by the Federal Government.

The Federal Government is by far the largest single producer and supplier of electric power in the United States. During 1953 it produced over 13 percent of all electric utility energy produced in hydroelectric and fuel burning plants in the country.

The following tabulation prepared by the Hoover Commission Task Force on Resources and Power [1] shows for the calendar year 1953 the capacity of generating plants and the production of electric energy in the United States by type of generation and by class of ownership. It will be noted that at the end of 1953, 21.5 percent of the Nation's total installed capacity and 24.1 percent of the total utility plant capacity was in hydroelectric plants. The balance was in fuel burning plants, almost entirely steam-electric plants, owned principally by privately owned utilities. Of the total utility hydroelectric capacity 42.2 percent was in Federal plants.

1. How much does the Federal Government have invested in hydroelectric power facilities, including generation plants and transmission lines?

Estimates of the Hoover Commission's task force on Water Resources and Power show a total investment in Federal power generation and transmission facilities as of June 30, 1953, of $2,311,407,000. This includes in addition to hydroelectric generation, an investment of $227,127,000 in steam plants constructed by the Tennessee Valley Authority. Considering also that the investment in transmission facilities of $268,862,000 by the TVA was made for both hydroelectric and fuel-burning power transmission and allocating about a third of this cost to fuel-burning power, we obtain a round figure of $2 billion as the total Federal investment in hydroelectric power facilities on that date.

For your convenient reference there follows the entire tabulation of present and authorized capacity of and investment in Federal Power Generation and Transmission Facilities from the Hoover task force study:

[1] Investment costs are estimated in part by the task group on the basis of reported allocations in the respective groups. The total ultimate investment is based on available agency figures as to about 83 percent of the projects; as to the remaining 17 percent, the basis is task group estimates. The scheduled investment in transmission facilities is included in above totals, as a part of system totals. All projects included are considered by the Federal agencies as authorized for construction. The original TVA Act is considered by TVA as providing basic authorization for scheduled development in the TVA area. In general, funds have not been appropriated for projects not under construction.

2. How are these electric facilities paid for or amortized?

The Federal Government advances all funds when it installs power facilities, and agency practices are generally that rates be set to assure repayment within 50 years of capital costs, operation and maintenance, and a portion of administrative costs, usually with interest on capital. The rate of interest is variously 2½ or 3 percent.

3a. Do Federal hydroelectric systems make any payment to the Treasury?

The extent to which the Federal hydroelectric systems make payments to the Treasury depends upon the policy of the agency based upon the wording of the authorization legislation. One approach to obtaining data on the subject is to analyze by major systems their experience in the light of this legislation:

TVA—section 14 of the TVA Act, as amended in 1935, declared as a matter of policy that, in order as soon as practicable to make the power projects self-supporting and self-liquidating, surplus power shall be sold at rates which, in the opinion of the Board, will produce gross revenues in excess of the cost of production of the power. Title II of the Government Corporations Appropriation Act, 1948, requires that beginning with the year ended June 30, 1948, the Authority must retire from net power proceeds for the preceding year not less than $2.5 million of its outstanding bonded indebtedness. In addition, the act requires payments from these proceeds into the United States Treasury in amounts sufficient when added to the payments made on bonded indebtedness to total not less than $87,059,810 during the 10-year period ending June 30, 1958, and an equivalent amount during each succeeding 10-year period until an aggregate of $348,239,240 had been paid. Thus the requirements for repayment are not on an annual basis. The act also requires that new congressional appropriations for power facilities be repaid over a period not to exceed 40 years after the year in which the facilities go into operation.

TVA reports that its actual repayment of power investment costs is in excess of both the minimum requirements under the 1948 law and requirements determined on the basis of repaying one-fortieth of the plant investment at the end of the previous year. These and related figures are shown in the following table:

TVA repayments of investment in power program under provisions of the Government Corporations Appropriation Act, 1948 [1]

Bonneville Power Administration: The Bonneville Project Act provides that rate schedules shall be drawn "having regard to the recovery * * * of the cost of producing and transmitting electric energy" at the Bonneville Dam project, "including the amortization of the capital investment over a reasonable period of years." The Bonneville Power Administration in an agreement with the Corps of Engineers, under the terms of this act, is required to deposit in the United States Treasury the portion of its receipts earmarked to reimburse power costs of the project. The payments are designed to pay power operation and maintenance, including necessary replacements and return all costs allocated to power over a 50-year period beginning July 1, 1944, together with interest at 2.5 percent per annum on unamortized balances. A somewhat similar agreement with the Bureau of Reclamation covers payments on the Columbia Basin project. In addition to payment on project generation costs, the power revenues must cover BPA transmission and marketing costs, including operation and maintenance expenses, and depreciation and interest expenses on the transmission network. The rate of 2.5 percent is used in computing both interest during construction and the annual interest expense.

Bonneville Power Administration reports that $145,857,094 of capital investment in power production and transmission facilities has been repaid to June 30, 1953, an amount substantially in excess of scheduled requirements.

Hoover Dam: The investment in the Hoover Dam, powerplant and appurtenant structures, exclusive of $25 million allocated to flood control, is to be repaid with interest in 50 years. The interest rate was established at 4 percent by the Boulder Canyon Project Act and changed to 3 percent by the Adjustment Act.

The Bureau of Reclamation reports that the total repayment of Hoover Dam power investment to May 31, 1953, amounted to $14,451,782 out of a total power investment of $140,895,465.

Central Valley project: This project operates generally under the provisions of the Reclamation Project Act of 1939. Section 9 (c) of the act requires that power rates be such as to produce revenues "at least sufficient to cover an appropriate share of the operation and maintenance cost, interest on an appropriate share of the construction investment of not less than 3 percent per annum, and such other fixed charges as the Secretary deems proper." A repayment period for the power investment is not specified by law.

The Bureau of Reclamation reports that by June 30, 1953, a total of $44,249,000 had been repaid on the investment in commercial power facilities in the Central Valley projects, leaving about $36,564,000 as of that date to be repaid. The repayments of principal and interest are made to the Reclamation Fund of the United States Treasury.

Southwestern Power Administration System projects and Southeastern Power Administration System projects: Section 5 of the Flood Control Act of 1944 provides that surplus power at projects under the control of the Secretary of the Army shall be disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior. The act specifies that "rate schedules shall be drawn having regard to the recovery * * * of the cost of producing and transmitting such electric energy including the amortization of the capital investment allocated to power over a reasonable period of years. * * * All moneys received * * * shall be deposited into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts."

There are no reports readily available covering repayments as such. Studies made by the Hoover Commission task force indicated that in both systems up to June 30, 1953, the operating revenues under the present rate structures were insufficient to pay for cost of operation and pay out requirements. There is now under consideration the need for increasing rates in order to repay proper allocations of cost with interest within a period of 50 years.

Missouri Basin projects: The Reclamation Project Act of 1939 provides in section 9 that rates for power be such as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior "will produce power revenue at least sufficient to cover an appropriate share of annual operations and maintenance cost, interest on an appropriate share of the construction investment at not less than 3 percent per annum and such other fixed charges as the Secretary deems droper." The Fort Peck Act of 1938 covering the marketing of power from that project provides in section 6 that, "Rate schedules shall be drawn having regard to the recovery of the cost of producing and transmitting such electric energy, including the amortization of the capital investment over a reasonable period of years."

The Missouri River Basin project is in the initial stages of operation and only a small percentage of the power investment has been repaid. The Bureau of Reclamation's Average Rate and Repayment Studies dated January 1954 show that the repayment of power investment to June 30, 1953, ranges from 3 to 100 percent for various projects, and amounts to 13 percent of the total power investment at that date, when computed upon the basis of present criteria for payout.

3b. Do Federal hydroelectric systems make money for the Government?

The question as to whether the Federal Government's electric utility business is a money-making proposition is a moot one. The answer may depend not only on facts or legislative intent such as were presented earlier in this study, but on what costs should properly be covered by Federal power rates to assure that power pays its way.

For example, the Hoover Commission Task Force on Water Resources and Power took the position that if the Government's power operations are regarded as a business in which it is properly engaged, the Federal power rates should be sufficient to cover:

1. Actual operation and maintenance expenses.
2. Federal, State, and local taxes foregone, i. e., in the amount that would have been paid by privately owned companies producing equivalent power.
3. Amortization based on life of property with a maximum of 50 years.
4. Estimated replacement costs during amortization period.
5. Estimated fair return of 5½ percent (approximate rate allowed by regulatory commissions).

On the basis of the above 5 points, the task force estimates that revenues of the principal power projects have been greatly insufficient (about $114 million deficient in revenues in the year ending June 30, 1953 and $597 million from the beginning of operations).

The principal reason the Federal Government is able to charge lower rates, the task force indicated, is that it does not make any payment toward the cost of carrying on the Federal Government, and it has utilized the constitutional immunity of Federal facilities from State and local taxation. Except for the Boulder Canyon project and the Tennessee Valley Authority, none of the Federal power projects pays any amount in lieu of State and local taxes. The task force indicated its belief that there is no economic or social reason, or reason in equity, why the customers of Federal power should not pay in their rates their fair share of costs of the Federal, State, and local governments as do the users of non-Federal power. It said "The conducts by the Government of tax exempt power operations, and the sale of the power at prices that do not count the taxes thus foregone as a cost, result in unfair competition on the part of the Government with private enterprise, because the Government compels private enterprise to pay the taxes and thus makes it impossible for it to compete with Government prices."

Another reason the Federal Government can charge such low rates, the task force attributes to the fact that the Federal Government has designated 2½ to 3 percent on the investment as a satisfactory return. Generally, in the electric utility business, State regulatory agencies and the Federal Power Commission conceive of about 5½ percent as a minimum fair return on investment.

The task force summarizes its position by saying:

"To the extent that users of federally generated power fail to pay their proportionate share of the cost of the various governmental units—the equivalent of local, State, and Federal taxes—that deficiency must be made up by other Federal, State, and local taxpayers. To the extent that net revenues from Federal power operations do not at least cover the interest paid out by the Federal Government to holders of its debt, that deficiency must be made up by Federal taxpayers. To the extent that revenues from Federal power operations do not also cover operating, maintanance, amortization or replacement costs, that deficiency must be made up by the Federal taxpayer. Any such deficiencies amount to subsidies to the users of federally generated power."

The deficiencies in Federal power revenues below minimum financial requirements after providing for all operating expenses and computed Federal, State, and local taxes, and interest at 3 percent, but without allowing the additional return to make up the 5½ percent that private utilities generally receive, are given in the following table for the major Federal projects from their beginning to June 30, 1953.[1]

	Deficiency, year ended June 30, 1953	Deficiency, cumulative to June 30, 1953

[1] Surplus.

The dissent and separate statement of Commissioner Chet Holifield in the Report of the full Hoover Commission[2] presented the opposite point of view. He presented an analysis which attempted to demonstrate that the task force's deficiencies in revenues were the result of "misleading computations of hypothetical taxes."

Commissioner Holifield presented the figures compiled by the task force, itself, giving estimated financial requirements including taxes and interests at 3 percent ($1,577,688,711 in the 20 years from 1933–53). The total computed tax item for those years was also presented ($527,326,666). Deducting the computed taxes from the total, there remains $1,050,362,045 as the task force computation of the financial requirements of the programs exclusive of taxes. Now, also according to the report, total collected revenues totaled $1,246,098,366, which would leave a margin of revenues over requirements of $195,736,321.

Commissioner Holifield pointed out that in 1953 the privately owned electric utilities paid about 21.5 percent of the revenues in taxes of all kinds, which is considerably less than the 33.4 percent in taxes the task force computed the Federal power program should pay. Moreover, the 21.5 percent of revenues which the private power companies charged to taxes in 1953 is unquestionably higher than they will actually be found to have paid out of that year's revenue because they regularly overaccrue taxes and then return the balance to their surplus profit accounts after final settlements are reached with the tax authorities.

Commissioner Holifield credited Senator AIKEN with pointing out another misleading comparison—the fact that the Federal program is composed of wholesale power supply systems whereas private utilities are mainly retailers. If taxes, including Federal income taxes, are to be assessed against the Federal program, the basis of comparison should be private companies engaged only in the production and transmission of wholesale power supply to other distributing utilities. The average 1953 tax accruals covering all the tax obligations of privately owned companies supplying wholesale power was 13.5 percent of operating revenues.

Commissioner Holifield added: "As I have already pointed out, the consolidated revenues of the Federal power program for the 20 years 1933 to 1953 were ample to cover all operating and financial requirements, as estimated by the task force, plus 16 percent of such revenues in lieu of taxes. Clearly, there is no showing that the program was subsidized."

He said that TVA surplus revenues represented 15.5 percent of revenues; that of Bonneville system 17.8 percent; and that of the combined Boulder, Parker, and Davis projects only 9.4 percent—those which have been most under attack as subsidized are actually the ones which have produced the surplus revenues to make the whole Federal program completely self-supporting, even by the task force standards.

As for the rate of interest, Commissioner Holifield could see no reason for charging the program interest at 3 percent when the Government borrowed the money with which they were constructed at 2½ percent.

He also believed that there is no reason for requiring the Federal program to both replace all its facilities during their estimated life and, at the same time, to amortize all the investment in them. "Private companies don't do that. With these modifications in the fixed charges used by the task force, the margin earned by the Federal power program over the 20-year period would constitute a higher percentage of revenue than the 16 percent shown in the table."

Commissioner Holifield also called attention to the fact that the calculations of the task force assume that the same large quantities of power from Federal projects would have been sold even if the higher rates of private power companies were applied. It did not draw any conclusions about the direct inverse relationship between rates of power and amounts consumed.

4. Do hydroelectric facilities make any financial contribution to irrigation and reclamation?

Construction projects authorized under reclamation law provide benefits in the nature of land irrigation, hydroelectric power, flood control, navigation improvement, fish and wildlife conservation, and water supply. Financial feasibility of a project requires that revenues be sufficient to liquidate costs allocable to the reimbursable functions of irrigation, power, and water supply. Frequently, anticipated revenues from irrigation are not adequate to repay costs allocable to irrigation. In such instances the irrigation costs beyond the ability of the water users to repay must be repaid by revenues from the sale of hydroelectric power or of water supply. Up to the present time the water supply features of most projects have been very small in comparison to the power features.

Under reclamation law as it had been written, up to and including the act of 1939, the price of power sold from Federal multiple purpose projects was in theory, at least, to be fixed sufficiently high to include the following five components:

(a) Operation and maintenance of power facilities.

(b) An amount paid into a replacement fund for use when needed.

(c) An annual amortization item for the repayment to the Treasury of the Government's investment.

(d) Interest at 3 percent on the unamortized power investment.

(e) A sum to be used as a subsidy to pay for some of the irrigation investment.

The justification for the theoretical inclusion of (e) is found in precedents going back to early projects in which it was almost impossible to separate the respective costs of power and irrigation facilities. But since World War II with the rapid expansion of multiple purpose development the assignment of (e) as a component of the power price has been largely ignored.

In an opinion of the solicitor of the Interior Department rendered in 1944 it was declared that the interest component (d) could be applied to the repayment of irrigation costs. More recently under the present administration the so-called Colibran formula, or some modification thereof, has been favored over the interest component use. Under this formula, named after a small project at Colibran, Colo., to which it was first applied, the interest component is used as originally intended; i. e., to pay back to the Treasury interest on the unpaid portion of the power investment over a fixed number of years of repayment. After repayment of the power investment, the power revenues are used to pay off the unpaid part of the original irrigation investment which is beyond the ability of the water users to repay.

Mr. Charles D. Curran, Task Force Administrator, for the Hoover Commission Task Force on Water Resources and Power, in a special study of the subject[3] concludes "that neither formula has any economic advantage over the other, that essentially they come back to the same thing." A study of the record indicates that both the use of the interest component and the Colibran formula are devices to obviate the need for the higher power rates that would be required if both the power and irrigation features were amortized throughout the life of the project.

The Comptroller General in his audit report to the Congress on the Bureau of Reclamation for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1954, provided the following repayment figures of tentative reimbursable allocations including irrigation and power:

All Bureau of Reclamation projects constructed, under construction, or authorized (exclusive of Missouri Basin)

Reimbursable feature	Construction cost allocation, amount	Percent	Probable repayment, amount	Percent
Irrigation	$1,912,091,000	61	$1,153,663,000	37
Commercial power	998,344,000	32	1,722,407,000	56
Water supply	172,095,000	5	172,095,000	5
Other	58,418,000	2	40,123,000	2
Total	3,140,928,000	100	3,088,289,000	100

All Bureau of Reclamation projects constructed, under construction, or authorized (exclusive of Missouri Basin)—Continued

MISSOURI BASIN PROJECTS CONSTRUCTED, UNDER CONSTRUCTION OR AUTHORIZED [1]

Reimbursable feature	Construction cost allocation, amount	Percent	Probable repayment, amount	Percent
Irrigation	$2,713,152,000	74	$661,312,000	18
Commercial power	874,252,000	24	2,922,804,000	79
Municipal water supply	17,748,000		31,365,000	1
Fish and Wildlife, recreation	10,329,000
Future additions to power system	58,176,000	2	58,176,000	2
Total	3,673,657,000	100	3,673,657,000	100

[1] Includes Corps of Engineers projects.

From the above tabulations it will be noted that for Bureau of Reclamation projects exclusive of the Missouri Basin, the allocation to commercial power of construction costs is 32 percent of the total reimbursable allocations but commercial power revenues repay 56 percent of the total costs allocated to reimbursable purposes. Allocations to irrigation and repayments by irrigators are 61 and 37 percent, respectively, of total reimbursable costs.

For the Missouri Basin projects, the allocation to commercial power is 24 percent of the total of reimburseable allocations, but commercial power revenues pay 79 percent of the total costs allocated to reimbursable purposes. Allocations to irrigation and repayments by irrigators are 74 percent and 18 percent, respectively, of total reimbursable costs.

5. Do Federal hydroelectric plants pay taxes or make payments in lieu of taxes? If so, how much?

In its power operations the Federal Government has utilized the constitutional immunity of Federal facilities from State and local taxation. Except for amounts provided in TVA and Hoover Dam Acts none of the Federal power projects pays any amount in lieu of State and local taxes. Neither does the Federal Government pay Federal taxes on its investment.

Section 13 of the TVA Act as amended provides for payments in lieu of taxes. The objective of the section was to maintain whole the local taxing bodies by replacing the taxes collected at the time of acquisition of privately owned property acquired by TVA. Payments are measured by a percentage of gross proceeds from TVA power sales and "are apportioned among the States by a formula which gives equal weight to power revenues and to power property. If the amount thus apportioned to any State for any year is less than former State and local property taxes on acquired power property, the difference is made up by a supplementary payment which becomes an additional charge against TVA power operations. Provision is made for payments equal to former county and district property taxes directly to counties affected, and the amounts so paid are deducted from amounts otherwise due the respective States. The percentage rate of payment is graduated downward from 10 percent of gross power proceeds of the preceding year paid in 1941 to 5 percent in 1949 and each year thereafter. It was anticipated that this decrease in percentage would be offset by an increase in power sales so as to maintain the financial position of State and local governments. The gross proceeds from the sale of power on which these percentages are computed exclude power used by the Authority or sold or delivered to any other department or agency of the Government of the United States for any purpose other than the resale thereof. Sales thus excluded amounted to about 52 percent of the total in fiscal year 1955.

"(b) Payments in lieu of taxes: The following table shows the payments in lieu of State and local taxes made by TVA for selected years. No payments in lieu of Federal taxes are made.

"The table shows that the amount of payments in lieu of State and local taxes has steadily increased owing to the increase in power sales.

"In general, the municipal electric systems distributing TVA power pay tax equivalents approaching amounts that would be obtained by applying the prevailing local tax rates to the depreciated cost of their power properties. In several of the States in the area, rural electric cooperatives are exempt by State law from State and local taxes; in others, their properties are assessed by utility or tax commissions.

"In fiscal 1955 the total taxes or payments in lieu of taxes paid by all distributors amounted to $6,192,400."

The Boulder Canyon Project [4] Adjustment Act provided for payment during the amortization period of: (1) $300,000 per year to each of the States of Arizona and Nevada, and (2) $500,000 per year to the Colorado River development fund. The Congress considered the payments to Arizona and Nevada as payments in lieu of taxes. Such payments have been made each year since 1937 out of the power revenues from Hoover Dam.

6. Is the TVA paying its own way?

The Tennessee Valley Authority is an independent Government corporation created by act of Congress, May 18, 1933. The authority was established for the purposes of navigation, flood control, reforestation, agricultural and industrial development, the national defense and for other purposes including the production, distribution, and sale of electric energy.

The multiple-use dams built and operated by TVA serve three major purposes: navigation, flood control, and production of power. Power operations is the only TVA activity which provides income in the business sense of the term. None of TVA's other activities produce income directly to the Government but they yield returns in terms of public security and well-being and better cash return to private enterprise.

TVA power operations appear to fulfill the requirements of the TVA Act that they be self-supporting and self-liquidating. Figures given in answer to question 3 on payments to the Treasury and question 9 on repayment of Government investment in TVA indicate the extent to which TVA is paying its own way, particularly in regard to the power investment.

The discussion in question 3b is particularly germane because the question as to whether TVA is paying its own way depends on the extent that interest and taxes should properly be included. The majority and dissenting views of the Second Hoover Commission bring this subject in focus.

7. Does the TVA make a profit and if so, where does the profit go? Is it reinvested, or does it come back to the Treasury?

Whether or not TVA makes a profit depends upon the costs that should properly be included in this Federal operation. As previously indicated, only the power features of the TVA facilities produce revenues in a business sense.

TVA is empowered by section 26 of the act to utilize the proceeds derived from power sales and other sources in the conduct of its power business, in the operation of dams and reservoirs, and in the production and disposition of fertilizers. The net revenue after paying all costs and holding a continuing fund of $1 million for emergency purposes is paid into the general fund of the Treasury by the end of each calendar year. In the past, power projects have been financed both from congressional appropriations and from revenues, under title II of the Government Corporations Appropriation Act of 1948, however, revenues may not now be expended for construction of new power-producing projects, except for replacement purposes, until such projects have been approved by Congress through the regular appropriations procedure.

From the beginning of TVA in 1933 through the fiscal year 1955, TVA power revenues amounted to $1,017,000,000 with net revenue from operations, or $311 million.

The following table summarizes the financial results of TVA power operations.[5]

[Millions of dollars, 1933 through 1955]

Revenue	1,017
Expenses:
Operation and maintenance	479
Payments in lieu of taxes	37
Depreciation	190
Total expense	706
Net income before interest	[1] 311
Investment assignable to power (22-year average)	353
Annual return on investment (22-year average)—percent	4

[1] Of the $311 million net income before interest shown above, $10 million has been used to pay interest on bonds, $51 million has been used to retire bonds, and $100 million has been paid into the Federal Treasury as an offset to appropriations previously made. The remainder, $150 million, has been reinvested in power facilities.

8. Does TVA pay taxes—local, State, and Federal?

9. What is the total Government investment in TVA? Will that investment ever be paid off out of earnings?

TVA pays no taxes as such, but makes payments to States and local bodies in lieu of taxes. This subject is covered in some detail under paragraph 5 above.

It is believed pertinent to add the following figures and comparative data from the [4] Source: Task Force Report, vol. II, p. 492.

[5] Information received from Tennessee Valley Authority, Washington, D. C.

1955 annual report of the Tennessee Valley Authority:

"In the fiscal year 1955, TVA paid a total of $3,878,466 in lieu of taxes, while the payments of the municipal and cooperative systems amounted to $6,192,400. The total of $10,070,866 was 200 percent greater than the total tax payments from electric systems in 1937, when the area was primarily served by private companies. Elsewhere in the Nation similar payments of State and local taxes by private utilities have increased about 185 percent over the same period.

"The total payments of $10,071,000 also amounted to 6.4 percent of the total revenues for power, excepting only that sold to the Federal Government by TVA. In comparison, the State and local taxes of a dozen private utility systems bordering the TVA area averaged 7.9 percent of operating revenues and ranged from 4.8 percent to 11.3 percent."

As of June 30, 1955, the fixed assets of TVA amounted to about $1,775 million, of which $1,721 million related to water control and power and the remainder $54 million to chemical plant and general plant. Approximately 80 percent of the total water control and power fixed assets relate to power, 9 percent to navigation, and 11 percent to flood control.

Power assets at June 30, 1955, totaled about $1,534 million exclusive of general assets not segregated by programs and exclusive of work in progress relating to multiple-use facilities at projects for which an allocation of costs to programs has not been made. Deducting accumulated net power income and certain revenues collected in advance and contributions of about $303 million leaves about $1,231 million which is considered as derived from United States Treasury funds.

The average net investment in completed powerplant during the fiscal year 1955, plus allowances for power inventories, general plant used in power program, and working capital, was approximately $1,130 million. Net revenue from operations for the fiscal year of $47.9 million represented a return of 4.2 percent on the average power investment. At this rate the power investment would be paid off out of earnings in the next 25 years. Inasmuch as the power investment represents the major portion of the total it is entirely possible that the total investment of TVA will be paid off out of power earnings. However, the law requires only that the congressional appropriations for the power facilities be repaid.

LAKE MICHIGAN WATER DIVERSION

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending business, S. 4183, be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2618, H. R. 3210.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 3210) to authorize the State of Illinois and the Sanitary District of Chicago, under the direction of the Secretary of the Army, to test, on a 3-year basis, the effect of increasing the diversion of water from Lake Michigan into the Illinois Waterway, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, reserving the right to object——

Mr. CLEMENTS. I should like to complete my request first.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill, with the understanding that no amendment will be considered unless it be agreed to by the chairman of the Committee on Public Works; that is, other than committee amendments themselves.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

FEDERAL PAYMENTS TO LOCAL GOVERNMENTS IN LIEU OF TAXES

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object to the unanimous-consent request—I did not want to let this occasion pass without expressing my appreciation for the work of the Committee on Government Operations and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], who acted as chairman of the subcommittee, appointed by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN]. I know of the hard work he and his associates did on the bill which is being laid aside.

It is a subject in which a great many Members of the Senate have had a great interest for a number of years. I first joined in introducing a bill on the subject of payments in lieu of taxes with the late Senator Taft of Ohio and other Senators. Many other such bills have been introduced.

As the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] has pointed out in his remarks, the bill, of course, does not go as far as he or his committee or many others of us had hoped it would. However, it seems to us that it goes as far as it is possible to go at this point with the cooperation of the Bureau of the Budget and the executive agencies, because of the fact that this is a new field and they feel they need to gain some practical experience in it.

We thought that an arrangement could be worked out whereby some relief could be given and at the same time have a commission appointed which which go into the broader aspects of the problem.

I quite agree with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] in his feelings about the whole question of public lands, in light of the situation that in many areas 60 and in some States as much as 80 percent of the land is off the tax rolls. We have the same problem in connection with school districts, and so forth. Those subjects need very urgent consideration by Congress. It appears quite evident that it will not be possible to consider the subject at this session of Congress because of the lateness of the hour.

I hope, however, that the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, who has done so much work—and I am sure the work he has done will be highly beneficial to all of us who desire legislation of this type to be enacted—will get a running start at the beginning of the next session, and that very early in the next session he will hold some hearings on the subject. I say that because I am certain it will be only a short time before Congress and the country and the executive department will realize the necessity of facing and solving the problem.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I thank the minority leader for his comment. I am sure that in the next Congress, God willing, I will continue this work. I have indicated before that this is a very technical subject. It is not a subject that is a part of any particular political philosophy. It is something which needs to be done in terms of Federal and State and local government relationships.

Mr. KNOWLAND. It is not a Republican problem or a Democratic problem. I say to the Senator from South Dakota that it is a matter on which we should not be divided as between urban and rural areas, or metropolitan districts and suburban areas. The problem exists in all the States of the Union, in both rural and metropolitan areas and in both small cities and large cities, as well as in school districts. All have this problem. I feel certain that if we can get more people alerted to the problem and to the studies which have been conducted in connection with it, we will make some progress in solving the problem. It seemed to me that with the studies which had been made it was time to get something underway. However, because of the conditions which confront us at this late hour of the session, it is obvious that action will have to be posponed until next year.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I recognized the fact, when the bill was brought up this afternoon, that the likelihood of its being passed was very remote. I have said, if not publicly, certainly privately to the Senator from South Dakota, that I was very dubious about whether we could get any action on the bill in the House at this session of Congress.

I wish it to be perfectly clear that I am not at all disheartened by the failure to go ahead with the consideration of this proposed legislation. At the same time, I must say that it has been quite a burden over the past 7 years to hold hearings on it. However, I am a persistent fellow, and I can assure friend and foe alike that next year we will be at it again. I look forward to the same kind of help that we have had in the past from the distinguished minority leader and from Members on the other side of the aisle; and perhaps we can have even more help from the Republican side than from the Democratic side.

As the Senator from California has said, this is simply a plain problem of equity and economic justice. It does not have a thing to do with party politics. I shall look forward to getting together with my friend from South Dakota and seeing if we can build a bond of common unity on this particular measure. With his effectiveness directed in the right way, for the right cause, we should be able to pass a bill within 15 minutes after it is brought before the Senate next year.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, if this is going to be a temporary burial of the bill, I should like to participate in wording the obituary at this time. I look forward to joining my friend from Minnesota at the next session and working out a more logical legislative approach, and a more equitable distribution of the benefits if we accept this concept of Federal expenditures. While I think we are making a mistake in not adopting the Mundt-Martin amendment in the nature of a substitute, which we might have done if we had faced it earlier, we can, if this legislation is to be enacted at all, have correspondence with responsible executive officials and get from them something a little bit more definite and illuminating than we now have available.

I was interrupted so unexpectedly by this change in plans, that I left myself in a position where I must continue briefly the argument I was making about this idea of subsidization of socialism. There is an element of danger in it. It does not apply to all features of the bill but it is pertinent to the features of it dealing with federalized industries and commercial enterprises. I was leading up to the point where I expected to develop the argument that we needed to establish some criteria in Congress before this proposed legislation is enacted which would keep it from being a device for subsidizing socialism and which would set up some principles which are so good and so sound that they should be universally applied to the urban and rural areas and suburban areas in all sections of the country, if it is decided they should be adopted at all.

I invite the attention of the Senate to the majority report and our minority views. I urge careful study of this entire subject and of all arguments involved. If we act at all on it next year we should legislate knowingly, carefully and equitably.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield?

Mr. MUNDT. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, 20 years were spent on a study of this matter, and 7 years have been spent by Congress in trying to solve the problem.

Witnesses representing the American Municipal Association and the County Supervisors Association, appeared at hearings held by the 81st, 82d, 83d, and 84th Congresses.

If the Senator from South Dakota has any ideas as to how to improve the measure, I should appreciate his sending them to the Committee on Government Operations.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I yield.

Mr. MALONE. The distinguished Senator from Minnesota has suggested that if anyone had any suggestions to make to improve the bill they might be sent to the Committee on Government Operations. I inquire, with reference to public lands and public property which the United States holds for public purposes, whether we should not try to find a way to put the lands into private ownership.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I would not want to deny the fact that that may be a very valuable and constructive suggestion. I only suggest that the Senator send his idea to the Bureau of the Budget and the President of the United States. I think the Senator has a pretty good point. The bill which was originally introduced covered some such suggestion.

Mr. MALONE. I wonder when it became the custom for the Congress of the United States to pass any legislation sent to it by the White House. I think it started 22 years ago. We are carrying on that custom, and I think it is time we stopped it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I thoroughly agree with the Senator. This bill was introduced before the White House had a thought on the subject.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that there is a very arbitrary cutoff date provided in the bill which is before the Senate. I cannot see any justification for such an arbitrary cutoff date. I think attention should be given to the minority views signed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] and myself, especially point 6, which outlines a practical approach. I believe it is vital to arrive at a fair solution of the problem.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in my remarks a statement which I have prepared with reference to the bill.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MARTIN OF IOWA

Today, in the closing moments of the 84th Congress, we are considering legislation that is vitally important to thousands of our communities. In the past years local governments have been squirming under increasing burdens of taxation. The costs of providing the services rendered by local governments have been increasing. It costs more to send our children to school, to provide for our citizens' safety, and even to dispose of the city's garbage.

Into this picture of increasing costs comes a most disturbing factor. In the face of this tax problem in many areas throughout the country the problem has become more involved because of the activities of the Federal Government.

The crux of the problem we are attacking today was stated in a report filed by the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations. I quote a portion of that report:

"One aspect of the tax relations among governments requiring urgent attention is the immunity of the National Government from State and local taxation and the immunity of State and local governments from Federal taxation. In this area the problem of greatest concern to local governments is the tax status of Federal property. The immunity of federally owned property from State and local ad valorem taxation has reduced the tax base of many communities which rely on property taxes as their chief source of revenue. The impact of this immunity is uneven; it is particularly severe in areas where the value of Federal property is a large part of total property values."

This portion of the Intergovernmental Relations report states the problem briefly and clearly. In many areas the local governments suffer seriously because, although the Federal Government occupies a large part of the taxing base for that community, it benefits from tax immunity. At the same time, of course, the services provided by the local government must be expanded in order to meet the need created by the Federal employees who work on the specified Federal project.

It is unnecessary to cite specific instances proving the seriousness of this problem. It should be noted, however, that in one case at least, the problem became so severe that open conflict between the Federal Government and one local government was threatened. As reported in the County Officer magazine, July–August, 1953, in Cuyahoga Heights, Ohio, the Air Force secured a piece of land in order to build a large manufacturing plant. The removal of this property from the tax rolls of this community of 713 people resulted in a tax loss to this village of $90,000. At the some time it was apparent the services rendered by the community would have to be expanded greatly. For some time the city refused to issue a building permit and at one time the Air Force threatened to build the factory without a permit. Eventually a compromise was worked out, but the threatened incident demonstrates the seriousness of the problem.

Today, I would like to examine one portion of the bill now under debate. I've gone to some length to demonstrate the seriousness of the problem. I've also tried to demonstrate my conviction that the problem is serious and it does need legislative attention. At the same time, however, we must not do, simply for the sake of doing. When you're sick the doctor does not prescribe a pill. He prescribes the right pill. We should be careful today that we are not to overwhelmed by the illness that we operate without diagnosis.

A good bill should meet two tests. Is it necessary? Will it correct the need without harmful effects on any group? Certainly this bill meets the first criterion—it is needed. I have my serious doubts about the second criterion, however, if the bill is accepted as written.

That portion of the bill I want to examine carefully is the provision that establishes the cutoff date as June 30, 1950. In order to qualify for payments in lieu of taxes, the community involved must prove financial hardship occuring after June 30, 1950.

Several witnesses that appeared before the committee traced the historical development of this problem. During most of the history of our country this was not a problem. In our early days the national Government owned the overwhelming majority of our land. Very little of the Federally owned land was located in a community taxable area, however. Our local government developed in a historical setting where property was being added constantly to the tax rolls. As Mr. Claude E. Porter, the past president of the Michigan Municipal League pointed out in the hearings, the starting time for the tremendous expansion of Federal ownership came when our country started to enlarge and expand its national defense program. For that reason September 8, 1939, was set by the study committee as the fair and equitable cutoff date.

Why, then, was June 30, 1950, selected by the majority report as the cutoff date? The report uses this language:

"The June 30, 1950, cutoff date was chosen because this date would cover the increased Federal acquisition of real property of this type, incident to the Korean War. In addition, it will serve to keep the cost of this program within reasonable bounds."

Mr. President, no one in this chamber is more dedicated to sane spending than I. No one in this Chamber was more pleased with the recent news of a balanced budget than I. During the last few days a great share of my time has been occupied by another matter where I am doing my utmost to secure legislation that will eliminate a $500 million loss in revenue to the Post Office Department—$500 million that will have to be taken from our Treasury if we do not pass this legislation. I, too, want to keep the program we are discussing today within reasonable bounds. But I also want to be fair.

For example, take the hypothetical case of community "X." Perhaps the Federal Government came into this community in 1940 when we were expanding tremendously our national defense program. Perhaps the Federal Government found it necessary to build a factory in community "X" to implement our war effort. Perhaps the tax problems of this community have been increased greatly because a substantial portion of the taxrolls of the community now belong to the Federal Government and the cloak of tax immunity has been drawn around the factory. For 16 years this community has lived with this problem.

The hypothetical situation we have created meets all the criteria. Community X can prove financial hardship and distress. The taxpayers of the community have suffered from an unreasonable tax burden. The property held by the Federal Government fits the limited designation of commercial or industrial property as described in the bill. This is the identical problem the bill is created to meet, except—and this is a big except for community X—except the acquisition of property by the Federal Government occurring before 1950.

Does this make the problem any less for community X? If we pass this bill as written today, will community X be able to look forward to easier times? Is it any easier to bear a burden created in 1939 than it is to bear a burden created in 1950? This is a philosophy I cannot accept. This is a philosophy that if a man has been blind for some time he is accustomed to his blindness and therefore shouldn't be helped to regain his sight.

There are hundreds and hundreds of community X's across the country. For example, look at San Diego County, California. 54 percent of the assessable area of that county is owned by the Federal Government. Yet Mr. Arthur Eddy, the county assessor of San Diego County, testified that if the 1950 cutoff date applies, not one piece of property would be helped by this act. Practically all of the expansion of the Federal Government into San Diego occurred before 1950. Here is a county where over half of the land is tax immune because of Federal ownership. Here is a county that is an ideal example of the situation we are trying to correct. Here also is a county that won't be helped in any way by the bill as written because the injury occurred before June 30, 1950.

Before long we will be closing the doors on this session of Congress. We will be going back home to report to the people we represent on the accomplishments of this Congress. Perhaps community X is in your State. Perhaps you represent the citizens of community X. How will you explain to them what we contemplate doing today? How will you explain to them that their neighboring community will be qualified to receive payment in lieu of taxes because that community has suffered since 1950, but in community X where the financial suffering has been extended over a longer period of years, Congress offered no relief? How will you justify this pick-and-choose approach of Congress? What will you say?

There are other portions of this bill that disturb me. I cannot justify in my own mind the arbitrary selection of industrial and commercial property as the only criterion to which these payments will apply. I cannot justify the absolute exclusion of rural land, of grazing land, of game refuges. This, too, seems an unfair exclusion.

I am not proposing we change the date from June 30, 1950, to September 8, 1939, or to any other date. It is my contention, however, that this time problem is indicative of the entire problem. The approach of this bill to a very complex problem is the quick step in the dark approach. I am firmly convinced that there is another alternative—a better choice. The amendment that is in the nature of a substitute to be offered by the distinguished Senator from South Dakota and myself contemplates a careful study of this problem. It substitutes careful study for hasty and perhaps unwise action. It recognizes the disease, but it also recognizes that the right cure must be found, not just any cure. It offers a realistic approach to a complex problem.

I support with my full conviction this amendment.

AWARD OF MEDAL TO REPRESENTATIVE BARRATT O'HARA

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 12396.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 12396) to authorize the Honorable BARRATT O'HARA to accept and wear the award of the Medal for Distinguished Military Service in white tendered by the President of the Republic of Cuba, Maj. Gen. Fugencio Batista y Zaldivar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, this bill involves an award for valiant service in the Spanish-American War. The recipient fought with great courage and bravery on the side of Cuba, and this is an award given by the Cuban Republic.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I should like to add a word to the statement made by the very eminent senior Senator from Georgia.

Private O'Hara enlisted in the United States Army at the age of 16. I think perhaps his statement concerning his age may not have been quite accurate, and that he was younger than he said. After many years the Cuban Government recognizes his services and is rewarding him for military service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I wish to observe that I am very happy that the Senate has just passed a bill in behalf of Mr. O'HARA. I think the senior Senator from Illinois is deserving of an award, because I have never known a man to be more diligent than he has been in this particular situation.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I thank the Senator from Texas.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the bill (S. 3468) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to amend certain contracts providing for the furnishing of water to the city of Rapid City, S. Dak., for municipal purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2379) to promote the fishing industry in the United States and its Territories by providing for the training of needed personnel for such industry, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3957) for the relief of Pauline Corbett.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6586) to amend section 7 of the War Claims Act of 1948, with respect to claims of certain religious organizations functioning in the Philippine Islands.

LAKE MICHIGAN WATER DIVERSION

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. AIKEN. What is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The consideration of House bill 3210.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. AIKEN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. AIKEN. I thought the Chair had recognized me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair had recognized the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, the bill now before the Senate, H. R. 3210, was passed by the House last July by a vote of 316 to 74. A subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Public Works held 2 days of hearings, and by a unanimous vote from both parties reported the bill favorably to the full committee. Similarly, the Committee on Public Works recommended the passage of the bill. So the bill comes to the Senate with the overwhelming vote of the House and with the unanimous report of the Committee on Public Works.

I observe on the floor the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR], who presided with great ability over the hearings. I hope that later he will take the floor and describe his attitude about the bill.

Mr. President, H. R. 3210 would provide authority for the State of Illinois and the Chicago Sanitary District, under the supervision and direction of the Secretary of the Army, to test, on a 3-year basis, the effect of increasing the diversion of water from Lake Michigan into the Illinois Waterway at an additional annual average rate of 1,000 cubic feet per second. Since 1938 the diversion by the Chicago Sanitary District from Lake Michigan has been at a rate of an annual average of 1,500 cubic feet per second.

This was a sharp reduction from the figure of between 8,000 to 10,000 cubic feet per second which was diverted before the decision of Chief Justice Hughes. The present bill permits a rate providing a total annual average of not more than 2,500 cubic feet a second.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The Subcommittee of the Committee on Public Works and the full committee took action on the bill. There is no objection whatsoever to its passage.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I thank the Senator from New Mexico.

There is a real need for the benefits provided by this bill. The health and welfare of the equivalent of 5½ million people residing within the service area of the Chicago Sanitary District must be seriously considered. Population increases in this area are stated to be at a rate of 55,000 per year.

The functioning of the Chicago Sanitary District is one of the finest in sanitary engineering. The increased demands of an expanding population requires an equal expansion of facilities of this type including the expanded need for water.

The waterways of the Chicago, Des Plaines, Calumet, and Illinois Rivers extend in a northeast-southwest direction across the broad expanses of the State of Illinois. These waterways provide an ever-increasing volume of commercial water traffic from the Mississippi River through Chicago and the Great Lakes. The development of the St. Lawrence seaway will greatly increase the traffic on these Illinois water routes.

The present flow of water through the Chicago Sanitary District treatment facilities leaves the water with an inadequate supply of oxygen which is necessary for fish life and an excess of nitrogen, which causes rapid growth of algae and other micro-organisms harmful to navigation and the maintenance of a clear, unpolluted stream of water. More water is needed.

Adequate safeguards have been added to this bill which were not present in previous bills. They are, first, a limitation of not more than 5,000 cubic feet per second at any time, or twice the average; second, the Secretary of the Army shall at all times have direct control and supervision of the amount of water directly diverted from Lake Michigan; and, third, prohibition of the diversion of water into the Illinois Waterway during times of flood in the Illinois, Des Plaines, Chicago, or Calumet Rivers.

To demonstrate more specifically the change in the once-voiced opposition to water diversion from Lake Michigan by downstate communities I want to point out that I have recently received several letters from local businessmen, individuals, and from the Peoria Association of Commerce stating that their former objections to this legislation are withdrawn and that they now support the bill because of the safeguards incorporated in the bill and because of their desire for the benefits of increased water for better navigation, a cleaner river, and a possible enhancement of their underground water supply.

The bill provides for a study by the Secretary of the Army as soon as possible after the date of enactment to determine the effect on Lake Michigan water levels and on the Illinois Waterway of the increased diversion. This assures safeguards which will prevent excessive use of the waters of Lake Michigan. Downstate communities are assured of protection against flooding of their communities by the constant control and supervision required of the Secretary of the Army in the use of the additional water with maximum diversion rates established in the bill during normal and flood stages. This bill in my opinion deserves the favorable consideration of the Members of the Senate.

Testimony and documentary evidence produced before the House and Senate committees demonstrated there is no real basis for the expressed fear of lowered lake levels throughout the Great Lakes Basin with attendant lighter vessel loads. An interim report, dated June 14, 1955, prepared by the International Lake Ontario Board of Engineers to the International Joint Commission has now been published. This report concludes that additional water diversion at Chicago would produce the following effects:

1. There would be a temporary reduction in lake levels with a maximum of five-eighths of 1 inch over a period of 15 years in Lakes Huron and Michigan and a reduction of three-eighths inch in the levels of Lake Erie and Lake Ontario.

2. This reduction would have no significant effect upon navigation.

The study prepared by the International Lake Ontario Board of Engineers, June 14, 1955, includes the following:

The effect on navigation expressed as maximum lowering of levels in inches at critical points is shown in the following tabulation:

	Maximum reduction in levels in inches
Lower St. Marys River	5/8
Harbors on Lakes Michigan-Huron	5/8
St. Clair River	5/8
Detroit River	3/8
Harbors on Lake Erie	3/8
Upper end—Welland Canal	3/8
Lower end—Welland Canal	3/8
Harbors on Lake Ontario	3/8
St. Lawrence River above International Rapids Section	3/8
Lake St. Louis	1/4
Montreal Harbor	3/8

The above minor lowering of levels could have no effect on the loading of vessels.

In addition, and perhaps the major factor in the 1954 Presidential veto of H. R. 3300, a bill having similar provisions for water diversion from Lake Michigan, is the objection of our Canadian friends. Their original objection was predicated upon three points:

First. Potential reduction of power in the Niagara River at International Rapids.

Second. Adverse effect upon navigation through the Great Lakes, and Third. A recommendation that congressional action should await the report of the International Joint Commission created under article IX of the Treaty of 1909. The report of the Lake Ontario Board of Engineers has been published. The report clearly answers the objections advanced by the Canadian Government.

I know it has been said that this is merely an interim report, and that we should wait for the final report of the International Joint Commission. My office communicated with the acting chairman of the International Joint Commission, Mr. McWhorter. I understand he has assured us that the interim report is as final a report as any which we will get on the effect of lake diversion.

Historically, the amounts of water diverted at Chicago have been determined by the United States unilaterally, through the Supreme Court or the Secretary of War, without regard for negotiations with Canada.

There is a very real reason for this, for under the Boundary Water Treaty of 1909, Lake Michigan is not considered as "boundary water," since it lies wholly within the United States, and is a considerable distance removed from the Canadian border.

The map at the back of the Chamber shows that Lake Michigan stops at the Straits of Mackinac. The Straits of Mackinac are quite a distance from the international boundary, which runs through Lake Huron. Thus, Lake Michigan lies completely within the United States, and is not a part of international boundary waters.

A legal opinion prepared by the Chicago Bar Association dated March 1, 1955, covering this problem, reaches four conclusions:

First. Congress has power under the commerce clause of the constitution to authorize the additional diversion.

Second. Authorization of additional diversion would not violate the constitutional barrier to giving a preference to the ports of any State.

Third. The power of Congress to authorize increased diversion is not affected by the fact that the Supreme Court has in the past considered the subject matter and has retained jurisdiction to modify its decree.

Fourth. Congressional action authorizing additional diversion at Chicago would not violate the mandatory provisions of the International Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909 or the Niagara Treaty of 1950.

I might say in this connection, that when Elihu Root testified before the Foreign Relations Committee at the time the 1909 treaty was under consideration, he said that the definition of boundary waters was "carefully drawn in order to exclude Lake Michigan." I think that should make a great appeal to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], a distinguished graduate of Hamilton College, because Elihu Root was one of the most distinguished graduates of that college. I know the opinion of Secretary Root should therefore have a controlling influence upon the opinion of his fellow Hamiltonian and my good friend, the senior Senator from New York.

A significant fact which should be kept in mind in considering the use of the waters of the Great Lakes Basin for the development of hydroelectric power between Canada and the United States is the Long Lake-Ogoki water diversion into Lake Superior. This diversion has been at an average rate of 5,000 cubic feet per second by the Canadian Government since 1940, with attendant hydroelectric power development.

The Canadians have changed the direction of the waterflow which formerly went into Hudson Bay from Ogoki River by dams that reverse the flow into Lake Superior. This flow from Long Lake means there is an authorized diversion of 5,000 cubic feet per second, which creates additional hydroelectric power development, not only on the spot, but further downstream—an amount which is twice as much as we are asking for diversion into the Illinois River.

Upon inquiry, it developed that Canada is not merely diverting the 5,000 cubic feet a second to which she is entitled under the international agreement, but she is diverting an additional quantity as well.

I inquired of Mr. McWhorter, the Acting Chairman of the United States Section of the International Joint Commission, and I received a letter dated July 13, which I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION,
Washington D. C., July 13, 1956.

HON. PAUL H. DOUGLAS,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR DOUGLAS: Reference is made to the hearing this forenoon on your and Senator DIRKSEN'S bill, S. 2550, and to my answer to your question regarding the physical possibility of diverting more water than a yearly average of 5,000 cubic feet per second from the Albany River watershed into Lake Superior through the Ogoki and Long Lake works constructed by the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

I stated my understanding that more than 5,000 cubic feet per second and possibly 6,000 cubic feet per second could be diverted into Lake Superior through those works. I am pleased to inform you that the record shows that during the calendar year 1946, the Long Lake diversion averaged 1,576 cubic feet per second, and the Ogoki diversion averaged 4,648 cubic feet per second, the combined average diversion during that year being 6,224 cubic feet per second.

Sincerely yours,

ROGER B. MCWHORTER,
Acting Chairman, United States Section.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, in that letter he wrote:

The record shows that during the calendar year 1946 the Long Lakes diversion averaged 1,576 cubic feet a second, and the Ogoki diversion averaged 4,648 cubic feet a second—

Or 1,200 cubic feet more than Canada was entitled to under the international agreement.

We are asking for only an additional 1,000 cubic feet a second, which means that there would be no lowering whatsoever of lake levels from those which would be created if Canada held to its legal limit of 5,000 cubic feet a second. Their extra 1,200 feet would more than compensate for our extra 1,000.

Furthermore, although I am not fully acquainted with the topography of the north country, I think it is true that additional water could be diverted from the Ogoki River, and thus, from Hudson Bay, and sent into Lake Superior, so that the slight effect of this diversion would be more than neutralized.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. Is the Senator from Illinois thinking in terms of navigation or power? Does he understand that our agreement with Canada provides that, if waters from the northern rivers are diverted into the Great Lakes system, all the power which might be developed from such diversion belongs to Canada, not the United States, whereas all the power which is diverted out of the lakes and goes down into rivers is taken away from the good people in the northeastern section of our country?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I hope the Senator from Vermont will not take the position that the sole and exclusive function of the drainage area of the Great Lakes is to provide power for New York and New England. I helped get the St. Lawrence seaway project enacted into law. I voted for the development of the Niagara power project. I hope the Senator does not think that the sole function of the Great Lakes is to supply water in order that New York and Vermont may reap the benefits.

Mr. AIKEN. It certainly is a very important function. When 2,500 second-feet are permitted to be lost, it means that a lot of potential power is lost.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That seems to be the typical eastern attitude, which is that the Midwest should be milked by the East—that we are simply to be hewers of wood and drawers of water for the New York Power Authority.

Mr. AIKEN. The people in the area of the State of the Senator from Illinois are certainly trying to be drawers of water, all right.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator from Vermont, since his State is getting 100,000 kilowatts out of the development of the St. Lawrence, says that nobody else should have any of this water; that the water must be pledged to Vermont and New York. That is also the argument of Robert Moses.

Mr. AIKEN. That is 100,000 kilowatts which the State of Illinois would draw from power which would go to the people of Vermont.

Mr. DOUGLAS. As a matter of fact, the amount of power which would be lost would be only about 1½ percent of the total amount of power at Niagara.

Mr. AIKEN. What is the flow of the Niagara River?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not know that I can give the flow in cubic feet, but, as the Senator knows, about 2 million kilowatts are generated. I think the loss will be only about 1½ percent of that.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. KERR. Is it not a fact that during the 3-year period which would be authorized by the bill there would not be a single kilowatt of power lost to Niagara or St. Lawrence because, in the first place, there is not now being used half of the water that is flowing there, and, in the second place, the persons concerned would not be in a position to use more of it during the 3-year period which the bill provides as an experimental proposition for the city of Chicago and the Sanitary District of Chicago?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I want to thank my friend from Oklahoma for putting the case cogently indeed. If New York and Vermont object, they will be playing dog in the manger. They are not going to utilize the power for themselves and during the 3-year experimental period they will not permit Chicago to use it.

Mr. AIKEN. We intend to generate power at Niagara.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I was at Niagara last fall. I spent 2 days there. I am a strong believer in that project, but——

Mr. AIKEN. Can the Senator from Illinois give us assurance that if at the end of 3 years the diversion of water, during a low-water period, is proved to have a deleterious effect on the Great Lakes Basin, Illinois will gracefully and gladly surrender the 2,500 second-feet?

Mr. DOUGLAS. If the Board of Engineers finds that on the whole this diversion is having a bad effect upon the economy and upon the water resources of the Great Lakes Basin, they can so make that decision.

If such a decision is well backed up, I am sure we will not ask for the extension.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to ask another question. If the State of Illinois is asking for this 2,500 second-feet of water during a low-water period, would not the State of Illinois, in a spirit of compromise, be willing to take the 2,500 second-feet of water during a high-water period?

Mr. DOUGLAS. We want this water primarily for health purposes. We cannot limit ourselves to 1,500 second-feet of water during the low-water season.

Mr. AIKEN. I doubt that a great deal of extra water for sanitary purposes would be needed in New England and the Northeastern States; but we would like the water for the generation of power and possibly for navigation purposes, although power is what I am primarily interested in, because, as the Senator from Illinois knows, any water diverted from the Great Lakes by Canada, for instance, would simply be used there, and we would not be able to use any of it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Water diverted by Canada from Hudson Bay to the Great Lakes has an effect on the level of the lakes. It raises the level more than the Chicago diversion would lower it.

The lake shippers oppose this bill—which is absurd, because it would merely result in a change of between three-eighths of an inch and five-eighths of an inch in the lake level. So, from the point of view of navigation, the Canadian diversion is not very important.

Mr. President, that is all I have to say regarding the bill. I hope it will be passed.

I will welcome any remarks on the bill by the distinguished senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR], who took the testimony on the bill, and understands it very well.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, I think this bill should be passed by the Senate.

As the Senator from Illinois has said, the bill was passed by the House by a majority of approximately 3 or 4 or 5 to 1.

The bill was approved unanimously by the Senate Committee on Public Works, following extensive hearings. The bill is supported by both the Senators from Illinois.

Mr. President, this bill, if enacted, will harm no one. In Lake Michigan there is a variation in the water level of between 5 feet and 6 feet over what seems to be a regular cycle of different water levels, covering a period of years. In other words, at times there is a difference of from 5 feet to 6 feet in the water level of Lake Michigan.

If this bill were put into effect and if no additional water were diverted into Lake Superior by Canada, the effect of the bill would be to make a difference of about one-half inch in the water level of Lake Michigan. The water level of Lake Michigan already is affected to the extent of nearly 6 feet by the running of the cycle of different water levels.

So the enactment of this bill would harm no one.

Enactment of the bill is a necessity for the health of approximately 6 million to 8 million persons at the present time, and a population which probably will increase 10 million in the matter of a few years.

It has been said that Canada objects to the bill. Mr. President, Canada has no more say regarding the waters of Lake Michigan than she has regarding the waters of the Chattahoochee, the Suwannee, the Arkansas, or the Tennessee Rivers. No part of Lake Michigan is within miles of the Dominion of Canada; and in my judgment, it would be a voluntary surrender of sovereignty for the United States Government to ask the Government of Canada—much as we respect and admire the Canadians, and great as is our affection for them—whether Canada has a position regarding what the United States of America and the State of Illinois do with the waters of Lake Michigan. It would be similar to the following situation Mr. President: If you owned a home and a farm in the county in Kentucky in which you lived, and if you wished to sell that property, and if your wife was willing to sign the deed to it, and if then you were to say, "Well, now, let us wait and see whether we can find some citizen in Illinois or in Oklahoma who might object to this; we will not sell it until we address a letter 'To Whom It May Concern,' and request their reaction to our proposal to sell this land, which is exclusively ours, and no part of which is theirs."

Mr. President, 20 years ago Canada decided that she wished to divert some waters in the area north of Lake Superior, into the Great Lakes system, instead of permitting the water to continue to flow into Hudson Bay. Canada wished to develop a power project or two north of Lake Superior. Canada simply made the installation, and started diverting between 1,500 and 5,000 cubic feet of water a second into Lake Superior. So far as the record shows, Mr. President, I was unable to find from our State Department or from the representatives of the International Boundary Commission that Canada ever took up with anyone in the United States the matter of whether the United States had a position on that subject, although Lake Superior is recognized as being an international body of water, with reference to which the United States has as much interest, control, and jurisdiction as has Canada.

After Canada had begun to divert between 2,000 and 5,000 cubic feet of water a second, someone suggested to her that, since Lake Superior is an international body of water, she should talk to the United States about it. Canada did so; and there was reached an agreement by which Canada was to be permitted to divert approximately 5,000 cubic feet of water a second into Lake Superior. However, the record shows that Canada diverts an average of approximately 6,000 cubic feet of water a second into Lake Superior, under the terms of the agreement whereby Canada was to divert 5,000 cubic feet of water a second.

The record also shows that Canada would like to divert more water, because in doing so she would be able to generate electricity at some hydroelectric facilities. But no agreement for Canada to divert more water has been reached, because additional diversion would adversely affect the level of the Great Lakes, by withdrawing too much water from them.

The Senator from Vermont says his State has a power interest in this water. Perhaps Vermont has; I do not know. However, Mr. President, in the West, no man has a claim to water unless he has established it. One cannot dream or envision or speculate an interest in water, even though the water is adjacent to his own property, until he has begun to use it. That is the law of the river.

I would suppose that Vermont is approximately 500 miles or more from Lake Michigan. It is a fantasy, Mr. President, for Vermont to say she has a vested interest in the waters of Lake Michigan, which is wholly within the State of Illinois and one or two adjacent or boundary States.

There is a health problem in the sanitary district of Chicago. Three hundred million dollars has already been spent there on sewage-disposal facilities, which have been developed to the highest point of efficiency that modern science can devise. In the operation of those facilities it has become apparent that there is necessity for an additional amount of fresh water, because, although they can purify the effluent from the disposal plants to the point where there is no poisonous matter in it, in the process the nitrogen content becomes so high that the oxygen content is practically eliminated; and vegetation grows luxuriantly, but animal life dies. So an additional quantity of fresh water is required, and the source of it is immediately available and adjacent, and it can be taken without harming anyone, without dispossessing any community, State, or country, of a single vested interest. Therefore the Committee on Public Works unanimously approved the bill.

Let us assume, by some stretch of the imagination, or by the indulgence of a fiction, that Vermont had an interest in the waters of Lake Michigan. I would be afraid to have the Senate establish such a thing as a precedent. The western half of Oklahoma has about 20 inches average annual rainfall, and some of it eventually finds its way into the Atlantic Ocean. I would be disturbed and distressed if our great friends from Florida, Georgia, North and South Carolina, Virginia, and Maryland should say, "Throughout countless generations that water has flowed down the rivers of Oklahoma, then into the Arkansas and the Red, and into the Mississippi, thence into the Gulf of Mexico, where it is commingled with the Gulf Stream, which finds it way out of the Gulf of Mexico, travels north and then east, eventually bathing the shores of sunny France and the British Isles." If Vermont has a claim to water from Lake Michigan that she has never used, we might create an international incident, and our great friends in Ireland might come before the United Nations and say, "You cannot build reservoirs in southeastern Oklahoma or southwestern Arkansas, because, who knows—it might diminish the flow of the Gulf Stream, with its warmth and lifegiving properties which we have enjoyed and possessed throughout the centuries."

But even if we were to indulge in such a fiction, Vermont has not used that water and cannot use it in the 3-year experimental period provided for in this legislation.

Therefore I end where I started, with the proposition that this legislation harms no one. It serves a purpose on the part of the Sanitary District of Chicago, rightly conceived and worthily pursued, a purpose with respect to which, in my judgment, Chicago comes here on the basis of what she is entitled to.

I did not expect to consume so much of the time of the Senate. There have been times in my association with the distinguished Senator from Illinois when I could not, by as wild a flight of the imagination as that indulged by the Senator from Vermont, have pictured myself in the position of supporting his proposal with such vigor. Justice, and justice alone guides me in what I have said in support of this legislation.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, let me remind my friend from Oklahoma that justice may be guiding him, but the struggle for justice deserves friendship and that I will accord.

Mr. KERR. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have listened with amusement and some benefit of instruction to the remarkable statements I have heard in relation to the particular issue before us.

Let me phrase the issue as the President of the United States phrased it when he vetoed the last bill, because, to me, his statement simplifies and does not throw any fog into the issue we are discussing. The President said:

I am unable to approve the bill because—

1. Existing diversions are adequate for navigation on the Illinois waterway and Mississippi River.

2. The methods of control of lake levels and protection of property on the Great Lakes should be considered before arbitrarily proceeding with the proposed increased diversion.

3. The diversions are authorized without reference to negotiation with Canada; and

4. The legitimate interests of other States affected by the diversion may be adversely affected.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. No; let me continue. Then I shall be glad to open myself to questions.

This particular bill was introduced in the Senate in July 1955. A report on the bill was received from Thruston B. Morton, Assistant Secretary of State. Mr. Morton said:

The Department has been informed by the Bureau of the Budget that there is no objection to the submission of this report and that the enactment of this proposed legislation would not be in accord with the program of the President since its considers the reasons for the President's memorandum of disapproval of H. R. 3300, 83d Congress, remain valid.

Let us see what the bill does. We have heard it said that it would grant certain power to the Secretary. The bill provides:

Authority is hereby granted to the State of Illinois and the Sanitary District of Chicago, under the supervision and direction of the Secretary of the Army—

To do what? To divert a flow up to 5,000 cubic feet per second.

I have heard it estimated that 5,000 cubic feet would fill this Chamber. That amount of diversion is proposed, in addition to what is being taken. It would go into this particular channel.

As shown on the map, along Lake Michigan there are the States of Michigan and Wisconsin, and to the south a little of Indiana and a little of Illinois. That is the greatest watershed in the world. Engineers, of course, recognize what it would mean if we interfered with the level of the water.

There is pending now a bill which would authorize the expenditure of money for connecting channels of the Great Lakes. We know very well that the ships which come into the Great Lakes and go to the port of Chicago—and Chicago has spent millions of dollars to create what might be called a sea harbor in the middle of the Nation—would be faced with the situation that there would be taken from the waterway up to 5,000 cubic feet a second.

North of Chicago, on Lake Michigan, in my State, we have some beautiful harbors. There is Milwaukee and Green Bay and Port Washington, and others. We have made some appropriations lately, and Milwaukee last year had to spend some money to deepen its harbor. It was not only my personal objection to the bill in committee, but, in spite of the fact as the report shows, that the opponents had the testimony of experts, they insisted on going ahead with the bill.

I will read from the report:

Opponents of the diversion discussed the possible adverse effect on lake shipping, especially since the lakes are now entering a cycle of declining lake levels, and the relationship of such diversion with the Boundary Treaty with Canada and the decree of the United States Supreme Court.

In spite of what the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma has said, there is a boundary treaty in effect with Canada.

I read further from the report:

Officials of lake cities and legal advisers of the States of Wisconsin, Ohio, and New York filed their objections to the bill.

However, the persuasive and eloquent arguments of the distinguished Senators from Illinois, one a Democrat and one a Republican, apparently swayed the committee.

This unwarranted bill would sanction—I repeat, would sanction—increased diversion of water from Lake Michigan down the Chicago Sanitary Canal, to the detriment of the Nation. I have fought the bill in the past, and I oppose it now.

PREVIOUS BILL H. R. 3300

This bill has highly disturbing history.

Most recently, as we all know, a similar bill, H. R. 3300, passed in the closing hours of the 83d Congress. Fortunately it was vetoed by the President.

The President specified four vigorous objections to the bill. Not one of these objections has been successfully answered by proponents of this latest version of this dangerous bill.

To be sure, they have amended it somewhat. They have added some sugar coating. But it is still the same bitter pill underneath.

That is why I wrote to the Senate Public Works Committee to oppose the latest version.

SERIOUSLY AFFECTS WISCONSIN

My own State of Wisconsin knows full well what the lowering of lake levels can mean to us in serious losses. A loss of a single inch of draft for shipping means a loss of 72 millon tons in carrying capacity on the Great Lakes in 1 year. Over a 2-year period the port of Milwaukee alone has been compelled to spend $50,000 to dredge the channels in order to permit ships entering Milwaukee Harbor to unload their cargo at docks with the same ease as they unloaded during the higher waters of 1952.

The waters of Lake Michigan are interstate in character. The State of Illinois has no right to usurp a function which is the common interest of Wisconsin and other Lakes States. The well-being of the antipollution work of the Chicago Sanitary Canal is important, but certainly not to the exclusion of all other interests along the lakes.

BILL UNJUSTIFIABLE

I believe this is an unjustifiable attempt by one State to arbitrarily act so as to compromise the interests, not only of other States surrounding the Great Lakes, but the relationships with our good neighbor to the north, Canada.

Water levels on the lake are, of course, a critical affair—rising and falling. Therefore, the most expert cooperation—on a long-range basis—is essential among all 7 States and 2 nations adjoining the lakes, if work on the lake levels is to prove satisfactory to all concerned.

Arbitrary, one-sided action—in contrast to carefully planned, well-coordinated action—can prove exceedingly harmful to property owners, to shipping sources, and other interests all along the lakes.

Why penalize the people of Wisconsin or of other States to pay for increased dredging costs, and to suffer shipping losses, just to serve some special interests of Illinois?

Wisconsin, together with other Lake States, has consistently and vigorously opposed this legislation. It is completely repugnant to the best interests of the entire lake area.

This proposal is "special-interest" legislation at its worst. It is legislation which runs contrary to a historic and binding Supreme Court decision, contrary to the letter and spirit of our treaty agreement with Canada, and contrary to the needs of the peoples adjoining the lakes.

There is every reason for defeating this proposed legislation, and no good reason for passing it.

PRESIDENT VETOED SIMILAR BILL IN 83D CONGRESS

President Eisenhower's wise veto of a previous version of it is an indication that the executive branch clearly recognizes how important are the issues at stake in defeating this unsound proposal.

I hope the Senate will not send the bill down to the White House again—for still another veto—which would be well-merited.

HOUSE ACTION ON BILL

Regarding the background of the bill, I want to point out some unusual circumstances surrounding the progress of H. R. 3210 in the Congress.

For example, when this bill was considered by the House of Representatives, there were no committee hearings available for the Members of the House to read.

Furthermore, there was no report by the Corps of Engineers, the Department of State, or the Bureau of the Budget.

Unfortunately these reports and evaluations were not available at all when the bill came up.

Yet somehow it was smoothly engineered throughout the House.

ACTION IN SENATE

Now it has come up in the Senate. It is no small or trivial matter. If enacted, it may have serious effect on our Great Lakes and other interstate commerce. The resulting adverse effect on shipping, increase of cost of harbor dredging, and loss in power to the generating plants now operating in the Great Lakes area are significant factors to be considered.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, may we have order? The Senator from Wisconsin is delivering a very important speech. I am sitting very close to the Senator, but it is difficult for me to hear him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUMPHREYS of Kentucky). The Senate will be in order.

Mr. WILEY. On power alone, for example, there would be loss of energy at the following places:

First. At the United States Niagara River plant;

Second. At the Canadian Niagara River plants;

Third. At the United States units of Bernhart Island powerhouse in the St. Lawrence River;

Fourth. At the Canadian units of the Bernhart Island powerhouse in the St. Lawrence River; and Fifth. At the International Rapids section.

AFFECT THE WHOLE NATION

Furthermore, an undesirable precedent would be established by which water may be diverted from any rivers and waterways.

In the great Northwest, for example, diversion of water would not only affect sources of power, but would have an adverse effect upon the salmon, and other fishing industries.

Moreover, every State on an interstate waterway may be subject to similar diversions of water—if this water steal is allowed to establish a precedent.

The proponents of this bill have indicated that they have soothed the concern of our Canadian neighbors over the amount of water to be stolen from the Great Lakes. They have indicated that they have entered into informal negotiations with Canada to alleviate her fears over the lowering of water levels in Lake Ontario and other Great Lakes.

I do not believe that the State of Illinois has authority to enter into such negotiations, when the interests are national and international in scope.

The history of this bill has shown that there was really no one for it, except some groups in the State of Illinois.

CONCLUSION

I should like to reiterate some of the factors which testify against the enactment of this kind of legislation:

First. It would be detrimental to the shipping commerce on the Great Lakes.

Second. It would result in increased cost of harbor development and maintenance throughout the lakes region.

Third. It would have an adverse effect on the lakes trading and greatly reduce the benefits which may be desired from our development of the St. Lawrence Seaway project.

Fourth. It would result in a tremendous loss of power generated by our Great Lakes powerplants—both Canadian and American.

Fifth. It would endanger our international relations with our good neighbor, Canada, by adversely affecting the water level for lake transportation.

Sixth. It would set an undesirable precedent by which this kind of self-interest diversion might seriously interfere with, and impair, our Great Lakes and interstate commerce.

For these very sound reasons I am hopeful that the leaders of the Senate may refuse to bring up for final vote such an undesirable piece of self-interest legislation at all.

If passed by the Senate, I shall again urge the President—by every good means—to again veto this dangerous proposal in the national interest.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the Senator inform this body of the date of the veto message by the President?

Mr. WILEY. I do not think I quite caught the Senator's question.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the Senator from Wisconsin inform this body of the date on which the President vetoed the measure?

Mr. WILEY. I am looking at the report of the committee, and I quoted from that report. I think it must have been September 3, 1954.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is correct. Is it not true that it was not until June of the following year that the interim report was made to the international joint commission which showed that the maximum reduction of lake levels on Lakes Michigan and Huron would be five-eighths of an inch, and on Lake Ontario three-eighths of an inch, after a period of years had passed? What the Senator is saying is that the project should be held up lest the level of Lake Michigan be reduced by five-eighths of an inch, whereas the Senator from Oklahoma has pointed out that there is a cyclical fluctuation of 6 feet in the water level. For some curious reason, lake shippers think the loss of half an inch would diminish the amount of cargo they can carry. That is perfectly ridiculous. I remind my friend from Wisconsin that while Milwaukee is a splendid city, and we love it, Chicago has several times more water transportation than has Milwaukee. We do not want to hurt the port of Chicago or the port of Milwaukee, and this will not injure either. The people of Wisconsin are seeing bogies that do not exist.

Mr. WILEY. I think I know my people in Wisconsin pretty well. While we love the people of Illinois, we are kind of glad, sometimes, that a part of Wisconsin is now a part of Illinois. Chicago was once a part of Wisconsin Territory.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am very happy that that is true.

Mr. WILEY. Then we are both happy. We are separated by a mere line.

The report of which the Senator speaks—what was the date of that?

Mr. DOUGLAS. The 14th of June, 1955, or 9 months after the President vetoed the bill, based upon completely erroneous information.

Mr. WILEY. After that, there was a letter, which is printed in the report, from Donald R. Belcher, dated June 24, 1955, in which he says, among other things:

> However, it is understood that the results of these studies will not be available before next year. The President stated in his memorandum of disapproval that reasonable opportunity to complete the surveys should be afforded before legislative action is undertaken.

So, this letter was written after the so-called report of which the Senator speaks.

Mr. President, I was unfortunate in not being able to appear before the committee, though I filed my objection and reported, also, the objections of my State. I understand that engineers have testified on several occasions; and on another occasion, when the port of Chicago attempted to take water from the lake, the Supreme Court of the United States spoke very clearly and definitely as to the rights of the citizens of my State and the other States in connection with the matter. That decision still stands. There is now an effort made to do that which I think would be detrimental to our good relationship, as well as to the rights of the people using the Great Lakes, and the people of my own State.

Mr. DOUGLAS. At the time Chief Justice Hughes rendered his decision we were diverting between eight and ten thousand cubic feet a second. I think that was a somewhat larger amount than we should have diverted at that time. As a result of the decision handed down by Chief Justice Hughes we have spent $312 million to install sanitary disposal works, and we have today the best sanitary disposal works of any large city in the Nation.

There is, however, a nitrogen residue which cannot be eliminated, which, if washed downstream, kills off fish life and breeds micro-organisms. The additional 1,000 feet will provide sufficient oxygen, so that it will purify the river. That is the real point. It will increase the oxygen content of the water so that the nitrogen will not kill fishlife, and so that the water will not be a breeding place for micro-organisms.

Mr. WILEY. Why does the Senator have in the bill a maximum diversion not exceeding a flow of 5,000 cubic feet?

Mr. DOUGLAS. The average is 1,500 cubic feet now.

Mr. WILEY. But it is sought to bring it up to 5,000 cubic feet.

Mr. DOUGLAS. We are asking for an additional average of 1,000 cubic feet per second, or an average of 2,500 feet. There are certain seasons in the year, particularly in the summertime, when the flow of water in the Illinois River is low. We wish to divert more, keeping within the yearly average of 2,500 cubic feet, but we provide that it shall never exceed twice the yearly average.

Mr. WILEY. When the Senator says they are taking 1,500 cubic feet now, that seems to be permissible; but in fact, it is 2,500 cubic feet. Then it is stated in the bill that there is a maximum of 5,000 cubic feet. That is kind of overreaching, and it is not "cricket." It means that at any time they can take up to 5,000 cubic feet.

Mr. DOUGLAS. But that is within the yearly average of 2,500. Does the Senator from Wisconsin think we can always fall below our average and never exceed it?

Mr. WILEY. The average is 1,500 cubic feet.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The average we want is 2,500 cubic feet.

Mr. WILEY. And also 5,000 cubic feet, in addition.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Only in the summer months when the flow of water in the Illinois River is low.

Mr. IVES. Is not that the time when the water in the Great Lakes is low?

Mr. WILEY. I suppose in the summertime the water is low even in Illinois, when it is low in the Great Lakes.

I realize that we are all fighting for our own personal interests. But I think something more is involved than merely the interest of Wisconsin or Illinois. As the President so succinctly and almost dramatically stated in his veto message. We must not overlook this issue.

Second, while we have heard it said that the diversion will be 2,500 feet, and the bill provides for the maximum diversion, we know that people of Illinois will take the maximum every time.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The diversion is to be under the supervision of the Army Engineers. If the average run is above 2,500 feet, they will give directions to shut off the flow of the water.

Mr. WILEY. I do not think that is what the bill provides, in substance.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It certainly does say so. The diversion will be under the direction of the Secretary of the Army, who has jurisdiction of the Corps of Engineers.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Is it not true that Milwaukee is growing faster than Chicago? This will be a permanent situation, as I view it. The larger Milwaukee grows, the more water it will need.

Mr. WILEY. I shall refer that question to my brother from Illinois. He is more versed in the subject of growth than I am.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Both cities are growing.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, if there are no more questions, I yield the floor.

PAUL D. THOMPSON, SR., PHILOSOPHER

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, once in a generation a philosopher arises who makes an outstanding record. Such a philosopher is Paul D. Thompson, Sr., who lives in Washington.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter dated July 27, 1956, which he wrote to me, together with a letter which he wrote to the Secretary of the United Nations, and also a petition in the form of a letter.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 27, 1956.

Hon. WILLIAM LANGER,
Senator from North Dakota,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Since I discussed my work with you tragic annals have been recorded of sacrifice and courage and infant mortality in man's eternal struggle to be free. That we may memorialize the bravery and the death of these gentle people by considered action I wish to convey a message to the Polish people, and the people everywhere who are struggling for tangible forms that give dignity and surety of life under law and a future of freedom for the families and the children of the earth. Their sacrifice and deprivation is one with families torn asunder on the plains of Russia and China, the deprivations of the conquered and the minorities under Hitler, people whose only offenses were the worship of God, the joys of family life and the loving care and tenancy of a bit of soil. Can man be improved by being killed, despoiled, deprived? Is death the great improvement to be meted out to the children of the earth? The chief value in life is living, for unless one lives one cannot love, or have a soul, or be somewhat in God's image, or stoop to touch the soil or smell the air of spring. One cannot even die until one has lived. No philosophical program by which man can seek his improvement through government can assume any proposition by which children and human beings can be deprived of life by the acts of governments or individuals. The right to life is an equal right, a paramount right to every human being on this earth; not inferior to man's wish for power and wealth and the infliction of war and deadly instruments on the human race. To live and have their children live is a just and inviolable heritage of the people of the earth. The instruments of force and oppression must be gradually and surely abated to give the people their right to life—to give the national cultures their freedom and common partnership of dignity on the earth.

In this conversion to a world at peace death and force will not give the people the life they seek. Mankind must take common measures to assure growth of the peoples welfare, under God, by such measures as are in harmony with the moral order we seek.

In answer to the peoples' prayers a peaceful revolution is growing on the earth to build a great foundation as a common enterprise of work and conservation: A great council to serve as trustees of the great foundation, men who hold in their minds and hearts the constitution to keep earth's children safe and free. To this great undertaking I now invite the common participation of the people of the earth, to sign the conditional pledges, to counsel and call to service those men who stand for human dignity: men to whom the service of mankind has brought the great reward of love and spiritual growth.

In that representation the people even now are free. As there is increasing growth of the peoples welfare the national cultures will find increasing freedom and dignity. There will be a progression toward a common estate of well being and armaments and oppression will gradually decline everywhere.

I enclose to you certain documents which are now of a public nature. I wrote the Children's Constitution in a schoolroom long before the wire to Dag Hammarskjold and Letter to the Editor. We had seen the pictures of the children praying in the refugee camp in Vietnam. The Children's Constitution and this great movement are the gift of my wonderful wife and I to the children of the earth. I hope you can bring this letter, the wire, the pledge, the Letter to the Editor, and the Children's Constitution to public notice in any way you can.

Very sincerely yours,

PAUL D. THOMPSON, Sr.

APRIL 18, 1956.

The Honorable DAG HAMMARSKJOLD,
Secretary General of the United Nations,
The United Nations, New York, N. Y.

GREETINGS: I congratulate you on the signal success of your conciliatory efforts to create a more tolerable situation in the local area and in a world where our failure to build a public philosophy relative to the deepest needs of the people has made life a travail to the human race. I greatly honor also the United Nations, and their efforts at cooperation, which will be more easily furthered when all national cultures are free, and are thus in homage to a like philosophy of freedom and dignity, and the burden of armaments has been removed from the aching backs of the humble people of the earth.

I pray you to advance a request to the honored heads of states, and the people of Israel and the Arab States. In honor of the gift of inspiration of the children and the work and gifts of God-fearing people responsive to that gift. I request all fighting cease, all armed stances be forgone, and men return to work and prayer, to think not of conflict but of the work necessary to conserve the earth and strengthen the fabric of intercourse and understanding in common enterprises for human good. God is indeed working a leaven in America and the world. Relative to the churches, the synagogues, the mosques, and the peaceful aspirations and the love of gentle people pledges are now being signed or will be signed as earnest of man's wish to have a great foundation and a council, the gift of inspiration of the children of the earth, to represent the right of each child born to dignity and freedom, and the flowering of gifts under God as naturally as the plant lifts its leaves and flower to heaven to receive the beneficent rain and the sun's rays which spur its growth. In honor of this gift the children have given us to keep earth's children free and a safe place for me upon the children's graves a flower, and ask a prayer of forgiveness for our failure to advance human inspiration and the kingdom of God rapidly enough to keep the children we love safe. A child must never die in the conflict of states again. With peace of mind I will use the gift I have, as the gifts of all God's children must be used, and with the help of godly men from Israel and Islam and around the earth, I will act as a council while millions of pledges are signed around the earth by children, by young people and by gentle people, until such time as great men can be called to serve and form the great foundation and the council. God has indeed been merciful to His children.

And now for illustration I will advance four thoughts for the solution of problems and the growth of human welfare that concern the Middle East in a vital way that will surely be of immediate concern in research, work, and recommendation when the Council is formed and the Foundation is organized. The great Foundation and the Council will have a special care and guardianship of refugees, especially the children, who by reason of oppression of the spirit, or conflict, or great imponderable catastrophe find themselves displaced from home and country. An immediately related problem is an advancement of the free national cultures in conservation and natural resource use to make our science servant to the welfare of man, and immediately applicable to local situations such as that in Jordan, where children have undergone terrible suffering. In those children lies the future of the human race. Where there are people in jeopardy the processes of education and the application of technical scholarships around the earth, such as the great Foundation could sponsor, will tend to promote healthy growth of the people's welfare and the spirit of understanding and service would be immeasurably increased by the fact that children and young people would be learning to serve by doing by these pledges and would have a great motivation to prepare themselves for lives of service in promoting the conservation of the earth and the furtherance of human welfare, in such a manner as the great Dr. Schweitzer has illustrated in Africa.

The people of Jordan must receive allround help, in addition to present aid, immediately to advance a life of dignity for their children in line with the philosophy of the great Council. That this help was provided with a heart of love as children and young people signed pledges around the earth would dramatize the real and only road to world peace and understanding, which can only be achieved by a public philosophy relevant to these children's right to life and happiness.

The great Foundation and the Council would promote those processes of understanding and leadership and conservation by which the free national cultures of the earth could advance their own well-being in free and equal partnership in cooperation with other free peoples mutually dependent on the earth's resources, without the ruin which would inevitably follow for all from conflict to contend for these resources. With freedom and dignity achieved, and arms and power subjugated to reason, England would have with Egypt and the Arab States a common bond of growth and progress in the welfare of their peoples. The children of the earth must not be crushed by the power hunger of the architect's of man's domination, who see in the people's poverty and confusion a way to extend a cult of slavery and suppression. Rather the slavery already imposed must be lifted as people see by illustration and dramatization the people's work grow under the benefits of freedom and inspiration. The common dignity of peoples can best be won through love and common work to build a world where children will be free and safe to develop their gifts for life. The greatest hazard for the welfare of the children of the earth is man, provident not of their well-being but of insatiable lusts for power and influence.

I wish to give a single illustration of how easily the problems of national cultures can be composed when once the field is freed from strife in a common effort to promote the dignity and well-being of all. It may not be feasible, but I believe it may be possible and desirable, in that climate, to recommend that the great foundation construct a road beneath the Negev strip, atomically ventilated and air conditioned, so that the commerce of Jordan and Egypt could fully operate, and Israel have free overland access to the sea. At a later date, when the usages of peace and conservation had produced a common abundance for the people's good, the tolls of gratitude to the children could well repay the great foundation. It might well be called the highway of peace, linking in part the associated states of Israel and Islam in a common bond of peace and mutual conservation, this in a region that has given man a heritage of faith that he now needs sorely to rely on.

I ask you, therefore, to convey this message to these rulers and peoples to inform them of this work for the good of man. I ask their help in its furtherance, and I will pray that the leaders of all religious faiths will call their people to prayer and a common task that the issues of our destiny may convey happiness to countless generations of children. With a firm faith I will proceed along the road, secure in the knowledge that here lies the way that Christ would have us travel on the earth.

A Humble Philosopher.

CONDITIONAL PLEDGE FOR A GREAT FOUNDATION AND A COUNCIL TO REPRESENT COMMON WORK, FREEDOM AND DIGNITY FOR THE NATIONAL CULTURES AND THE CHILDREN OF THE EARTH: THE MOBILIZATION OF MAN FOR DIGNITY AND FREEDOM

Over all the earth, the discoveries in science and in government, and the development of man's artistic and spiritual resources give men in all cultures hope for a better life. From time to time, however, the birth of punitive philosophies relying on force and the natural ambitions of small groups who desire power and dominion over others have enforced upon the peoples of the earth great armaments and war and constant fear, so that the peoples' work is forgotten, their substance is wasted, and the whole earth is in danger of the desolation of destructions. Yet, the peoples of the earth want but to develop their cultures in freedom. They wish but to give their children a chance to develop their gifts for life, under God and to find for them the means of the pursuit of happiness.

It becomes necessary then in this period of confusion, that men over all the earth have a place of common work and leadership to symbolize for the peoples of the earth a philosophy of freedom and dignity based on the historic struggles of men for the free estate and the development of the human spirit in the passage of this life. In common work and great leadership, free of politics and power, the peoples' work can be dramatized by a great council and a great foundation.

I, therefore, pledge this action to help the peoples of the earth build the foundation and council. I understand that the philosopher of this foundation will, with the assistance of philosophers of human freedom in various sections of the earth, second the nomination of the peoples for a quorum of 14 trustees of the great foundation; men who hold in their minds and hearts the constitution to keep earth's children free and safe. When the President of the United States, conferring with the leaders of the free cultures of the earth, shall deem that organization has proceeded sufficiently far to warrant the payment of pledges, I agree, if living and under no misfortune, to pay the sum of $———, in semiannual payments of $——— each, to the official designated by the President, on the 1st day of July and the 1st day of January, after the date of such designation, until the sum of the pledge is paid in full or until my death or according to such arrangements as I shall enter into by the attached schedule or statement of will.

And so, God willing, I attach my signature to pledge my help to the building of these great institutions, trusting the great men who will serve to be mindful of but one thing in their work—the dignity and freedom of the children of the earth.

SURVIVAL

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I have decided that it is in the national interest and in the interest of the people of the earth that I raise the issue of our survival in respect to the only methods by which we can effectively work at it. This letter can be considered a message to the people from a democratic philosopher, and an answer to the fine letters of Mary Stuart Chamberlain, D. G. Mook, Frank W. Vander Hoof, James R. Newman and the many others who have advanced plans and suggestions for reasonable attempts at survival. I wish also to include the lawmakers and the columnists, especially Agronski, the Alsops, Pearson, Sokolsky, Dorothy Thompson, Brown and Fleeson. I am sure the parents of the earth all wish to have their children live in a world geared for life rather than death, if some workable method can be found for them to express themselves in some common enterprise to free themselves of the powermongers, the dictators and the armaments. I consider it to be a philosophical conflict, and the struggle is one for the allegiance of man. For this struggle we need a democratic philosopher to lead the way to some common enterprise and unity. From foreign aid to balloons over Europe, from H-bombs to Aswan dams, the headlines shriek of the gadgets, the contrivances, the devices which are supposed to lead man to a more tolerable situation. The ambitions and rivalries rampant on this earth lead but to a common grave. There is one common bond among the people of the earth. They want to live—they have one common wish—to be free of architects, of oppression, of Stalins, of H-bombs and all this silly business of armaments which enslave and destroy the people. The moral force of the people is a mighty force, and once the people are engaged in one common enterprise of dignity and freedom the people will take over everywhere on this earth. Only the people can clean these Aegean stables. Only great leadership can engage them at the task that must be done. Only when the people are in charge will our children be safe. The people must be led. The great forces of love must be arrayed for this mighty task as men under God build a world relevant to man's right to live in dignity and freedom. I am very sure that the horrors of war and disunion will not enforce peace any more than the distension of a balloon with combustible gases will guarantee a safe journey to the passengers. World order must result from a peaceful revolution engaging the loyalties, the sacrifices and the work of millions of people around the earth. It must result from positive work relevant to the right to life and happiness of the children of the earth.

There is no easy road, no other road that we can follow, yet the way is open to us along this path that we must travel, to reach, under God, a period of true historical peace and a world geared for life instead of the instrumentalities of force and destruction. The people of the earth cry for peace and there is no peace. They see themselves entwined in the spreading web of materialistic conspiracy, corruption, force, greed, and bureaucratic waste. Yet on this earth the immense forces for human good never had more moral power at their disposal. We must assume then that there is a lack of essential leadership to find a way for the great forces for human good to array themselves in the moral struggle—the philosophical struggle to keep our children safe and free.

In this century the forces of materialism have forgotten something. They have not only left out God. They have left out the basic God-given rights of the people—the simple essentials men need to have some comfort and joy in the passage of this life—a common mean by which men can live and enjoy their family, their earth, and their worship. The earth is the people's earth, to be conserved, to be made a place for children to laugh and play and develop their gifts to keep men free.

At a time like this, when men in various power combinations consider calmly the unloosing of those forces in this strange neurotic, imbecilic, suicidal exercise that war has become, and dwell on how many millions of children will be maimed and obliterated in these first exchanges after the initial attack by the architects of human welfare, a leader must rise from the people to lead the way. That this should happen in this age is not a miracle. Considering the complete dislocation of the power architects from life, the psychosis of madness apparent to common folks everywhere, it would be a miracle if a democratic philosopher did not emerge to unify the parents of the earth in a common struggle for dignity and life. (I honor the military who have been explicit about the H-bomb blasts.)

The need then is for a democratic philosopher working on problems of survival of the children of the earth. The leaders and rulers of men have lost contact with the earth, the people. There are many great democratic philosophers. I consider Dr. Albert Schwiezer, of Lambourine one of the world's greatest men. I have that vocation. Since God has given me this opportunity I need not dissemble in advancing this needed work. I am a teacher of children, a democratic philosopher who has been working for years on the survival of the human race. My vocation is as clear, as unmistakable, as that of the forester or the pastor. The circumstances of my life have hewed me for my task. I am on the path I must travel on this earth. With simple faith in God, I will proceed along the way, knowing my actions will spring from the needs of life and have a true bearing on the destiny of man. I am secure in the thought that God favors my success since I am, without wealth or power or position, far along the way that I must go.

Let us examine the work of a democratic philosopher and see what that work is and its application to this tragic situation.

Let us consider an analogy. We can suppose that a forest fire unexpectedly threatens an isolated village that must depend for its very existence upon the resources of its people. Now this analogy is far from complete because the resources that the village pastor commands have not, in this situation, the great bearing that the great forces of love, the spiritual forces have in the world situation today. In this situation—in this incomplete analogy we find the gifts of a simple man, a philosopher, are vital to the safety of the village. Lars, a parishioner, was a man of simple dignity. From boyhood he had roamed the hills, and knew so well the ravines, the water courses, the cover and the life of the village that his responses were instinctive and sure. While the pastor brought the order of faith and prayer to the villagers, Lars sent the young men and the woodsmen to vantage points with orders to set the backfires and the things needed to stay the conflagration. Here there was faith, faith in God and faith in action and the order of prayer and sure action and the village was saved.

We have the great forces we need in the world to win the struggle to keep the earth's children safe and free. The democratic philosopher knows where those great forces are. From a lifetime of thought, often in solitude, he knows the crosscurrents, the eddies, the movements, the conceits, and the hypocrisies that endanger the children of the earth. He acts in response to instincts of survival and the love that God has placed in his heart. He does not try to teach a world by the method of the scholar. Like Lars he calls for simple actions in which individuals can take part. Because the action is true and right, more and more people take part around the earth. The forces of gentle faith move into the breach as the people's work for dignity and freedom grows on the earth, until men of great gifts forget their prejudices and conceits and add their skills and leadership to the people's work.

And so upon this earth great institutions grow, built by the people with their gifts of love. As the people build a positive structure based upon the people's need for life, something that God approves of, we have a proper public philosophy on the earth. The people will then put away their dictators and their guns and the national cultures will be free. God is not mocked. When the parents of the earth take over to protect the family and the hearth no bombs will be needed to protect the children, anymore than we need an H-bomb to protect the boy fishing on the farm pond. Let us forget these headlines, these boondoggles like jets for Tito. We have something growing on this earth, something that each child can have a part in. God must indeed love us or He would not have let us live so long, so foolishly. The parents of the earth are the natural guardians of the family and the children's right to life. Let us trust the people to know the thing we do is good. We have work to do. Let us give thanks to God that our brave soldiers have preserved this opportunity for us and go ahead with sacrifice and courage in building a proper public philosophy in the world which will give joy to every parent on the earth, and give our children such a measure of freedom and dignity as has never yet been seen.

PAUL D. THOMPSON, Sr.

CHILDREN'S CONSTITUTION

We, the children in the world, have seen a shadow fall upon the earth which we could not understand. Do not people in all lands love their children? We have heard of thousands of children with the ones they love creeping through the woods and through the barbed wire fences to get to a land of freedom where they could live in peace. We have heard of millions of poor farmers torn from their farms and the soil they loved and sent to the slave camps of the earth while their children were left fatherless and weeping on the earth. We have seen pictures of children fleeing along the roads while overheard the bombers roared so that one man might have a madman's dance of victory. We have heard of a dark forest where the brave officers of a nation were deliberately shot and buried in heaps never to see the children they had offered their life to save or the homes they had defended with their lives. Recently we have seen the pictures of half a million people with the children fleeing through the jungles and down the rivers on rafts, that they might have the chance of life and freedom and a chance to worship God in peace. And we have seen the men who caused these things cry that they want peace while using the very bread that their people hungered for to build guns, and tanks, and planes to threaten the freedom of their neighbors and spread fear across the world. We know these things are true because we live in countries where everyone is free to tell the truth and before us are the pictures that we see taken with the cameras where these things happened.

We know about the bomb and the threat of war upon the world. We have faith that freedom will live upon the earth. We know that we must sacrifice and face death in such a world to defend our right to life. We know, too, that soldiers love their own children and the children of the earth. We have faith that if mad leaders try to conquer the earth and bring war and destruction on the children a million soldiers who love their country and their children will turn their guns upon these men. They would not dare send a single ship out to sea and plan on it coming back, nor could they be sure that the bomber they sent into the air would not loose death on their own heads. There are men in the states of fear who love their children and the land they have lost and the right to life without fear. We know that our fathers and our brothers would fight to the death for us and our freedom and they would win.

We know that the free nations of the world do not want any of Russia or any of China. We have fought wars to defend freedom in the world. As soon as nations or great islands like the Philippines and Japan were ready we have given them their freedom and our friendship. We have no Polands or Czechoslovaks in our grasp. The free nations of the world want but to live in peace.

We therefore propose a new kind of war upon the earth—a race to see which nation can do the most to make the earth a better place for the children of the earth—a race to make the earth a garden and use the science and the gifts of man to help the nations fight their way up from poverty and have a good life upon the earth.

We therefore propose a constitution for the earth to be set up under God in the hearts and minds of men. We have sanctutaries for birds which have saved bird species from being lost forever. We believe we should have a sanctuary of the earth to save the children of the earth and all we love from destruction. There is but one thing that must be done. The nations of the earth must be free of bondage and never again must a nation march in war, for the nation that threatens with great arms and oppresses its neighbor is at war upon the earth and risking the destruction of all of us.

Let there be a covenant of peace. Let each nation draw back and drop all thoughts of war. Let each turn the mighty arms factories to making gifts for a better life on earth. Let the rulers turn their movements toward freedom and a better life for their people. The people of the earth will forever call them great, instead of trying to forget them like a Stalin or a Hitler who caused the death of millions of people on the earth and died beloved of none.

What do the children of the earth want in life? We would have these things for all the people of the earth.

1. The right to have a little land, our homes and our families in safety; to live life in joy and not in fear; to leave our homes and land to our children when we have had our passage of this life.

2. To be free and to have learning; to give our gifts and express ourselves in any work we choose, whether it is the farmer painting his pictures on the hills with his terraces and fields or the teacher teaching children in the schools to develop their gifts in freedom.

3. To use the great science of our times to make a better way of life in all the regions of the Earth like Dr. Albert Schweitzer did in Africa and Edison and Carver did in America.

4. To have our families without fear of separation—to have justice under law—to have equality under law regardless of race or color or religion.

5. To have a government of justice for all.

6. To have each nation free to develop its land in freedom.

7. To have war forever banished from the earth and disputes settled by a concordat of nations devoted to peace.

8. To freely worship the way we choose and to have Sunday free for worship without interference of the State.

9. To have governments and teachers that tell us the truth.

10. To have freedom of speech and freedom to print the truth or express opinions about the conduct of the government.

11. To have all share in the science of the earth that all may have food and clothing and the other benefits of science.

We believe that upon this earth there will be a new birth of freedom and happiness for all. We believe that man should serve others on the earth and live a life of usefulness to others. We therefore pledge to be honest and truthful—to be worthy of trust—to do everything we can to help all of the people of the earth.

We believe that every child born should have a chance to freely express himself in life and not die lonely and forsaken in some bleak barren land of human misery, his poem of life forever unwritten. We believe that freedom to express oneself in love of family is a part of life itself—that hope will never vanish and each new generation will fight to regain the freedom lost when evil and power hungry men captured the movement to make man free.

We believe that our gifts will help make a better word—that gifts cannot be fully developed except in freedom. We believe God gave us the gifts we need to make a better world if we but have the faith to work and use them.

We believe the gifts and wealth of man should be used to conserve the resources of the earth for children yet unborn. The forests should cover the mountain slopes; the waters should run pure and sparkling in our streams; the soil should be abundant and return good for every form of life.

I know when I sign this it is a pledge for life. So that men everywhere will understand we will use a little child with wings as a symbol—a little bird so that man everywhere can look into the sky and see a bird and have new hope and a thought of regaining the freedom he has lost.

We therefore solemnly pledge ourselves to a life of usefulness to make democracy live upon the earth: We pledge ourselves to do all we can to carry the message of love and hope to the other lands; that men everywhere can have a new urge to have a better life for their children; we pledge ourselves not to forget the little children in every land and we will show by what we do that we wish them to share the great liberty which we have which has been saved for us by the sacrifices and death of those who have defended our right to happiness on the earth and our right to develop our gifts for life in freedom.

ESSENTIALITY OF THE WATCH INDUSTRY

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a statement I have prepared concerning a finding by the Joint Committee on the Economic Report with respect to the essentiality of the watch industry.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR DIRKSEN

I am deeply concerned by the report submitted last week by the Joint Economic Committee. I refer, of course, to the report entitled "Defense Essentiality and Foreign Economic Policy: Case Study of the Watch Industry and Precision Skills." In part my concern stems from the fact that the Report, based on but 4 short days of hearings conducted by the Subcommittee on Foreign Economic Policy, undertakes to make sweeping, authoritative pronouncements on such profound and difficult matters as the character of the future war in which we may be engaged, the type of mobilization base needed to prepare for such a conflict, the relative production priorities for defense needs, and the character, availability, and interchangeability of the labor force skilled in the turning out of microprecision products. In part, my concern is with the fact that the committee, on the basis of an exceedingly limited record, has made categorical findings in these difficult areas at the very time the Office of Defense Mobilization and its delegate agencies have underway an extensive investigation of the very same problems as they relate to the domestic jeweled watch industry. I have grave reservations as to the wisdom of such action.

The casual reader, however, may not realize the extent to which the report departs from the record on which it purports to be based. This is of particular concern to me because the two documents bear but little resemblance to each other, and the reader who is unfamiliar with the record could be seriously misled.

Fortunately, Congressman TALLE, a member of the subcommittee, and Congressman THOMAS CURTIS, a member of the full Joint Economic Committee have exposed these grave deficiencies in the report in very able discussions contained in their separate comments on the report. I may also say that one distinguished Member of this body, Senator GOLDWATER, as a member of the Joint Economic Committee, concurs in the view prepared by Congressman CURTIS. Senator FLANDERS has also commented separately in disagreement with the report's unsupported observation that the domestic jeweled watch industry need not be protected as an essential defense industry. The report's astonishing conclusion that military and essential civilian needs for the products of the domestic industry be secured from Switzerland in wartime was too much for them to accept, as I am sure it will be repugnant to all other Americans who have faith in the national security measures which have been followed by both this and the preceding administration.

Why there should be any hesitation on the part of the United States to take adequate measures to preserve a domestic watch industry in deference to the sensibilities of the highly prosperous and extremely vocal Swiss escapes me. Should we fail to look to our own national security for the sake of the Swiss watch industry which operates from the privileged confines of a neutral nation who has refused to join any of the collective efforts of the free world to preserve peace, such as NATO or the United Nations? I am sure that the members of the Senate and the American people would do well to bear in mind that Switzerland's watch industry was a major part of the war production effort of our enemies in World War II. Nor does Switzerland hesitate to contribute today to the military strength of the Soviet Union. In the July 16, 1956, edition of the American Machinist the editor, Burnham Finney, reports that Switzerland in company with the Soviet satellite nations has been supplying strategic machine tools to the Soviet Union for several years. The exact quotation is as follows:

"Machine tools are being imported into the Soviet Union on an exchange basis from Czechoslovakia, which has a long-standing well-developed machine-tool industry; from East Germany, which has a fairly large machine-tool industry; from Switzerland, and other Western European nations. Russia has been securing machines from all of these countries for several years. However, its importation of machines from NATO countries has been limited to certain types of so-called nonstrategic machines. Machine tools on the critical list, especially 'elephant tool,' cannot be shipped to Eastern European countries or to China by any member of NATO."

REJECTION OF FUNDS FOR ISRAELI CULTURAL PROJECT

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a telegram I have received from Moses I. Feuerstein, president of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KEW GARDENS, N. Y.

Senator HOMER CAPEHART,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

In the name of our 3,000 congregations and its 3 million worshippers throughout the United States I should like to thank you for the tireless and ceaseless efforts throughout the past 3 months on behalf of the independent elementary school system in Israel. The great personal interest and unusual efforts are highly appreciated by all of us. In spite of today's disappointment, we know that the battle isn't lost as yet.

MOSES I. FEUERSTEIN,
President, Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, for some inexplicable reason, the Committee on Appropriations' conferees have rejected funds requested by the State Department for the Israeli cultural project. This action jeopardizes Israel's independent elementary school system which assures for us an up-and-coming generation of Israelis who will uphold and create an atmosphere consistent with our point of view.

Although I did everything within my power in behalf of the requested appropriation, I am convinced that the conferees' action was due to a misunderstanding of the project.

In this light, I have urged Secretary of State Dulles to find some way to allocate the necessary money within the executive domain, either from the counterpart mutual security funds or some funds that are left to the discretion of the President.

I consider this a most worthy project, and I intend to follow it through with every means at my command.

FIFTY FACTS FOR FARMERS

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. President, throughout his administration, President Eisenhower has demonstrated a keen awareness of the agricultural situation and a sympathetic understanding of the problems confronting farmers during the period of conversion from a wartime economy to peacetime conditions.

As the President has said: "Farm policy is never a completed task. It must be dynamic, adapting to changing conditions. The Secretary and I agree that we should not go back to old policies that have failed to meet the problems of the past. I was greatly encouraged to learn from the Secretary the several new steps he is exploring for strengthening and broadening the present program. He and I agreed that such steps are necessary in order to speed the time when farm production and markets are in balance at prices that return to our farmers a fair share of the national income. We also agreed that we must, for the future welfare of our people, do still more to promote the proper use of our land so that its productivity may be better and more permanently preserved."

It is my firm conviction that the farmers of America are more interested in a factual presentation of the current farm situation than they are in political demagoguery. I believe further that we can achieve and maintain a free, prosperous, and expanding agriculture under the sound, workable programs inaugurated by this administration. A return to the programs which created the major agricultural problems of the day would only compound our troubles. The alternative to the Eisenhower farm program involves more Government controls and regimentation and less freedom for farmers to make their own management decisions.

In the interest of setting the record straight with respect to the current agricultural situation, I have prepared a statement in the form of an outline entitled "Fifty Facts for Farmers," based largely upon official reports from the United States Department of Agriculture.

I ask unanimous consent that the statement be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MARTIN OF IOWA

FIFTY FACTS FOR FARMERS

1. There is peace.

2. Unprecedented national prosperity provides the broadest domestic market ever for the food and fiber of our farms.

3. Our fast-growing population adds nearly 3 million more American customers for agricultural products each year.

4. Fiscal integrity has been restored. This fiscal year a balanced Federal budget was submitted and the Government operated in the black instead of in the red.

STRENGTH OF AMERICAN AGRICULTURE

5. Per capita income of farm people from all sources was $930 in 1953, $911 in 1954, and $881 in 1955, compared with $828 in 1950, the year the Korean war erupted. Let us remember that after the Democrat administration had been in power more than 5 years and during the last 3 peace-time years preceding our entry into World War II, namely, 1938, 1939, and 1940, the per capita net annual income of our farm population from all sources averaged $250. World War II quickly brought improvements in farm prices and farm income.

6. Farmers' realized net income in the first half of 1956 was running at an annual rate of $11.6 billion. This was about the same as in the first half of 1955 and a half billion dollars higher than the rate during the second half of 1955.

7. The total value of all farm assets—now $163 billion—approaches the alltime record level.

8. Farmland values moved upward by 4 percent in 1956, reaching an alltime high. This evidence points to a basic confidence in the future of American agriculture.

9. While farm real-estate valuations have been climbing, bonds, savings, deposits, and life-insurance policies held by farmers have not been shriveled by inflation. A dollar saved in 1953 is still worth a dollar. A dollar saved in 1940 was worth less than 53 cents by 1952.

10. Three-fourths of the Nation's farmers own their farms today—a record high.

11. The total debt of farmers amounts to only 11 percent of their assets.

12. About 7 out of 10 farmers have no mortgage debt. Of the mortgaged farms, four-fifths are mortgaged for less than 50 percent of the market value, and half for less than 30 percent.

13. Farm foreclosures are near the alltime record low point.

14. Mechanization of farms has made rapid progress.

Year	Tractors	Combines	Corn-pickers	Motor-trucks
1940	1,545,000	190,000	110,000	1,047,000
1950	3,394,000	714,000	456,000	2,207,000
1955	4,345,000	980,000	688,000	2,701,000
1956	4,450,000	1,000,000	700,000	2,800,000

15. Percent of farms:

1950	With electricity	77
1952	With electricity	88
1954	With electricity	92
1955	With electricity	93
1950	With telephones	38
1952	With telephones	40
1954	With telephones	44

16. Years of schooling for rural people have increased:

	Years
Grandparents	7.5
Parents	8.5
Today's young people	10.5

MARKETS ARE EXPANDING

17. Foreign markets for United States farm commodities are being expanded. During the year ended June 30, 1955, shipments of farm products to foreign countries were 7 percent higher than in 1953–54 and 11 percent higher than in 1952–53. For the first 10 months of the current fiscal year farm exports were up another 9 percent over the similar period a year earlier.

18. Per capita consumption of such high protein, protective foods as meat, milk, and eggs, is on the upswing.

Year	Beef and veal	Pork	Poultry	Total meats and poultry	Eggs	Milk fluid
	Lbs.	Lbs.	Lbs.	Lbs.	Number	Lbs.
1930	55	66	17	144	327	337
1940	62	72	17	157	314	331
1950	70	68	24	167	383	349
1955	80	66	26	187	366	352
1956	83	65	28	190	367	354

This trend is of major significance because livestock and livestock products account for 55 percent of farm income.

PRICE AND INCOME

19. In the face of dwindling exports and declining farm prices, the Democrat administration in 1952 failed to invoke acreage controls on 1953 crops of wheat, cotton, and corn. This added heavily to the surpluses inherited by the Eisenhower administration and made it impossible to begin the work of bringing production under control until 1954.

20. The parity ratio, which measures prices received by farmers against those they pay for goods and services, dropped 19 points—from 113 to 94—from the Korean war peak in February 1951 to January of 1953 when the Eisenhower administration took office. In June 1956 it was 86, having recovered 6 points from low of 80. The average for 1955 was 84. Two-thirds of the decline of 27 points since 1951 occurred under the Democrats. Farm prices, on an average, were up 11 percent in the first 6 months of 1956. Let us remember that in the 3 peacetime years just preceding our entry in World War II, parity averaged 78.7 under the Democrat administration then in power. Furthermore, in those same 3 peacetime years the farmer's share of the food dollar averaged 39 cents, whereas for the 3 peacetime years of the Eisenhower administration it averaged 43 cents.

21. If rigid price supports at 90 percent of parity were the answer to the farm problem, there would be no problem today. Virtually all of the decline in agricultural prices and income since 1951 came about while rigid price supports at 90 percent of parity were in effect for the basic commodities.

22. The Eisenhower administration's program of flexible price supports started taking effect with the marketing of the 1955 crops. Levels of support under the flexible program are the highest ever made available to farmers under peacetime agricultural legislation.

23. Basic crops (cotton, wheat, corn, tobacco, rice, peanuts) bring farmers about 24 percent of their income from marketings. Present Government price support investment in basic crops is $7.7 billion. Total investment in inventories and support loans as of May 31, 1956, was $8.5 billion.

24. Basic crops bring farmers 40 percent or more of their income in 11 States. North Carolina, 67 percent; Mississippi, 57 percent; Arkansas, 54 percent; South Carolina, 53 percent; Kentucky, 49 percent; Montana, 48 percent; Louisiana, 44 percent; Arizona, 45 percent; Texas, 42 percent; Tennessee, 42 percent; and Kansas, 40 percent.

25. Basic crops bring farmers 10 percent or less of their income in 15 States and 15 percent or less of their income in 22 States: 0–1 percent, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island; 2–5 percent, New York, Massachusetts, New Jersey, West Virginia, Nevada, Wisconsin; 6–10 percent, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Wyoming, Utah, Florida; 11–15 percent, California, Iowa, Michigan, Oregon, Colorado, Minnesota, Connecticut.

SURPLUS DISPOSAL

26. In a determined effort to reduce the price-depressing surpluses overhanging farmers' markets, the Eisenhower administration has disposed of recordbreaking amounts of Government-owned commodities:

1953	$520,000,000
1954	1,424,000,000
1955	2,115,000,000
1956	2,700,000,000

27. Virtually all of the surplus cottonseed oil stocks have been moved into use. The accumulation reached 1,186 million pounds at the peak in 1954. All Government-owned protein meals have been sold.

28. Government-owned stocks of dairy products have been sharply reduced since 1954.

Butter: From 466 million pounds to 6 million pounds on June 30, 1956.

Cheese: From 436 million pounds to 201 million pounds on June 30, 1956.

Nonfat milk solids: From 599 million pounds to 146 million pounds on June 30, 1956.

29. Varying the level of price support proved effective in the case of dairy products, bringing supplies into better balance with market demands. Since dairy support levels were adjusted in the spring of 1954, consumption of milk, butter, and cheese has gone up. Government purchases of these commodities are down sharply and prices to farmers showed substantial improvement from 1954 to 1956.

30. Overall production and consumption of most farm products are now more nearly in balance than at any time since the height of the Korean war. As surpluses, accumulated under price-support programs, are moved into consumption at home and abroad, market prices for farm commodities will strengthen. Farmers will be free again to produce for use rather than for Government storage.

AGRICULTURE DEPARTMENT ACCOMPLISHMENTS

31. The Department of Agriculture in 1955–56 undertook an emergency pork-buying program to assist farmers in marketing an unusually heavy run of hogs. It vigorously supported the industry's nationwide promotional campaign to increase consumption of pork products. A starching and diversion payment program on potatoes through the marketing year brought a sharp upturn in prices.

32. To assist farmers in making the transition from wartime demands to peacetime markets and conditions, Federal expenditures for programs primarily to stabilize farm prices and income have been the largest ever.

1951	624,000,000
1952	306,000,000
1953	330,000,000
1954	963,000,000
1955	1,350,000,000

33. Grain storage owned or sponsored by Commodity Credit Corporation has been greatly expanded:

	Bushels
1952	750,000,000
1953	925,000,000
1954	1,350,000,000
1955	1,500,000,000

34. More farmers have been helped to acquire family-sized farms and to improve their farms and homes through loan programs. Farmers' Home Administration in fiscal 1955 assisted farmers in buying their farms to the extent of $50.9 million, compared with $29.7 million in the last fiscal year of the preceding administration. The Farmers' Home Administration advanced $147 million in production loans to small farmers in 1954 and $133.5 million in fiscal 1955, compared with $124 million in 1952 and $129 million in 1953. Emergency loans under the Eisenhower administration increased from $44 million in fiscal 1953 to $93.5 million in 1954 and $89.2 million in 1955.

35. Farmers' Home Administration loan service has been expedited through simplification of procedures, elimination of unnecessary forms, and delegation of more authority to the county level.

36. The Great Plains program was developed in 1955—and action is underway. Land classification in the more hazardous soil areas is being speeded up. Maps will be available to serve as a guide to proper land use. The agricultural conservation program now more strongly encourages proper land use and shares the cost of making needed adjustments.

37. The rural electrification program is moving forward vigorously. More power is being used by consumers serviced by REA borrowers than ever before and it is available at the lowest average cost in REA history. Processing of loans has been speeded up to a point where the backlog of applications is down to $90 million, the lowest since World War II.

38. The rural telephone program is being expanded at a record rate. In fiscal 1956 borrowers received loans totaling $81 million, the largest total for any year since this program started in 1949. There has been substantial progress in bringing down the cost of rural telephone facilities.

LEGISLATIVE ADVANCES

39. Farmers are sharing in the Eisenhower administration's tax reduction of 1954. The Republican 83d Congress approved legislation giving a general reduction in taxes on incomes and, especially for farmers, provided accelerated tax writeoffs on grain storage facilities and machinery, and also permitted income-tax deductions for the costs of certain soil-conservation practices.

40. The Republican 83d Congress extended social-security coverage to farm families in 1954. For years farmers had helped to pay the cost of this program but not until the Eisenhower administration have they been permitted to share in the benefits.

41. Budget for agricultural extension and education increased $1,350,000 in the 4 years prior to 1953 under the preceding administration. The increase has been $19,964,000—nearly 15 times as much—in the 4 years of the Eisenhower administration.

42. Agricultural research budget increased $1,984,000 in the 4 years prior to 1953. Research to aid farmers increased $45,795,000 in the past 4 years.

43. The Farm Credit Administration was returned to the management of farmers and again established as an independent system under the Eisenhower administration.

44. Soil-conservation assistance and promotion of soil building have been expanded. There is a closer cooperation between the Soil Conservation Service and the Agricultural Conservation Program Service, and the SCS is furnishing technical help to a record number of districts. The amount of soil conservation applied by farmers in 1955 was 10 percent above 1952.

45. New and expanded water-management programs have been put into effect. Under the Watershed Protection and Flood Prevention Act passed in 1954, and other legislation, 550 local watershed groups in 46 States have applied to the Department for assistance. The SCS has authorized planning in 172 of these watersheds in 45 States. Land treatment and construction operations have been authorized on 16 projects. From October 1, 1954, to November 4, 1955, $21 million in loans was made available under the new Farmers' Home Administration soil and water conservation loan program.

46. New highs in timber production from the national forests have been set with more protection to timber owned by farmers.

47. The number of complete meals served under the national school-lunch program during fiscal year 1956 was approximately 1.6 billion, an increase of 600 million meals over the 1 billion served in fiscal year 1951. Approximately 1.4 billion half pints of milk were served in 62,000 schools participating in the special milk program during fiscal year 1956. The average daily consumption of milk under the program reached a peak of 8.6 million half pints in February.

48. A 15-point program to aid low-income farm families was started in 1955—the rural-development program. Over 27 States have reported long-term rural development type work or plans for special programs. In some 20 States about 40 pilot counties have been officially designated. An additional 9 States are planning to identify areas for pilot programs. The original plan called for at least 50 pilot counties.

49. The Eisenhower administration ended 30 years of inaction on the St. Lawrence seaway. Construction is now going forward on this major project which will provide lower transportation costs for farm products.

50. The Eisenhower administration is vigorously attacking the farm surplus problem on two major fronts. The soil bank is being placed in operation as a means of bringing production into better balance with current needs, and at the same time building up land fertility against future requirements. This program could have been applied on a much broader basis this year had not the Democrat leadership delayed action until farmers had already planted spring crops. Surpluses accumulated under past programs are being moved as rapidly as possible into channels of consumption at home and abroad.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEE ON POST OFFICE AND CIVIL SERVICE TO FILE A REPORT DURING ADJOURNMENT

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be permitted to file its report of an investigation under the authority of Senate Resolution 153 during the period of the adjournment.

I wish it to be understood that the report will be filed only after the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON] and I have considered the matter, or after consultation with the committee staff representative of the Senator from Kansas. I wish it to be plainly understood that I have such an agreement with the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I submit House Concurrent Resolution 275, which relates to H. R. 7619, which was passed by the Senate. The resolution provides only for the correction of certain grammatical errors in the bill. I ask that the resolution be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 7619) to adjust the rates of compensation of the heads of the executive departments and of certain other officials of the Federal Government, and for other purposes, the Clerk of the House is authorized and directed to make the following corrections:

In section 104 (a), strike out subsection (b) following section 104 (a) (4) and insert the said subsection (b) immediately preceding section 105.

In section 118, strike out "116" and insert "117."

In section 9 (d) of the amendment made by section 401, strike out "first or second" and insert in lieu thereof "second or third."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolutiton (H. Con. Res. 275) was considered and agreed to.

COVERAGE OF EMPLOYEES OF GALLAUDET COLLEGE WITHIN FEDERAL EMPLOYEES' GROUP LIFE INSURANCE ACT OF 1954

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, the House has returned H. R. 3489 with the request that section 3 be stricken from the bill, thus leaving only sections 1 and 2. The bill which passed the Senate contained 3 sections, but since the House has stricken section 3, which was an amendment of the Senate, it was thought better to have sections 1 and 2 than to have no bill at all.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and that the amendment of the Senate be disagreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which H. R. 3489 was passed will be reconsidered.

Without objection, the amendment of the Senate will be disagreed to.

Without objection, the bill without the amendment is passed.

DISPOSAL OF REMAINING ASSETS SEIZED UNDER THE TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUMPHREYS of Kentucky in the chair), laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2226) to authorize the Attorney General to dispose of the remaining assets seized under the Trading With the Enemy Act prior to December 18, 1941, which was on page 5, line 19, after "court.", to insert the following:

This subsection shall not apply in the case of any lien, attachment, garnishment, trustee process or execution, or any order or decree of any court, arising out of any action which was pending or had been decided on or before July 1, 1956.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, the House has made a small amendment to S. 2226. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN SHOSHONE AND ARAPAHOE TRIBAL LANDS TO THE UNITED STATES—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3467) to authorize the conveyance of tribal lands from the Shoshone Indian Tribe and the Arapahoe Indian Tribe of the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming to the United States. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUMPHREYS of Kentucky in the chair). The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of today.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Wyoming if the report was unanimously agreed to?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It was agreed to by a majority of the committee of conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

JUAN JOSE MOYA RAMIREZ

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUMPHREYS of Kentucky in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1012) for the relief of Juan Jose Moya Ramirez, which were after line 12, to insert:

SEC. 2. For the purposes of sections 101 (a) (27) (A) and 205 of the Immigration and Nationality Act, the minor child, George Nakamura, shall be held and considered to be the natural-born alien child of Richard H. Johannes, a citizen of the United States; and, notwithstanding the provisions of section 212 (a) (6) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, George Nakamura may be issued a visa and admitted to the United States for permanent residence if he is found to be otherwise admissible under the provisions of such act, under such conditions and controls as the Attorney General, after consultation with the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, may deem necessary to impose: Provided, That a suitable and proper bond or undertaking, approved by the Attorney General, be deposited as prescribed by section 213 of the said act.

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act for the relief of Juan Jose Moya Ramirez and George Nakamura."

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, on July 25, 1955, the Senate passed S. 1012 which cancelled the outstanding deportation proceeding in behalf of the beneficiary of the bill. On July 27, 1956, the House of Representatives passed S. 1012 with an amendment to include the beneficiary of an individual bill (H. R. 11830) which would facilitate the admission into the United States of the minor adopted child of a United States citizen.

The amendment is acceptable, and I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment to S. 1012.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, its reading clerk, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the bill (S. 3227) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to construct, operate, and maintain the Little Wood River reclamation project, Idaho.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3467) to authorize the conveyance of tribal lands from the Shoshone Indian Tribe and the Arapahoe Indian Tribe of the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming to the United States.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12080) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors for navigation, flood control, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 11123) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire certain additional property to be included within the Independence National Historical Park, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 11123) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire certain additional property to be included within the Independence National Historical Park, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

NOMINATION OF POSTMASTER AT INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I invite the attention of the distinguished senior Senator from South Carolina.

I hold in my hand what I presume will be the last list of confirmations of nominations of postmasters. I fail to find approval of the confirmation of the nomination of the postmaster at Indianapolis, Ind., a Mr. Smith.

I simply wish to say that I am extremely disappointed. Mr. Smith is a career man who has been working for the Post Office Department for many, many years. I have received a large number of telephone calls, letters, and telegrams from employees of the post office urging the confirmation of his nomination.

His nomination has been before the committee for many weeks and months. Yet I fail to find that the confirmation of the nomination has been recommended by the committee.

I also have in mind the nominee at Mount Vernon, Ind., where lives a very outstanding Legionnaire, a man who served his country well in World War II, who has been on the list for weeks and weeks. I fail to find either of those two nominations on the list for confirmation.

I feel obliged to make a record in behalf of not only those two gentlemen but others equally important, whose nominations have not been reported by the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

I want the RECORD to show, and I want Senators to know, I am very much disappointed about this. I do not understand why the confirmation of the nomination of a postmaster in the largest city of Indiana, Indianapolis, should be held up for weeks and months and months. He is a career man. He has worked for the post office for many years. In fact, if my recollection serves me correctly, he has worked for the post office 25 years. For some unknown reason the confirmation of the nomination of that gentleman has not been approved by the committee. I want the Senate to know that I do not understand it, and I am sure my colleague from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] does not understand it.

I do not want to go back to the people of Indiana and Indianapolis tomorrow, after the Congress adjourns, without having made the statement I am making here tonight. I do not understand it, and I hope the nominations of the postmaster at Indianapolis and of postmasters at two other places in Indiana will be confirmed in the early part of next year. I do not understand why they have not been confirmed up to now. Perhaps the chairman of the committee can enlighten me as to why they have not been confirmed.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I assume the Senator from South Carolina should like to reply; and, with the understanding that I retain my right to the floor, I yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Indiana, I hope, before we adjourn, to put in the RECORD the number of nominations for postmasters that have been before the committee of this Congress. The Senator will find that number is between 3,000 and 3,500. The Senator will find that this is more than twice as many as were confirmed in the 80th Congress. We make it a rule not to delay confirmations if both Senators from a State do not oppose the confirmation. We have tried to follow that rule.

Mr. CAPEHART. Both Senators from Indiana have approved the nomination of this gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Of course, where the committee finds good and sufficient reason for objecting to a nomination, that is done.

Mr. CAPEHART. I just wanted the RECORD to show that I feel very deeply concerned over the failure to confirm the nomination of this gentleman from Indianapolis.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina subsequently said: Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] has questioned the committee in regard to the confirmation of postmaster nominations. Therefore, I believe I should explain the matter a little more fully.

In the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, the system is as follows: When we receive a postmaster nomination from the President, we send cards to both of the Senators from the State concerned. Until those cards have been returned signed to the committee, the committee does not act on the nomination.

Furthermore, if there is placed in the record any opposition to confirmation of the nomination, we investigate that matter. All that takes some time.

Let me report here on the disposition of nominations received by the committee during the 84th Congress:

During the 1st session of the 84th Congress, the committee received from the President 1,490 nominations. During the 1st session, 1,131 nominations were confirmed. In the last 2 days of the 1st session, the committee received 290 of these 1,490 nominations too late for the committee to act upon.

During the 2d session of the 84th Congress, we received 1,900. We confirmed 1,300. Three hundred of these were received during the last 2 days of this Congress, again too late to act upon.

Now, let us look at the Republican 80th Congress. In the Republican 80th Congress 1,340 nominations were received from President Truman. The 80th Congress confirmed only 520. That gives a clear picture of the situation. The same system was used in both Congresses, the 80th and the 84th.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. I was talking about the city of Indianapolis.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I know.

Mr. CAPEHART. That particular nomination has been here for months. So far as I know, there is nothing against the gentleman who has been nominated. He is a career employee. He has worked for the Post Office Department for 25 years, I believe.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That may be true.

Mr. CAPEHART. I was unable to obtain from any member of the committee anything against the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That may be an isolated instance.

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN PUBLIC WORKS ON RIVERS AND HARBORS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. IVES. I should like to get back to the bill, but I yield to the Senator from Kentucky with the same understanding I previously had.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The Senator from Kentucky seeks recognition for one purpose only, and that is for the purpose of considering a conference report which is at the clerk's desk. The chairman of the committee which handles the bill is present on the floor, and I ask that the Senator from New York yield so that the Senator from New Mexico may submit the conference report.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12080) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors for navigation, flood control, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of today.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President the conferees met this morning and disposed of the matter very satisfactorily. All the projects added to the bill by the Senate were agreed to, and not a single amount was changed.

There were some slight language changes made in the two Senate amendments. I think there is now before the Senate a very good bill.

I move that the Senate agree to the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

LAKE MICHIGAN WATER DIVERSION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3210) to authorize the State of Illinois and the Sanitary District of Chicago, under the direction of the Secretary of the Army, to test, on a 3-year basis, the effect of increasing the diversion of water from Lake Michigan into the Illinois Waterway, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, before I begin, I should like to ask if any other Senator wants the floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I wonder if we may have order. I shall not be very long. That is why I should like to have a little order, if I may, please.

Mr. President, we should be ever mindful of the danger that action by the Congress to benefit one State may have a harmful effect on other States. Certainly that is a possibility—I think a probability—if the pending bill becomes law.

There is no disputing the fact that an additional diversion of water from Lake Michigan into the Illinois Waterway, as provided by this bill, would lower the water levels of Lake Erie and Lake Ontario—in fact, of all the other Great Lakes except Lake Superior. There is dispute over how much the levels would be lowered.

A representative of the United States Army Corps of Engineers, testifying before the House Committee on Public Works in 1953, said that every inch of reduction in the water levels of the Great Lakes could force each vessel plying the Lakes to reduce its load by approximately 100 tons. The effect of this on the total amount of shipping in the Great Lakes could be fantastic, particularly in view of the fact that the Federal Government and the State governments are spending millions of dollars to deepen Great Lakes channels in anticipation of oceangoing traffic resulting from the St. Lawrence seaway project.

It is indisputable that the proposed diversion would reduce the amount of water available for the generation of hydroelectric power at Niagara Falls and in the St. Lawrence River. I fear that the effect would be appreciable—and this at a time when the State of New York is spending $315 million, and Canada a similar amount, to develop the hydroelectric potential in the St. Lawrence River between Ogdensburg and Massena.

This bill is essentially the same as one vetoed by the President in 1954. The President made four points in his memorandum of disapproval. I should like to remind the Senate of three of them, which bear on the effects this legislation might have outside of Illinois.

First. "All methods of control of lake levels and protection of property on the Great Lakes should be considered before arbitrarily proceeding with the proposed increased diversion."

Second. "The diversions are authorized without reference to negotiations with Canada."

Third. "The legitimate interests of other States affected by the diversion may be adversely affected."

In my opinion, the pending bill does not meet any of these objections.

The President pointed out that the International Joint Commission is presently studying the effect which the proposed diversion would have on the entire Great Lakes system. The Commission is expected to have a report ready this year—that is the final report, not the interim report. Even broader studies are being made by the Corps of Engineers, and the report on these studies is not expected before next year. The President, the Department of State, and the Bureau of the Budget have asked the Congress not to adopt the pending legislation until the results of these studies are known.

Mr. President, this legislation did not properly safeguard the interests of States other than Illinois in 1954. The pending bill does not properly safeguard those interests. I urge the defeat of the pending bill.

Mr. President, mention has been made by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, who spoke on this matter, of the interim report, dated June 14, 1955, as I recall; and it has also been stated that the Assistant Director of the Bureau of the Budget, on June 24, 1955, wrote a letter to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Works in opposition to the bill. But the Senator from Wisconsin did not mention the fact that even after that—on July 27, 1955—a letter was written by the State Department in opposition to the bill. In other words, both the State Department and the Bureau of the Budget are on record since the interim report came out.

I have examined the interim report. The distinguished Senator from Illinois very kindly loaned it to me so I could examine it. I cannot find in it anything at all of a final nature.

For the life of me I cannot understand why we should be doing anything of that sort until we have an agreement with Canada on it.

The distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR] seemed to indicate that he thought Canada had nothing to do with this matter. Mr. President, I live in a State bordering two of the Great Lakes—Lake Erie and Lake Ontario—and Canada is on the other side of those two lakes. If the water level of Lake Erie and Lake Ontario is lowered to any appreciable extent—and at this time no one knows how much the level would be lowered by this bill—the bill, if enacted, would very definitely be injurious to the parts of both Canada and New York State and Ohio and the other adjoining States which would be affected.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. IVES. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I do not think we should be responsible for the fact that the Bureau of the Budget and the State Department do not keep up with the official reports. They should have been familiar with the interim report.

Mr. IVES. But it is an interim report, not a final report. I examined it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Apparently the Senator from New York did not hear me say that we had been in telephonic communication with Mr. McWhorter, American Joint Chairman of the International Joint Commission and that he tells us that this is as final a report as we are likely to have. A few minutes ago we received word that he was sending a telegram to me, in care of the Democratic cloakroom, to confirm that.

We are now trying to get him on the telephone, to confirm it. I invite the Senator from New York to get on the telephone, when that call comes through, and talk to Mr. McWhorter personally.

Mr. IVES. However, unless that gentleman makes the statement officially his statement is not official. His report should not be made personally to either me or the Senator from Illinois or anyone esle. His official report should be made only to the official body to which the report is supposed to be made. I would not accept such a thing as being official at all.

Mr. President, somewhere along the line there must be a final report. Even if there is nothing in the report, it must be final. He has not made a final report. The report he has made very obviously is not a final one. It is on the basis of that report that objection has come from the Department of State and the Bureau of the Budget. I am sure that both those agencies of the Government have very open minds on this subject. I can understand the attitude of the State Department, where Canada is concerned. I happen to be a neighbor of Canada, and I have quite a great deal of solicitude for that Dominion.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield at this point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASTORE in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. IVES. I yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is perfectly true that Canada is on the other side of Lake Erie and Lake Ontario. But I hope the Senator from New York is sufficiently acquainted with the geography of the United States to know that Canada has nothing to do with Lake Michigan. I invite the Senator from New York to come to the map which is on display on this side of the Chamber, and I shall show him what that situation is.

Mr. IVES. I do not need to go nearer the map; I am farsighted, and can see it from where I stand. However, I am quite familiar with that part of the world.

I point out that the waters of Lake Michigan definitely affect the waters in the other lakes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Does the Senator from New York quarrel with Elihu Root? I thought that at Hamilton College they swear by Elihu Root.

Mr. IVES. Of course, we swear by him; but we do not always agree with him. There is a big difference between swearing by a person and always agreeing with him.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, in connection with the pending bill, I believe there is a great deal of confusion in the minds of many persons.

Frankly, I do not claim to be an expert on matters of lake transportation or matters involving the flow of waters which will generate power.

However, reports which have come to me from various sources would indicate—although I am not quite as completely convinced—that there would be a loss both to navigation and to the power resources of the various States and communities which are served by the waters of the Great Lakes.

I have received many protests about the bill from the lakeside cities of my State, as well as from other communities which may be affected by the lessened height of the waters in Lake Michigan and the other lakes.

Mr. President, because of the protests I have received from responsible persons and from great communities, such as Buffalo, the second largest city in my State, I cannot support the bill.

I shall not take the time of the Senate at this late hour to discuss the bill in greater detail; but I wish to point out that in my opinion there are grave doubts as to the effect of the proposed diversion of water from Lake Michigan.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a telegram from the executive vice president of the Buffalo Chamber of Commerce; and a letter, addressed to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Works, by Mr. Robert Moses, chairman of the Power Authority of the State of New York.

Let me say that in addition to that telegram and letter and other letters, I have received a protest from the City Council of the city of Buffalo.

There being no objection, the telegram and letter were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JULY 6, 1956.

The Honorable HERBERT H. LEHMAN,
United States Senator,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Lake Michigan Water Diversion bill being actively considered by Senate Public Works Committee contains elements that may adversely affect navigation in the port of Buffalo and hydroelectric power development at Niagara Falls. Channel depths at Buffalo are from 2 to 6 feet less than authorized connecting lake channels and because of rock bottoms would be extremely costly to deepen further. Ships carrying ore and stone would have to sacrifice up to 100 tons of cargo for each inch of lower water levels in Buffalo Harbor. Buffalo Chamber of Commerce is opposed to any diversion that will reduce navigating depths and the volume of water for hydro power purposes at Niagara. Bill should at least be amended to specifically direct Corps of Engineers to study impact of diversion upon harbors and the Niagara Power project in the 3-year test period.

CHARLES C. FICHTNER,
Executive Vice President, Buffalo Chamber of Commerce.

POWER AUTHORITY OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,
New York, N. Y., July 29, 1955.

Hon. DENNIS CHAVEZ,
Chairman, Committee on Public Works,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CHAVEZ: It is with great concern, as to its effect on our St. Lawrence power project, that I notice H. R. 3210 has been passed by the House of Representatives and is now before your committee. The title of this bill is "An act to authorize the State of Illinois and the Sanitary District of Chicago, under the direction of the Secretary of the Army, to test, on a 3-year basis, the effect of increasing the diversion of water from Lake Michigan into the Illinois Waterway and for other purposes."

As you know, this bill would provide for a 3-year test on the effect of diverting an additional annual average flow of 1,000 cubic feet of water per second from Lake Michigan into the Illinois Waterway. It is said the study will provide information upon which to ascertain whether or not such increase, or possibly even more, should be made permanent.

I should like to point out one effect, which is of major concern to us, of such an increase in diversion should it be made permanent. This increase would result in a loss to us of 730,000 acre-feet of water per year which could be used for power generation in our St. Lawrence powerplant. Financially, this represents a minimum of $144,000 per year loss in revenue, or if capitalized at 3 percent per annum over the term of our Federal Power Commission license from the commencement of operation, would amount to approximately $13,360,000.

The St. Lawrence project has been successfully financed by a bond issue backed by the revenue to be derived from the sale of power and without the use of public credit. Construction is now well under way. The rates for the sale of power to cover costs of financing, operation, and maintenance have been fixed on the basis of anticipated power generation resulting from historical streamflows. Diversion to the Chicago Sanitary District and the State of Illinois of an annual flow of 1,500 cubic feet per second as validated by the Supreme Court in 1930 is now taking place. If we are deprived of the use of an additional annual average flow of 1,000 cubic feet of water per second, this sizable loss, translated into kilowatt-hours and dollars of revenue, will in the end have to be made up out of the pockets of the power users.

Furthermore, the effect this increased diversion might have on the capital cost of the St. Lawrence power and seaway project as a result of increased dredging costs for navigation and channel improvements has apparently not been given consideration in the discussion of this bill.

While we are not yet authorized to construct the Niagara project, the effect of the additional diversion on this development should not be overlooked. The quantity of flow at Niagara will have a power value of about four times that at the St. Lawrence project.

The bill before you has aptly been referred to as a "foot in the door" proposition which would lead to a permanent diversion of water affecting the entire Great Lakes area. We, therefore, respectfully urge that this bill be defeated.

Sincerely,

ROBERT MOSES,
Chairman.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, in case any Members of the Senate tuned in late on the pending bill, this is a proposal to increase, by a thousand cubic feet per second, the diversion of water from Lake Michigan by the State of Illinois and the Sanitary District of Chicago, for a number of purposes, including navigation and sanitary purposes, under the direction and control of the Army engineers, with limits provided in the bill, so that there will be no abuses.

This problem has been with us for a long time. Exactly 3 years ago, on adjournment night at 11 o'clock, the Senate approved a similar bill; and I would be less than fair if I did not say that the President of the United States vetoed that bill. That distressed me somewhat. It disconcerted me, because President Eisenhower called me from Denver and said, "Everett, I am terribly disconcerted about having to veto this bill, but, of course, I must depend on the advice I receive from the Government agencies and Cabinet members." So he vetoed the bill.

This bill is substantially similar, except that it provides for a study for a limited period of 3 years. There can be no diversion beyond 5,000 cubic feet per second as a maximum, and the bill provides for an average annual diversion of 2,500 cubic feet per second. That is a thousand cubic feet over what the sanitary district is diverting at the present time.

The problem is very simple. The sanitary district is a quasimunicipal corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois. It must make provision for the treatment of sewage, and for sanitary purposes, for the equivalent of 7 million people.

The thing we quarrel about most is that a neighboring government has a veto over the health and navigation of our own people.

I share with my distinguished colleague from New York solicitude for and interest in our Dominion neighbors. However, I am not at all sure that they have been so sensitive and delicate about our interests, because if a report on the Columbia River Basin is finally made public it will be found that the Canadians made a determined effort to divert water on the Columbia River.

We are trying to accomplish our purpose by orderly processes. We think we need the water for sanitary purposes. We think we need it for navigation in the Illinois River, which is a link in the whole waterway system, embracing the St. Lawrence Seaway, tying it with the States, the Mississippi River, and the Gulf of Mexico. That is the reason we make this plea.

We believe that the Senate should approve the bill. There are some reasons for it; and I shall get around to the objections assigned in the veto message some 3 years ago.

First, let me say that after the decree of the Supreme Court, and the findings of Charles Evans Hughes as special master a generation ago, Chicago completed its treatment works. I fussed at the sanitary district years ago, when I was a Member of Congress and had a constituency on the Illinois River. I did not like the idea of Chicago sewage going down our river. I did not like the idea of the oxygen being taken out of the water, destroying the fish life.

The records of the Department of Commerce will show that at one time the Illinois River was second to the Columbia River in fish production. Sewage has destroyed it, largely because it took the oxygen out of the water. We are trying to repair that difficulty. Chicago completed its treatment works at a cost of $315 million. No raw sewage now goes through the sanitary canal or the Illinois River, but the water which is used in the treatment, what is called the effluent, obviously goes into the canal and into the river. The trouble is that that water, which is clear, is charged with a great deal of nitrogen, and is deficient in free oxygen.

There is only one way to repair the difficulty, and that is to take more fresh water from Lake Michigan to increase the quantity of free oxygen in the Illinois River. That is the first thing. The second thing is that we had a sanitary problem. We believe that under the direction of the Army engineers we are entitled to a 3-year study. That is all the bill provides for.

This Government, with the approval of the Congress, has built dams and structures in the Illinois River for purposes of navigation, and to maintain a 9-foot channel. When that was done the tonnage on the river was only about 200,000 tons a year. That tonnage has gone up to 21 million tons a year. We believe we are entitled to a 3-year study to see what the extra water would do so far as navigation is concerned.

We believe also that we are entitled to this study to see what damage is caused by low waters. The level goes up and down, on a cyclical basis, but the cost estimates before the Public Works Committee, as the very distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR] can testify, run as high as $100 million.

All we ask for is a 3-year study under the direction, control, and supervision of the Army engineers.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. IVES. Is not the Senator asking for something more? Is he not asking for an additional diversion of 1,000 average cubic feet per second, with a top level of 5,000 cubic feet per second, at a time when the Great Lakes are at their lowest point, and when the effect would be most disastrous, at least on Lake Erie and Lake Ontario?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I entirely disagree with my distinguished colleague from New York. I used to be a drainage contractor on the Illinois River. I know something about those waters. The reason why we established the 5,000-foot limit is that in the spring season, when the snows are melting and there are unprecedented spring rains, we get most of the water. That is the period of flood seasons on the middlewestern water courses. I recall the time when it was alleged that as much as 20,000 cubic feet was diverted at one time or another out of the lake.

We say, as a safeguard, that not more than 5,000 cubic feet per second at any one time can be taken out of Lake Michigan, no matter what the average is.

Mr. IVES. Am I to understand that the Senator from Illinois disagrees with his colleague from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS]? The Senator's colleague made the statement that the water is to be taken out when the lake is at its lowest level.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not know what my colleague said, but I know what my experience was over a period of years as a drainage contractor. I know a little something about the water level. Regardless of what my colleague may have said, I think I know a little something about water level, based on experience; and I have a pretty fair idea of what this is all about.

Mr. KERR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, who took the testimony on the bill.

Mr. KERR. Is it not a fact that no part of Lake Michigan forms a part of the boundary between this country and Canada?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; I was coming to that. The distinguished chairman has elicited the fact that the nearest place on Lake Michigan to the Dominion of Canada is 30 miles.

Mr. KERR. Is it not a fact that Lake Michigan is as free from a veto power of our sovereignty, and our policy with reference to it, as it is with reference to any other inland lake, be it in South Dakota, Iowa, or Oklahoma?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The Senator is absolutely correct. Lake Michigan is entirely within the boundary of the United States of America. We are permitting another government to exercise a veto power on the navigation, health, and general well-being of millions of people in the sovereign State of Illinois.

Mr. KERR. Would we not, if we took that position as a national policy, be surrendering jurisdiction over an inland body of water with reference to which there is no possible basis for a claim of jurisdiction by any foreign government?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Exactly so. That matter was made emphatically clear under very skillful questioning by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. KERR. Did I not ask the representative of the State Department to give us a brief for any basis in fact whereby Canada could possibly claim such jurisdiction?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is correct. I was in the committee room when the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma undertook to get that information into the record.

Mr. KERR. I say to the Senator from Illinois that that information has not been furnished by the State Department.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That fact, I believe, speaks for itself, and it ought to be persuasive on the Members of the Senate.

Mr. KERR. Is it not a fact that the level of Lake Michigan, on the basis of the records of the Weather Bureau and meteorological authorities, varies as much as 5 to 6 feet?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is correct.

Mr. KERR. Is it not a fact that the contemplated diversion would influence it only by one-half of 1 inch?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is correct, and very little more, if that. I was going to implement that by reading a portion of the interim report of the International Joint Commission and the International Lake Ontario Board of Engineers, dated June 14, 1955. They say:

> The maximum temporary reduction in lake levels would be about five-eighths of an inch.

Some of the cities along the Great Lakes have been complaining that there would be a distressing effect upon navigation. Yet they cannot conclusively establish that such a modest reduction in lake levels, whether it is Erie or Huron, or whether it is Ontario or Michigan, would have any appreciable effect upon navigation. It seems to me that that case falls.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to my colleague from Ohio.

Mr. BRICKER. Does the Senator know that in the case to which he referred a moment ago, under the commissionership of Justice Hughes, the engineers testified that the loss in the lake level of Ontario and Erie of that diversion would be between 3 and 4 acres.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; but that is a fact of more than 25 or 20 years ago.

Mr. BRICKER. But the effect on the level is just the same.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But the testimony indicated a rise and fall of lake levels; so that there is no appreciable effect on navigation.

Mr. BRICKER. The rise and fall of the lake level is due to a cyclical period which has been going on for as long a time as records have been kept. If the level of the lake is lowered by 3 inches at one time, commerce in my State is affected; and if the level of the lake is lowered 4 inches at another time, commerce in my State is likewise affected. Therefore it is not the average that counts, but the amount of the diversion which lowers the level at any given time. Whether it is high or low, it is bound to affect commerce in the lower lakes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. All I know is that the International Board appeared before the committee, and the interim report of the Ontario Board was before the committee, and with all the figures adduced there was no showing that it was going to have any appreciable effect upon navigation.

On the one side we have that factor. And of course there is the power generation at Niagara; but the amount of power which might be lost is almost infinitesimal when we compare it with the entire wattage that is generated. On the other side we have the health and well-being of literally millions of people. We have no other place to go, Mr. President.

Finally there was no quarreling, of course, when Canada, for instance, on some projects in her territory was either taking water out of the Great Lakes Basin or putting water into it. My colleagues from Illinois pursued that matter at considerable length. I am referring to the Ogoki project.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. BRICKER. I believe the Senator said a moment ago that the city of Chicago had complied with the mandate in regard to the construction of the sewage disposal program, which does present an injurious effect on the health of the people of Chicago by the effluent from the disposal plant.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; but my distinguished friend forgets that the sanitary district, in area and in equivalent population it must serve, is growing year after year, and that it embraces suburban communities. Hence there is a growing need for water in order to meet that augmented problem.

Mr. BRICKER. The Senators mean to say, in other words, that the problem is growing so acute that the city of Chicago and the suburban areas are unable to keep up with it. Is that correct?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I mean that we must have water to take care of it, in order to wash it out and get rid of the effluent and redissolve the effluent, and in that way get enough free oxygen so as not to destroy a fine stream like the Illinois River. That is one of the many facets in the picture I am now emphasizing.

Mr. BRICKER. If the Senator will read the record he will find that the problem is not serious at all since Chicago has complied with the mandate for the construction of the processing plants.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I agree with that; but I remind my good friend from Ohio, who was assistant attorney general of Ohio when this question was brought before the courts, that Chicago had to reverse the course of the Chicago River, because previously the result had been that hundreds and hundreds of people had died from typhoid fever. Certainly we should not be expected to wait until there is a recurrence of another calamity or another disaster. We are being forehanded in the interest of the health of millions of people.

Mr. BRICKER. I believe the Senator said that there is no imperiling of the health of the people at the present time, because the effluent is not dangerous to health.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Obviously it is necessary to have water with which to wash the effluent out into the stream, and at the same time to be mindful of the interests of the people who live along the water course, and who also have an interest in this matter.

Mr. BRICKER. Does the Senator suggest to the Senate that 1,000 extra cubic feet per second would be sufficient and adequate to take care of those things?

Mr. DIRKSEN. My friend from Ohio puts his finger on it. The bill specifically provides for a 3-year study under the direction of the Corps of Army Engineers. Once the 3-year period has lapsed, that is the end of the effective time of the bill.

Mr. BRICKER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to my friend from Wisconsin.

Mr. WILEY. I wonder whether the Senator from Illinois is familiar with the report of Donald R. Belcher, Assistant Director of the Bureau of the Budget, in which he said:

> The President stated in his memorandum of disapproval that reasonable opportunity to complete these surveys should be afforded before legislative action is undertaken.

The Senator spoke about an interim report. Someone has said that in the course of a few months the final report would be made. Why would it not be well to wait until the final report has been made and then determine what action to take, instead of giving authority to the district, as the bill provides, to use no water during high water?

The bill provides that the "Secretary of the Army shall not allow any water to be directly diverted from Lake Michigan to flow into the Illinois waterway during times of flood"; but in low water may use up to 5,000 cubic feet in 1 second, which is the equivalent of this program.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The reason for not waiting is that the final report cannot change the intermediate report so far as the finding of a figure is concerned as related to the lake level.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. DOUGLAS. On that very point I may say that for the third time this evening I have been in telephonic communication with Mr. McWhorter, the American chairman of the joint commission. I asked the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] to come and listen to the conversation, but he did not feel that he ought to do so. Mr. McWhorter informed me that the final report, which is now under preparation, will show the same result as the interim report, namely, that the maximum effect on the lake level of Erie and Ontario will be three-eighths of 1 inch.

The maximum effect on Lake Michigan and Lake Huron will be five-eighths of an inch.

A telegram is coming here which I expect to have delivered at any moment, which will confirm my statement—and here it is. [Laughter.]

It is as follows:

> The report on the effect of diversion of an additional 1,000 cubic feet per second of water at Chicago as shown in the interim report of the International Lake Ontario Engineering Board is expected to be exactly the same as will be shown in the final report of the Board. You will recall that I testified 2 years ago that the effect of the diversion would not lower Lake Ontario as much as half an inch.

That telegram is signed by Roger B. McWhorter, Acting Chairman, International Joint Commission.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. Will the Senator read that over again? It refers to 1,000 cubic feet. The Senator wants 5,000 cubic feet in times of low water.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It will take many years for this average of 1,000 cubic feet to have the effect of three-eighths of an inch on Erie and Ontario.

Mr. WILEY. That is not what I mean. Please read the telegram again.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, this bill in specific language provides that the average annual diversion will not be 5,000 cubic feet, but 2,500 cubic feet per second. The language is found on page 2 of the bill, and I read it for the edification of my distinguished friend from Wisconsin:

> In addition to all domestic pumpage, at a rate providing a total annual average of not more than 2,500 cubic feet of water per second.

Mr. WILEY. Let me make my point, and then I think the Senator will understand it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I understand it completely.

Mr. WILEY. When the Senator says we will not take any water at high water, it means that when there is low water we will take 5,000 cubic feet. The distinguished Senator from New York stated what that amount would be in terms of tonnage.

Mr. IVES. It would be 100 tons per inch.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I have heard talk about the plimsol line which is marked on vessels to show how much cargo they should carry, but I have not found anyone who could come up with figures to show there is a line so far as cargoes on lake vessels are concerned. The chief of the port authority undertook to come before the committee, and, in my judgment, he made the case pretty clear. He is not only identified with the port authority, but he was a skipper in his own right, and he spoke from a wealth of experience.

Mr. President, I am not disposed to detain the Senate on this matter. I think we should get around to a vote. We have made our case, and I sincerely hope the Senate will have some regard for the rights of the people of Illinois and permit no neighboring country to veto our health needs, our navigation needs, and the amount of water we must take out of Lake Michigan.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield for a question?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. BRICKER. This matter came up suddenly this evening. I did not know the bill was coming up at all. Where is the record of testimony taken before the committee? Are there copies of it here?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Testimony was taken 3 years ago, and testimony was recently taken over a period of time.

Mr. BRICKER. Is it printed and available to the Senate?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not know. I know that when the committee was in session I appeared before the committee.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The official transcript of the testimony before the Senate Public Works Committee is available and I have a copy with me which I am happy to furnish to and do now deliver to the Senator from Ohio. These records have been available to all who were interested in following this legislation closely.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum. I should like to have a live quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Gore	McNamara
Allott	Green	Millikin
Anderson	Hayden	Monroney

Mr. CLEMENTS. I announce that the Senator from Texas [Mr. DANIEL] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] are absent on official business.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. WELKER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. POTTER] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business as a member of the American Battle Monuments Commission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum is present.

Before the Senator from Vermont begins his remarks, the Chair requests that the visitors in the galleries, those who are members of the Senate staff, and the Members of the Senate cooperate in the last few hours of the session so that several items of important business which still remain to be considered may be concluded.

The Chair does not wish to insist on order as the various Senators speak on the matters which are before the Senate, except when it becomes necessary. But it is important, if the conclusion of the Senate's business is to be reached tonight, that order be maintained.

The Chair will appreciate the cooperation of all who are in the Senate Chamber as we proceed.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, at the beginning of the debate, when the Senator from Vermont undertook to point out how the diversion of the waters which ultimately flow to the St. Lawrence River over Niagara Falls, through the Massena power development, and thence to the Atlantic Ocean would be injurious to his State and possibly would jeopardize the 100,000 kilowatts of power which Vermont expects to receive from the power development on the St. Lawrence River, the Senator from Vermont was referred to as being greedy for undertaking to protect the 100,000 kilowatts of power to which his State is clearly entitled. I am simply wondering who is greedy.

I think we have before us an unparalleled example of greed in a great city, which has probably reached the limit of its growth and is undertaking to continue to grow uneconomically at the cost of all the rural areas of 10, 15, or possibly 20 States.

Only 2 years ago Congress authorized the development of navigation on the St. Lawrence River from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic Ocean. This navigational project will mean much to most of the great States of the Union, from Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Wyoming, Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Iowa to all the States to the eastward.

We are now informed that if the water is diverted, so as to lower the level of the lakes even 1 inch, 2 inches, or 4 inches—we do not know how much it will be—the shipping on the Great Lakes and in the St. Lawrence River will be adversely affected. No one seems to know how much or to what extent; but we are told that the shipping will be adversely affected.

I do not know to what extent the power development in the power-short Northeast will be affected. But I do know that the bill permits the diversion of 5,000 second-feet of water during the low-water period. This amount of water would generate a tremendous amount of power as it went over Niagara Falls and over the 256-foot drop in the St. Lawrence River. It would not be as if that amount were diverted from high water. The diversion would come out of the firm power which is to be generated at Niagara Falls and in Massena Rapids.

This would be a terrible calamity for the States which need the power desperately. We do not have atomic energy plants in our region. Neither do we have natural gas from which to generate power at a price at which we can afford to use it. We must depend on hydropower.

Is there anyone who can say honestly that we who live in the northeastern section of the United States are greedy if we try to protect our right to have power?

I have noted one thing. I think the Senators from Illinois have given the finest argument for the decentralization of population and the decentralization of industry which I have heard for a long time. They freely admit in their arguments that the great city of Chicago has reached its maximum growth. They admit that the sewage of that city has reached such great proportions that it would take the waters of the Great Lakes to purify it and to keep the city clean.

When a city has reached the limit of its growth, why should we then undertake to despoil Minnesota, to despoil upper New York, to despoil the rural areas of all the other States, so that that city may grow bigger and bigger and bigger, even though that growth may be uneconomical? That is no way to create a stronger country. There are plenty of other places in the world where people can live and business can be established besides Chicago.

It has been said that Canada can turn water south into the Great Lakes to make up for what Chicago takes out to carry the sewage away from that great city. But the water which Canada would turn into the Great Lakes, as I pointed out, cannot be used to generate power for Northeastern United States.

The Senator from Vermont has been called greedy tonight because he is attempting to protect his own State. My goodness. We are entitled to that little 100,000 kilowatts of electricity. But I maintain that the city of Chicago and the State of Illinois are not entitled to ravage the countryside to the north of them by taking waters from the Great Lakes to wash away their sewage. Let them make less sewage in Chicago. [Laughter.] Let them decentralize and get out of there. The city is big enough. Both Senators from Illinois have admitted by their arguments that the city of Chicago has reached the limit of its growth and has even gone beyond it.

So why not let Minnesota, Michigan, Wisconsin, New York, Ohio, and all the other areas in the Great Lakes Basin have that to which they are entitled, instead of attempting to rob them in this fashion so that one great city may become greater?

Mr. President, I said I would speak at length on this subject. I could speak at considerable length, but it would merely be a reiteration of what I have said. I hope the Senate will give me the courtesy of a record vote on the bill so that we may see how each of us stands.

SEVERAL SENATORS. No! No!

Mr. AIKEN. I hear several Senators say "No." Let us see in a record vote how the Senators stand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont has asked for the yeas and nays. Is there a second?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, I think there are some facts which the Senator from Vermont and the Senate should note. He is saying that the proposed diversion will imperil the 100,000 kilowatts which Vermont will get from the St. Lawrence. I spent some days in the St. Lawrence area last November. The generating capacity on the American side of the St. Lawrence is approximately 1 million kilowatts. Is that not correct?

Mr. AIKEN. It is about 700,000 kilowatts at Massena.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Vermont is to get 100,000 of the 700,000 kilowatts.

Mr. AIKEN. That is correct.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That leaves quite a margin. Let us see what the International Joint Commission has said about the reduction of power which will be caused by the proposed additional diversion. I read from page 12:

> The maximum reduction in dependable capacity which could occur at Canadian and United States plants would be 2,600 and 2,750 kilowatts, respectively. These maximum reductions could occur only in conditions of critical low flow during December and October, 1961, for Canadian and United States plants, respectively.

In other words, the Senator from Vermont is objecting to a decrease of 2,600 kilowatts out of 800,000 kilowatts. Whether that is greed or plain misinformation, I shall let the Senate decide.

Mr. AIKEN. I do not know where the information read by the Senator from Illinois comes from, but if anybody has said that 2,500 second-feet of water falling at Niagara and over the Massena Rapids do not generate over 2,600 kilowatts, he is greatly mistaken.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I said the diversion would reduce the capacity only by that amount.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, for the first time I have seen the typewritten record. There seems to have been presented to us no printed record at all. I did not know the bill was coming up, but it is interesting to go through the record. No reference has been made to certain interesting matters in it.

I see, first of all, that the attorney general of my State appeared before the committee. I see also that the mayor of Manitowoc also appeared. I see also that the city attorney of Green Bay appeared. I see that Curtis Lee Smith, president of the chamber of commerce, appeared.

HOUSING ACT OF 1956— CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Ohio may yield the floor for the purpose of having the Senate consider the conference report on the housing bill, H. R. 11742.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I am very happy to yield for that purpose.

HOUSING ACT OF 1956—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11742) to extend and amend laws relating to the provision and improvement of housing and the conservation and development of urban communities, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of today.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, this is a bill which has been of considerable interest to all of us. I wish to say that we have worked in the conference all day long, and I believe the Senate should feel pleased over the results.

I should like to explain rather briefly this rather long bill.

FHA's title I program of insured loans for home repairs and improvements was extended for 3 years. Authority was granted for the FHA Commissioner to waive the requirement that a new house be occupied for 6 months before the owner can obtain a title I loan. The maximum loan for single-family structures was increased from $2,500 to $3,500; and for multifamily structures from $10,000 to $15,000. The FHA Commissioner is authorized at his discretion to increase the repayment period for title I loans on single-family structures from 3 to 5 years. A new interest rate formula is provided for title I loans consisting of interest equivalent to 5 percent discount on amounts up to $2,500 and 4 percent discount on amounts over $2,500.

In order to meet the growing need for rental housing the Senate conferees agreed to a provision which increases the maximum loan-to-value ratio on FHA insured rental housing loans from 80 percent to 90 percent.

The bill reduces from 65 to 50 percent the proportion of veterans in a cooperative group required to make the cooperative eligible for the more liberal terms accorded a veteran cooperative. It would also permit World War I veterans to be counted in determining the percentage of veteran members of a cooperative group. The FHA Commissioner is authorized to increase the maximum loan amount available to FHA-insured cooperative projects by $1,000 per room in high-cost areas. A new provision was added to section 213 of the National Housing Act which would permit a mortgagor-sponsor approved by the Commissioner to obtain an FHA-insured mortgage upon certification to the Commissioner that the completed housing project will be sold to a cooperative group. Such a sponsor would be entitled to a mortgage not to exceed 85 percent of the Commissioner's estimate of replacement cost of the property. When the property is completed, it may be sold to an eligible cooperative group which will, of course, be entitled to receive the insured mortgage under the terms and conditions available to cooperative groups. If a mortgagor-sponsor takes advantage of these new provisions and fails to sell the completed property or project to a cooperative group, as defined in the bill, he shall not thereafter be eligible for any additional FHA-insured loans under this section.

The bill also contains a provision to encourage the trade-in house program. This provision permits an existing house to have the same loan-to-value ratio for FHA mortgage insurance as the amount available for a new house, with a safeguard to prevent home builders from avoiding FHA inspections.

The bill contains a provision to increase from $7,000 to $12,000 the maximum loan amount under the FHA insurance program for disaster housing loans. This provision is identical to S. 2854 which passed the Senate in April.

In order to continue the normal FHA insurance programs, the bill provides $3 billion of insurance authorization beginning July 1, 1956. This amount includes any insurance authorization which was unused on that date.

The bill contains a number of new features designed to activate the FHA section 221 program to provide housing for families displaced from urban renewal areas. It is the purpose of these amendments to implement a much-needed program which to date has been largely ineffective. The maximum loan for section 221 mortgages is increased from $7,600 to $9,000, and from $8,600 to $10,000 in high-cost areas. The bill permits the FHA Commissioner to insure mortgages amounting to 100 percent of the value on both sales and rental housing, except that with respect to sales housing the borrower must pay $200 cash which may include settlement costs, taxes, and other closing costs. The maximum maturity on section 221 loans is increased from 30 to 40 years on both sales and rental housing. If the mortgagor is a private nonprofit corporation not subject to State or local regulations, the mortgagor must be regulated by the FHA Commissioner.

The Senate bill contained a provision authorizing the FHA to permit up to 10 percent in profit for sponsors of housing to be built in urban renewal areas. The House bill contained a similar provision, except that it would require an allowance of 10 percent for profit unless the FHA Commissioner certifies by regulation that a lesser profit is warranted. After careful consideration of the necessity to replace housing demolished in slum areas, and considering the minor differences between the two bills, the Senate conferees agreed to the provision in the House bill. Except for certain minor additions, the conference bill contains the other provisions on cost certification from the original Senate bill.

The House bill would have extended the military housing program to September 30, 1959, and the Senate bill would have extended the program until December 31, 1957. The conference bill compromised these dates and extends the military housing program until June 30, 1958. The FHA insurance authorization for military housing was increased to $2.3 billion, which was the amount contained in the Senate bill. The House bill raised the average unit cost of military housing from $13,000 to $16,500. The Senate conferees agreed to this increase with a provision that the $16,500 ceiling must include the cost of equipment built into the houses. This provision has the practical effect of reducing the amount originally provided in the House bill.

The acquisition of military housing constructed under the so-called Wherry Act was an item of serious disagreement in conference. I believe that the provisions contained in the conference bill should satisfy the Senate. The bill provides that where a new military housing project is to be constructed, the Department of Defense must acquire any Wherry Act project at or near the same military installation. The formula for acquisition is exactly the same as that agreed upon by the Armed Services Committees in the military construction bill. This calls for negotiations between the Government and the owner, and for condemnation proceedings if negotiations fail. This should prevent overbuilding of military housing under title VIII of the National Housing Act, and should provide a fair means for the Government to purchase existing projects.

The bill would permit a third party to pay downpayments for a mortgagor 60 years of age or older who buys a house with an FHA-insured loan. The National Housing Act is amended to permit more liberal financing of rental housing designed specifically for elderly persons (90 percent of replacement cost) if the mortgagor is a nonprofit organization and if the entire property or project is specifically designed for the use of elderly persons. The bill also directs the HHFA to establish an advisory committee on matters relating to housing for the elderly.

Although no public housing units are provided specifically for the elderly, the bill does contain some provisions designed to assist elderly persons in obtaining a fair share of the public housing units constructed or to be constructed under the regular program. Thus, a single person aged 65 or over would be permitted to occupy a public housing unit if he meets other requirements. Elderly persons may receive preference in public housing units and units may be designed for the occupancy of elderly persons. An elderly person is not required as are other persons to come from unsafe or insanitary dwellings in order to be eligible. The cost ceiling for public housing units designed for the elderly is established at $2,250 per room in contrast with the cost ceiling of $1,750 per room for regular units.

Most of the provisions regarding the Federal National Mortgage Association, which appeared in the original Senate bill, are retained in the conference bill. The most significant change concerns the purchase of mortgages under the special assistance programs of FNMA. The Senate bill required that such mortgages should be purchased at par. The House would not agree with this provision, and the conference bill provides that for 1 year these mortgages must be purchased at not less than 99 percent of par. This is the purchase price presently established under administrative discretion.

Most of the Senate provisions concerning the Slum Clearance and Urban Renewal program were retained. The Senate conferees accepted a provision to increase the ceiling on urban renewal funds which may be made available in any one State, in order to avoid the possibility that this program would not be curtailed in States having the greatest need for slum clearance and urban renewal. The conference bill also amends the provision providing assistance for families or businesses forced to give up their homes or buildings as a result of slum clearance. The Senate bill provided that this compensation could include an estimate of loss of goodwill in the case of businesses. The House conferees were adamant that this provision be deleted, and the conference bill does not permit allowances for the loss of goodwill.

In the field of public housing the bill authorizes 35,000 units for 1957 and 1958. The unused balances for 1956 may also be used in any succeeding year. These units are to be made available only to communities with a workable program. At the present time, only 10 percent of the funds available for public housing are permitted to be expended in any one State. This 10 percent limitation is increased to 15 percent. In addition, a provision of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act of 1953 restricting the number of public housing units which may be started in any one year is repealed.

The provisions of the Senate bill concerning the disposition of certain farm-labor camps were retained with several amendments including a provision that no camp in Florida may be sold unless the proceeds are used to provide additional units of housing for farm laborers.

The provisions in the original Senate bill concerning the transfer or sale of defense-housing projects were administration proposals. The conference bill retains these provisions with several amendments and additions to which there has been no objection.

The conference bill contains an increase of $250 million in the loan fund for college housing. The House insisted that college housing loans should not be extended to divinity schools, and this provision is not in the bill.

Title V of the Housing Act of 1949 is amended to extend for 5 years the farm-housing program authorized by that title. This provision extends the program to June 30, 1961, authorizes $450 million for farm-housing loans, $10 million for contributions by the Secretary of Agriculture to prevent defaults in payments of loans for potentially adequate farms, and $50 million in grants and loans for improvement and repair of farms.

The original Senate bill contained a provision to revive authority for hospital construction loans. This provision remains in the conference bill, except that the authority will be available through fiscal year 1958 instead of fiscal year 1957, as provided in the Senate bill.

The VA direct loan program which has been an extremely valuable portion of our housing program is scheduled to expire on June 30, 1957. The VA-guaranty home loan program has been extended for 1 year by a bill recently passed by both House and Senate, H. R. 9260. A provision in the bill would bring the direct loan program in line with the guaranty program by extending it for 1 year.

We worked out the very controversial Wherry housing program in a way which I believe will be thoroughly acceptable to the Senate. We adopted, to a great extent, what is provided in the military construction bill.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. MONRONEY. The senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] and the junior Senator from Oklahoma refused to sign the report on the ground that the Senate was placed in the position of being forced to accept the "take-out" provision for Wherry housing to be offered to the Government under conditions which we both feared would open dangerous possibilities of windfall profits from Wherry projects.

For that reason, neither the Senator from Illinois nor I felt we could sign the conference report. The Senate is placed in a peculiar position, in that the House was adamant in demanding that there be legislation enacted giving the owners of Wherry housing the right to negotiate the sale of such houses or to have them sold through condemnation, which, under a court test, the Senator from Illinois and I thought would cause great windfall profits, because there would be shown an appreciation of values which the builders did not have in the houses, but which would result only because of their proximity to large military installations. For that reason we were unable to sign the report.

Mr. SPARKMAN. The Senator from Oklahoma has very well stated the position taken both by him and by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] in conference. Of course, Senators will remember that two nights ago, when the provision was debated, the Senate as a whole was very much disturbed over the Wherry provisions of the House bill. I believe the Senator from Oklahoma will acknowledge that we did the very best we could.

Mr. MONRONEY. The report represents the very best possible compromise that could be made, but I personally feel that the matter should be given careful study and investigation by the Banking and Currency Committees of the two Houses next year, and not have the measure forced on us in the closing hours of this session.

Mr. SPARKMAN. In such event there would not have been a housing bill. The Senator from Oklahoma will recall that, so far as sale by negotiation is concerned, we adopted the formula which the Senate had already adopted in a previous measure. I can only say with reference to condemnation, we have no control over condemnation awards. Such matters are settled under provisions of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that when private property is taken, just compensation shall be paid. Congress cannot write a formula to change that.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. LEHMAN. The Senator from Alabama will remember, I am sure, that last night, after the Senate reduced the number of public housing units from 135,000 to 35,000, it completely eliminated the provision respecting housing for elderly people. I refused to serve on the conference committee. I did so as a protest against the action of the Senate, in the first place, in reducing the number of units from 135,000 to 35,000, and, in the second place, for making it impossible for Members of the conference committee even to discuss the all-important question of public housing.

Now we have a bill—I do not know all the provisions of it—as a result of a conference which was held this afternoon. I do know that the bill contains a pitifully and pathetically small number of public housing units. The bill provides for only 35,000 units instead of 135,000 units, which number was adopted in a measure passed by the Senate only 2 or 3 months ago. The bill also contains no provision whatsoever for housing for elderly people. I think it is a record in which no Member of the Senate can take pride, and I deplore it and protest against it with all the vigor at my command.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from New York knows we did the best we could in respect to public housing, if we were to have a housing bill at all. The Senator is correct in stating his own position. But, Mr. President, after all, legislation, at best, must be a compromise; and we got the very best compromise we could.

I wish to correct one thing the Senator said; he said that in the bill there is no provision for housing for elderly persons. Mr. President, the conference report does not contain the fine program which was in the bill as it was passed by the Senate, or even the one which was in the bill as reported by the House committee. But we still include the FHA provisions to assist elderly persons. In the public housing which is provided—in other words, 35,000 a year for each of the next 2 years, plus the carryover, which will be approximately 20,000 units, making a total of approximately 90,000 units over the next 2 years—there is considerable relief for elderly persons. I hope the units provided will prove to be a test which will make it possible for us on the next go-around to take steps which will be of real help to the elderly persons of the country.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question, if the Senator from Alabama will yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Do the provisions of the conference report require that the Secretary of Defense purchase the Wherry housing?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Only in those cases in which title 8 housing—Capehart housing—has been authorized, where there are Wherry housing projects on or near the particular installation; and the requirement is that the Government shall first try to purchase by negotiation; and if that fails, then by condemnation.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Is the Secretary of Defense required to make a finding that there is a military necessity for the housing, before he buys it?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is true, because he cannot get Capehart housing without making such a finding, and he is required to purchase only where he proposes to build Capehart housing.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I may say the members of the armed services subcommittee dealing with military housing the other night—with the provision of the bill requiring the Secretary to buy Wherry housing—felt that would be improper if it should be required, with the price formula which was in that bill, which would be the cost or replacement plus depreciation.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I think the Senator will recall that we were in general agreement with that viewpoint, and we took out the price formula, and coupled the compulsory purchase of Wherry projects with the attempt to build new housing at the post.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. And the requirement to purchase is only where a finding has been made of a military need for the housing; is that correct?

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is correct.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I thank the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

IMMIGRATION LEGISLATION

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. President, this morning we passed an immigration bill, a measure which would make some constructive changes in the McCarran-Walter Act and some essential modifications in the Refugee Relief Act.

It was not a radical bill, and the changes were not sweeping ones, although they were good for America and represent a constructive liberalization both of the McCarran-Walter Act and the Refugee Relief Act—amendments which would help make these two laws work in a more humane and flexible manner—more in keeping with the spirit and tradition of America.

Before the Senate passed that legislation, it considered and then turned down by a voice vote some very far-reaching proposals for the modification of the Immigration and Nationality Act, made by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN], who had associated with him on that proposal a number—I think it was 12—of other Members of the Senate.

Mr. President, I want to pay tribute to the leadership which has been given to the forces fighting for immigration reform by the junior Senator from New York. He has been fighting that battle, and has been supported by other Members of this body—and I could name quite a few names: the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY], the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PASTORE], the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE]—and quite a few other Senators—ever since he has been a Member of the Senate. It has been one of his chief crusades, and he is, as we all know, an inveterate crusader for the causes in which he believes, whether all of us go along with him in all those causes or not.

In my judgment, the bill the Senate passed today was in some measure at least, if not in a major measure, a reflection of the tireless advocacy of immigration reform of the junior Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN]. I do not want to overlook anybody who deserves credit in this field, and there are those on both sides of the aisle. But I do want to say that Senator LEHMAN has been a most tireless spokesman for immigration reform not only in the Senate, but in the country at large. I know of his efforts to inform the American people on this issue, and both the supporters and opponents of changes in our immigration laws recognize his leadership in this field.

I want to say that those of us who agree with him, and those of us who disagree with him, honor his efforts and the sincerity of his position.

Although I do not believe that he felt the bill we passed today was a big enough step forward, he did say that he considered it a step forward and he supported and voted for it. I believe that no one will challenge my statement that his tireless activities on this front, as well as those of the other Members of the Senate to whom I have referred both by name and by blanket reference, helped make possible today's action.

ANNOTATED EXCERPTS FROM ARMY STAFF PAPER ASKING BASIC CHANGE IN MILITARY SETUP

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, on Monday of this week I addressed the Senate on the dangers that would accrue to this country in the event that control of our military establishments passed from civilian authority to a General Staff Corps.

At that time I asked unanimous consent that an article on this subject appearing in the June 24, 1956, issue of the New York Times be printed at the conclusion of my remarks. Through inadvertence, this did not occur and I ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the body of the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ANNOTATED EXCERPTS FROM ARMY STAFF PAPER ASKING BASIC CHANGE IN MILITARY SETUP

NOTE.—On June 24, 1956, the New York Times published "excerpts from an official United States Army staff paper criticizing the 'hydrogen bomb concept' of national defense and calling for a fundamental change in the command and organization of the armed services of the United States." In an accompanying story Mr. James Reston, chief of the Washington bureau of the New York Times, stated that the "Army view was that since the problems its staff paper dealt with had not been settled but were still under active debate in the Pentagon, there was nothing wrong with making its views known to the public."

This official Army paper concerns a matter which is of vital importance to the welfare and security of this Nation.

" 'To separate them [the armed services] makes them rival services with the whole train of evils which such rivalry creates, evils which in times of peace mean contention before Congress for unbalanced appropriations, grievances, and fretfulness about relative rank and rapidity of promotion and in time of war the substitution of * * * service prides for a single emotion of pride in one service.' (Annual report of the Secretary of War [Newton D. Baker], 1919.)"

(Comment: It is fitting that Newton D. Baker should be quoted as an authority for a plan to pass the control of our military establishment from the civilians to a General Staff. While Mr. Baker was Secretary of War he relinquished effective civilian control over the War Department. In 1916, following a long struggle for control by the Army General Staff, Secretary of War Baker directed that from thenceforth the Chief of Staff of the Army would run all activities of the War Department "speaking in the name of the Secretary of War." This was a carte blanche for the Chief of Staff and a vital victory for the Army General Staff within the War Department. This latest plan vividly demonstrates the difficulties confronting the present Secretary of the Army, Mr. Wilber M. Brucker, in maintaining civilian control within the Department of the Army. Mr. Brucker has publicly and unequivocally expressed his opposition to the integrated single service concept. In spite of this clear expression of the views of the civilian head of the Department of the Army, his Army General Staff has prepared and published an official staff paper which is a master plan for the creation of a single service supreme general staff organization which would destroy effective civilian control of the military establishment. Ironically, a key point in this plan is the complete elimination of Secretary Brucker's job.)

"The objective of this study is to determine the most suitable organization for a thoroughly integrated military establishment. This objective is not a new one. Over a period of years many plans and much legislation have been advanced to 'unify' the armed services. Outwardly a measure of 'unification' has been achieved. Fundamentally the unification visualized by the Army planners who supported the National Security Act of 1947 has not been achieved.

"Dictionary definitions of 'unification' are of no value in studying the course of what is generally termed unification of the armed forces. Unification, in this latter context, means, and has meant different things to different persons or groups.

"These meanings extend all the way from the loosest encouragement to cooperate to a tightly knit, vertical structure of Federal military command over, and including, all three services.

"Almost traditionally, the Army has oriented its views toward the latter extreme, perhaps influenced by its doctrinal belief in unity of command. Today this unity of command exists in the person and office of Secretary of Defense and represents an accomplished objective of past Army policy. Beyond that objective, however, unification from the Army standpoint has been a failure."

(Comment: Army General Staff objective admitted to be single military commander, a monolithic command structure of an extreme nature. This can only be achieved by imposition of a Prussian-German-type single Chief of Staff and a Supreme General Staff over the Military Establishment. It could only be achieved by destroying civilian control of the Military Establishment.)

"There is a definite need for thorough integration of the Military Establishment. This approach to the problem of national defense is essentially an Army one. However, the desirability of this objective has been borne out by history.

"(a) The experiences of World War II with uniservice approaches to the problem of national defense had their effect upon the operations of the separate military establishments and the semiautonomous Army Air Corps. Significantly, World War II for this country began with a military disaster that has been traced directly to the fallacy of mutual cooperation.

"(1) Due to the gravity of the Japanese crisis in the autumn of 1941, the War and Navy Departments kept their commanders in Hawaii well informed on the progress of negotiations with Japan and of the measures they should take. Here, however, were two separate service commanders: Admiral Kimmel, Commander in Chief of the Pacific Fleet, and Lieutenant General Short, Commanding General of the Hawaiian Department. Both were under orders to conduct their relations under the principle of mutual cooperation.

"This applied not only to everyday business but to the approved war plan (Rainbow No. 5) for the area. Each commander relied upon his own service department for information and each tried to keep the other informed.

"Several Important Exceptions.

"Nonetheless, there were several important and noteworthy exceptions * * *

"The existing joint plan for the defense of the Hawaiian Coastal Frontier placed the responsibility for distant reconnaissance, air and surface, on the Navy. But for reasons not necessary to evaluate here, Admiral Kimmel decided not to institute long-range reconnaissance against air attack. This was not known to the Commanding General of the Hawaiian Department until after the attack on Pearl Harbor. Until then, General Short continued to assume that he could rely on the Navy to give him adequate warning of the approach of a hostile force.

"On the other hand, General Short failed to notify the admiral that the Army had instituted only a limited alert, which required the Interceptor Command (including the radar) to operate only from 4 a. m. to 7 a. m. Admiral Kimmel assumed that the Army was on an all-out alert and that the radar was in full operation. This was not a breakdown of personalities, for the two commanders were close friends. It was the failure of a doctrine, 'mutual cooperation,' that had never been tested in warfare. And it is a doctrine that continues, despite this lesson, to have its supporters today."

(Comment: This is, at best, a one-sided interpretation of the Pearl Harbor tragedy. Further, the Joint Chiefs of Staff organization and subordinate command structure which we now have is completely different from that existing at the beginning of World War II. Pearl Harbor is a "strawman." The attempted comparison is fallacious.)

"2. Following Pearl Harbor, the files of the Joint Chiefs of Staff were filled with records of attempts by the Army, generally successful after argument, to establish unity of command among the active Army and Navy forces conducting military operations both at home and abroad. Generally, frictions over unity of command decreased in direct ratio to the distance from Washington.

"However, it was almost a year and a half following the investigation of Pearl Harbor that a paper was approved establishing broad principles to govern the exercise of unity of command in joint operations and it did not provide for unity of command as the normal method of coordination.

"3. Despite these advances, and after the praises showered on operational unity in Europe, the Southwest Pacific and the Pacific Ocean areas, the United States incongruously approached the final defeat of Japan with the United States command structure in the western Pacific surprisingly uncoordinated.

"The offensive against Japan consisted of a two-pronged approach: [General of the Army Douglas] MacArthur's advance northwest across northern New Guinea and the Philippines; and [Fleet Adm. Chester W.] Nimitz' advance west through the Pacific islands to Okinawa. Command difficulties became greater when the 20th Air Force, later to become the United States Strategic Air Force, controlled directly from Washington, was added as a third independent force in the Pacific. Thus at one time there were five separate American air forces or components to be coordinated, and on occasions both Army and Navy air elements scheduled strikes simultaneously on the same targets, completely oblivious of the other's plan."

(Comment: This is, again, a one-sided interpretation stated as a categorical fact. Such statements are subject to authoritative refutation. This is an example of trying to establish a premise by using the broad assertion and half-truth technique. Another gratuitous slur on the Air Force.)

"The National Security Act of 1947, passed by Congress with the intent of unifying both the administration and the strategic planning and operations of the armed services, was a compromise of traditional service roles and missions, or 'functions,' and of service concepts thereof."

(Comment: The law did intend, as stated in the Declaration of Policy of the National Security Act of 1947, amended, to provide "effective strategic direction of the Armed Forces and for their operation under unified control" * * * This has been achieved in accordance with law, by placing such authority in the Secretary of Defense, and by establishing under him unified commanders in the various theaters of operations. The law specifically states the military departments shall be 'separately administered.' Thus, the statement that the law was passed with the intent of unifying the administration of the armed services is false. On the contrary, Congress has repeatedly rejected this concept. The service roles and missions as prescribed by Congress were not a compromise. Congress specified, in accordance with its constitutional obligations, the basic functions for each service. Congress did not compromise with the requirements of national security. The roles and missions are as necessary, as sound, as applicable, and as responsive to defense needs and technological advancements today as they were when written into the National Security Act. The Army General Staff opposed roles and missions then because, in putting such provisions in law, Congress blocked the Army General Staff plans to take over the Marine Corps and encroach on the proper functions of the Navy and Air Force.)

"Only at the Department of Defense level of the national defense structure was true unification achieved. Further than this, unification in 1947 could not be legislated, for de facto integration of the three armed services has its basis in the assignment of roles and missions oriented toward accomplishing a specific national strategy. Therein lies the basic divergency which today divides rather than unifies the Military Establishment."

"A series of interservice divergencies, or differences of opinion, doctrine or 'policy,' today mitigate against effective integration of the armed services. Most of these divergencies stem from three fundamental differences in service doctrine which must be subordinated or settled by compromise before true integration of the Military Establishment can be accomplished. These fundamental divergencies will be discussed briefly:"

(Comment: If these divergencies are so vital and fundamental, isn't this the precise area in which civilian control should be exercised? These are matters which should be decided by the Secretary of Defense and the President rather than by a military chief of staff.)

"A. Although in apparent outward agreement to date, the Army and the Air Force are divided on the basic concept for fighting World War III. In brief, the Air Force believes in the so-called short war concept, primarily a strategic air war of massive atomic destruction in which a decision will be reached in from 30 to 60 days.

"In opposition to this concept is the fundamental Army belief that decision will not be reached, in a manner acceptable to our basic national objectives, until the effectiveness of enemy land, sea, and air forces as war-making potentials of enemy power have been neutralized. The Army believes that this should be accomplished by integrated Armed Forces, which patently will require a considerably longer time period than 60 days. Basically, this is a doctrinal split of some years' standing, the Air Force adhering to the 'decisiveness of airpower' * * * which the Army has never accepted as valid. Nonetheless, this divergency of honest opinion has influenced all subsidiary considerations of service roles and missions, force levels, appropriations, and the determination of basic national policy.

"Unity of command

"B. A fundamental belief of the Army is the doctrine of unity of command: the mission and the responsibility given to one commander, who has authority over, and control of, all means necessary to the accomplishment of the mission. In opposition to this belief is that advanced by the Air Force and, to a lesser extent, the Navy: the doctrine of 'cooperation.' "

(Comment: Again the Army General Staff argument that a single military commander is needed over all the Armed Forces, because one man has to command units in actual combat. This fails to distinguish between the requirements for command in combat and formulation of military policy at the seat of Government. This contention that both situations require a single commander was condemned as false and dangerous by both the late James Forrestal and the Hoover Commission task force on national security.)

"Essentially the cooporation theme states that unity of command is achieved at the theater commander level and that subordinate forces can participate in joint action on a coequal status of cooperation. This has been an old Army-Navy issue of many years' standing, although the Navy has modified its attitude considerably since World War II.

"The Air Force, however, which as the Army Air Corps touted unity of command, upon achieving independent status completely reversed its views on this issue. This divergence of views has been reflected in many subsidiary issues relating to air defense and air support of ground forces. Despite much historical evidence substantiating the validity of the unity-of-command concept, it remains an interservice issue.

"Arms development and use

"In many aspects of the respective service views on [weapons-system development and employment] there is a correlation to the basic service split on national strategy. However, the impact of weapons-system development on the roles and missions of the services is such that it stands alone as a fundamental issue of service divergency."

(Comment: It is an "interservice issue" only to the extent the Army General Staff makes it such by insisting on having its own way.)

"This divergency reaches primarily into two doctrinal fields of weapons-system development and application, although there are many related subsidiary issues.

"These two fields are (1) atomic energy and (2) guided missiles. In the first of these, military application of atomic energy, the heart of the divergency is closely related to service views on the decisiveness of airpower. Atomic weapons have given substance to the Air Force doctrine that a military decision can be obtained through air bombardment alone. However, this doctrine was propounded by the airpower enthusiasts long before the atomic bomb was conceived.

"This doctrine was not valid until the thermonuclear bomb was invented. Thus a valid weapon has been granted to an invalid doctrine to give the latter some substance. But to execute this air-atomic doctrine, to the extent that a 'decision' can be achieved, requires the total destruction of an enemy nation.

"Rather than concur with the 'decisiveness' of thermonuclear destruction as a desirable course of action, the Army takes the position that this type of decision is morally, politically, and practically unjustifiable when the application of graduated, selective politico-military force can achieve the desired national security objective without unduly risking enemy thermonuclear reaction."

(Comment: This is an open, overt attack on the Air Force and national defense policy. Again, the Army General Staff condemnation of everything that does not accord with its views.)

"An extreme eventuality visualized by the Air Force is the possibility that guided missiles will shortly replace the manned combat aircraft as an interceptor, close-ground-support and strategic-bombardment weapon. In stark projection of such a concept, the Air Force can see itself reduced to a troop-carrying and logistic support service to the Army, unless it obtains control of the guided missile function of the future. As an argument for its control of guided missiles, the Air Force has adopted the position that missiles are a supplement to and replacement of Air Force manned aircraft, that missiles will be used on targets now attacked by aircraft and that therefore missiles are primarily an Air Force weapon.

"On the other hand, the Army visualizes the guided missile as a logical extension of its military arm which, by increasing the range and lethality of fire-power, will enhance the tactical and strategic mobility of ground combat forces.

"Reconciliation is asked

"D. Thus the internal stresses within the Military Establishment, which tend to divert rather than integrate the armed services, have their root in uniservice doctrines considered essential to the prosecution of individual service roles and missions."

(Comment: Again the attack on roles and missions. This is a broad statement that is not a categorical fact. There is no source of conflict in statutory roles and missions except that which is generated by a refusal to accept and abide by the law.)

"It is where these functions overlap, bringing divergent doctrine onto the same battlefield, that interservice divergencies become most evident.

"It is doubtful if true integration of the Military Establishment can be accomplished unless these fundamental differences can be reconciled or otherwise eliminated.

"[Here followed (1) a description of the service attitudes toward unification prior to the National Security Act of 1947 and (2) a critique of that act from the Army's point of view.]

"Analysis of service experience with unification since 1947 reveals four basic causes for the lack of truly integrated operation of the Armed Forces to date:"

(Comment: "Truly integrated operation of the armed services" is a vague and meaningless term, and gives a false impression of effectiveness of actual war effort. After all, there was unity of command in Korea, and integration of forces and effort.)

"A. Divergent service doctrine on three specific fundamentals.

"B. The nature of 'command' over the armed services as promulgated by Reorganization Plan No. 6 of 1953."

"C. Adherence by the services to the 'Joint Chiefs of Staff concept.' "

(Comment: A generalized indictment of the war-proven JCS system; assumes that it is bad per se for the services to adhere to the JCS system as established by law. Such a slur on the JCS is a necessary step in moving to the plan, proposed below, for junking the JCS in favor of a supreme general staff.)

"D. Overlapping and undefined functions resulting from the trielemental, land-sea-air approach to the allocating of roles and missions to the separate armed services."

(Comment: This is factually wrong. Congress in writing roles and missions into the National Security Act rejected the Prussian-German trielemental theory and based roles and missions on the American "functional" or "balanced force" concept. This Army General Staff statement is the product of either deliberate misrepresentation or ignorance. At least until now Army General Staff cleverness has not been characterized by ignorance of essential facts and military terminology.)

"Courses of actions listed

"Having isolated the deterrents to integration of the Armed Forces, it is possible to deduce certain courses of action which singly, or in combination, might provide a concept for the most suitable organization for a thoroughly integrated Military Establishment. These are:

"A. Retain present organization, but develop a common doctrine for all services.

"B. Retain present organization, but redefine the functions for the separate services.

"C. Revise the National Security Act to reorganize the Department of Defense above the military services level.

"D. Revise the National Security Act to reorganize the military services, per se, into an integrated national armed force.

"[Here followed analyses of the four courses of action with the conclusion that course (C) offered the most chance of success in achieving traditional Army unification objectives.]

"[The Army's argument in favor of this course follows.]

"This concept visualizes a Military Establishment organized as follows:

"(1) An essentially military Department of Defense, organized as a joint military staff. This Department is directed by a civilian Secretary of Defense who is both a Cabinet officer and commander of the Armed Forces in the name of the President as Commander in Chief."

(Comment: To assure that the supreme general staff will be certain of controlling the Department of Defense, the entire Department is to be included in the supreme staff.)

"Directly responsive to the Secretary, as a staff affiliate, is a civilian controller and a civilian general counsel. Through these agencies the Secretary controls the legal and budgetary functions of the Department and the military services.

"(2) Directly subordinate to the Secretary of Defense is the chief of the joint staff. The joint staff is the operating element, which in fact comprises the Department of Defense."

(Comment: The joint (supreme) staff becomes the Department of Defense—manpower, research, troop information and education, draft requirements, industrial requirements, procurement, etc. This would be the greatest single grant of power to the military in all modern history. The magnitude of this grant of power to the military is readily apparent when it is considered that the Department of Defense is the greatest single spending agency in the world today. The power that would accrue to the joint (supreme) staff through its direct and indirect control of the national economy which would inevitably flow from the expenditure of the defense billions is appalling to any thinking American.)

"The Chief of the Joint Staff is appointed by the President with the consent of the Senate. He may be from any of the three military services, however, the office will be rotated among the three services. His tenure will be limited by statute. He may be extended for additional 2-year periods upon nomination by the President with the consent of the Senate. Upon assuming office, he will be retired from his service and upon completing his assignment he may no longer return to duty with any component of the military service but will continue in retirement at the full statutory pay of his office. During his term in office, he will be, as a civilian, the military commander of the armed services, but will have no budgetary authority. He will be the military adviser to the Secretary of Defense, the President, and the National Security Council."

(Comment: Chief of the Joint Staff—

1. Will be retired before taking office. By overnight change of clothes he is supposed, apparently, to become a civilian.

2. Cannot be a civilian. Under law a retired officer remains an officer. Retired officers are in the military service of the Government. This was decided by the Supreme Court in the case of U. S. v. Tyler (1882) (105 U. S. 244). There are various statutes which confirm this status of retired officers. For example, section 1c, title 10, United States Code provides as follows:

"(a) The Regular Army is that component of the Army which consists of persons whose continuous service on active duty in both peace and war is contemplated by law, and of persons who are retired members of the Regular Army."

Further, article 2 (4) of the Uniform Code of Military Justice provides that:

"Retired personnel of a regular component of the Armed Forces who are entitled to receive pay" are subject to court-martial jurisdiction.

This is just another example of the ignorance or deliberate misrepresentations of preparing this paper.

3. Is commander of all military forces, and the joint (supreme) staff, which includes the entire Department of Defense.

4. "No budgetary authority." A meaningless restriction. The Chief of Staff, as herein proposed, will control the Department of Defense (the supreme staff), and his power to set military policy, strategy requirements, manpower requirements, weapons and industrial requirements will be so great as to exert indirect control over defense budgets. He will have all the planning agencies and can produce the facts to support his requirements. No other agency will have a source of military information; hence no way of checking on the Chief of Staff's decisions.

5. Will be sole military advisor to Secretary of Defense, President, and National Security Council. Thus the civilian "superiors" will have only one viewpoint, and recommendation, and will not have any way of knowing whether there were serious military objections to what has been decided by the Chief of Staff. Civilian superiors will have only one alternative to Chief of Staff's position and that would be to veto it. This they could not do as they would have no alternate plan to substitute for it. This is the manner in which the chiefs of the great German general staff boxed in and controlled their nominal constitutional superiors.)

"Two deputies provided

"3. The chief of the joint staff will be served by two deputies: a deputy chief of staff for plans and operations, and a deputy chief of staff for requirements. These officers will each be of a different armed service than the chief of the joint staff and each other. They may serve for no more than 4 years in the Department of Defense after assuming deputy status and upon completion of their assignment will be retired on full pay, with the exception that they may be reappointed immediately as chief of staff of the joint staff.

"(4) The deputy chief of staff for plans and operations will be served by three assistant chiefs of staff: an assistant chief of staff for operations, assistant chief of staff for plans, and an assistant cihef of staff for intelligence. Each of these assistant chiefs of staff will be of a different military service. They may serve for no more than 4 years in the Department of Defense after assuming assistant status and upon completion of their assignment will be retired on full pay, with the exception that they may be reappointed immediately as a deputy or as chief of the joint staff.

"(5) The deputy chief of staff for requirements will be served by three assistant chiefs of staff: an assistant chef of staff for personnel, assistant chief of staff for logistics and an assistant chief of staff for research and development. Each of these assistant chiefs of staff will be from a different service and will be subject to the same terms of tenure of office and retirement as the assistants for operations, plans, and intelligence.

"(6) This Department of Defense joint staff need not be wholly military but no fixed ratio of civilian appointments to military personnel should be established. The staff, however, should be predominantly military. Throughout subordinate staff organization, the principle of integrated assignment of officers from different services to personnel spaces should be adhered to, as should a policy of rotation of specific spaces among the different services. Officers below the assistant chief of staff level on duty with the Department of Defense joint staff should be limited to no more than 4 consecutive years of staff duty, with a minimum 2 years duty required outside the department before he can be reassigned for another tour. This restriction can be voided during time of war or national emergency declared by the Congress."

(Comment: All civilian deputy and assistant secretaries of defense would be replaced by military officials. A really clean sweep by the supreme general staff: eliminates all chance of Secretary of Defense having influence in or information from Department of Defense except as permitted by the Chief of Staff.

Also note how line of succession to higher power in the supreme staff is provided. Duty on the supreme staff becomes a new career, subject only to occasional interruptions for other duty. However, in war and national emergency there is no restriction on continuous duty. This closely parallels similar aspects of the great German general staff system, which led to a permanent corps of general staff officers whose careers centered almost exclusively on general staff duty. This in turn resulted in loss of realism and increased "ivory tower" thinking.)

"No separate departments

"(7) Below the Department of Defense, there will be no separate Departments of Army, Navy, and Air Force per se. The directing functions of the present military departments will be absorbed into either the Department of Defense, the separate service staffs, or both."

(Comment: One big merger into one service, precisely what Congress has prohibited in the most unmistakable terms, complete centralization of control into the Department of Defense, which is, in fact, the supreme general staff.)

"(8) The chief of staff of the joint staff will hold direct command over the Army, Navy, and the Air Force through the commanding Generals of the Army and the Air Force and the Chief of Naval Operations. He will also designate and command directly the unified commanders. Forces for the unified commands will be allocated by the chief of staff and provided, on his order, by the service commanding generals and Chief of Naval Operations. The chief of staff of the joint staff will be responsible to the Secretary of Defense for the strategic planning and direction of the Armed Forces and for maintaining the efficiency of the Military Establishment, its state of preparation for military operations, and plans therefore."

(Comment: Chief of staff commands the Army, Navy, and Air Force through the military heads of those services. The Secretaries of Army, Navy, and Air Force are eliminated, replaced by the military. No longer will the Secretary of Defense control the military departments through their respective secretaries. Every vestige of civilian control is destroyed. Also destroyed is the Marine Corps. There is less chance of civilian control under this Army General Staff blueprint than there was in the German armed forces in the palmiest days of the great general staff.)

"From this analysis, course of action C offers the most chance of success in achieving traditional Army unification objectives. Therefore, the most suitable organization for a thoroughly integrated Military Establishment can be achieved by revision of the National Security Act of 1947 to reorganize the Department of Defense above the military services level within the concept outlined for course of action C."

(Comment: A correct statement. What is the traditional Army General Staff unification objective? James Forrestal knew what that objective was. He pointedly stated it was the isolation of civilian control of the military, and he further stated that General Marshall "quite frankly said so." This plan certainly would achieve that objective.)

ESSENTIALS OF THE ARMY GENERAL STAFF PLAN FOR ESTABLISHING A PRUSSIAN-TYPE HIGH COMMAND

1. Destruction of the war-proven Joint Chiefs of Staff.
2. Creation of a single chief of staff.
3. Creation of a supreme general staff.
4. Elimination of civilian Deputy and Assistant Secretaries of Defense.
5. Replaces civilian Deputy and Assistant Secretaries of Defense with deputy and assistant Chiefs of Staff.
6. Makes Department of Defense identical with the supreme general staff. Thus, the Chief of Staff and the supreme staff would control all the activities now performed by the Department of Defense. Its power would effect every home, school, and industry in the country.
7. Eliminates the civilian Secretaries of the Army, Navy, and Air Force.
8. Replaces the civilian secretaries of the Army, Navy, and Air Force with military officers.
9. Gives Chief of Staff actual command over all Armed Forces.
10. Chief of Staff to have power to settle all differences of opinion in Armed Forces as to proper national military policy. Does not even have to refer basic policy questions to Secretary of Defense or President.
11. Chief of Staff displaces Secretary of Defense as real authority over Department of Defense. Chief of Staff directs Department of Defense for the Secretary of Defense.
12. Chief of staff sole adviser on military matters to Secretary of Defense, President, and National Security Council. Can control the information his "superiors" receive.
13. Would be able likewise to decide what information Congress should receive on national defense matters. Would be the end of effective congressional action in defense matters.
14. Would eliminate the Marine Corps.
15. Establishes system for successive promotions through the supreme staff hierarchy, and continuing rotation of individual officers to duty in the supreme staff.
16. Creates "ivory tower" in which those who make plans are not responsible for carrying them out.
17. Substitutes the Prussian-German supreme general staff system for the United States-developed Joint Chiefs of Staff system.
18. Thus it would destroy civilian control of the military, prevent congressional "interference" in military matters, and destroy the war-proven JCS system, substituting in its place the high command system of the vanquished.

NOTE.—Every one of these proposed changes is contrary to the letter or spirit of the report of the Hoover Commission Task Force on National Security.

FEDERAL FLOOD INSURANCE ACT OF 1956—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I understand that the conference report on the flood insurance bill is at the desk. I call this matter to the attention of the Senator from New York.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3732) to provide insurance against flood damage, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of today.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a statement I have prepared explaining the details of the conference action may be printed in the body of the RECORD at this point.

I urge immediate adoption of the conference report.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR LEHMAN

Fortunately, the House made few changes in its action on this Senate bill. Therefore, there were only a few points to be adjusted in the conference between the two Houses.

The Senate found it necessary to recede to the House in the following three matters:

1. Under the conference bill a loan-contract program will be made available whereby a potential flood victim, upon payment of a fee to be fixed by the Administrator of this program, can assure himself of the right to a loan in the event he becomes a flood victim. It is expected that this program will operate in a manner similar to the procedures provided for the V-loans under the Defense Production Act of 1950. This loan-contract program will supplement the flood-insurance program provided in other portions of the bill. Potential flood victims may choose to purchase their flood protection in the form of insurance or loans or a combination of the two. For a fee less than it will cost to buy flood insurance, a potential flood victim may assure himself of the financial means to repair flood loss under the loan-contract provision. The bill as it passed the Senate contained no comparable provision.

2. Under the conference bill, the flood insurance and loan-contract program will be administered by the Housing and Home Finance Administrator in whom is vested operating and management policy. Under the conference bill, he may appoint a Commissioner to assist him in these duties. As it passed the Senate, the bill would have created a Federal Flood Insurance Administration as an agency of the Housing and Home Finance Agency and would have required a Commissioner to head that Administration to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Senate bill would also have vested operating and management control in the Commissioner.

3. The conference bill modifies the definition of "flood" to make it clear that the insurance and loan-contract program will cover, among other forms of water damage, surface landslides due to excess moisture, thus excluding underground cave-ins. As it passed the Senate, the bill defined "flood" to include, among other things, any landslide due to excess moisture.

This concludes a summation of the matters on which the Senate receded to the House. In two respects the House receded to the Senate in the conference bill.

First, the House receded to the Senate on the ratemaking provisions so that the maximum subsidy on the rate for insurance or loan contracts is 40 percent. As the bill passed the House it would have placed no limit on the amount of subsidy for flood insurance or loan contracts issued to owner-occupants of dwellings.

Second, the House also receded to the Senate on certain technical changes affecting the requirement for State participation in paying subsidies under the program after June 30, 1959.

While I personally am not pleased with all the provisions of this bill, I am happy that for the first time the Congress of the United States is placing the finishing touches on an experimental program of flood insurance that should go far toward relieving the anguish of those affected by floodwaters. Deficiencies in the program can be spotted as the provisions of the statute are placed in actual operation. These defects can be remedied by future legislation where it is advisable. The important thing is that the conference bill will accomplish a humanitarian and practical method of helping flood victims to help themselves through a program of insurance. I urge immediate adoption of the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

MUTUAL SECURITY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1957—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the conference report on the mutual security appropriation bill is at the desk. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] will call it up.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12130) making appropriations for Mutual Security for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1957, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of July 26, 1956, pp. 14768–14769, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask that the report be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its action on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 12130, which was read as follows:

In the House of Representatives, U. S.,
July 26, 1956.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 18 and 27 to the bill (H. R. 12130) making appropriations for Mutual Security for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1957, and concur therein;

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and concur therein with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert: ": Provided, That at least $50,000,000 on a grant basis shall be made available for Spain, exclusive of interregional expenses: Provided further, That not less than $18,500,000 of the amount available for Spain shall be used for agricultural commodities."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arizona.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I have a table which reflects the amount of the bill as passed by the House, the amount of the bill as passed by the Senate, and the amount carried by the conference report, in the case of each item. I ask that the table be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMPARISON OF ESTIMATES AND APPROPRIATIONS, 84TH CONGRESS, 2D SESSION

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the Congress has now completed action on all of the regular and supplemental appropriation bills for this year. I have a table which reflects the action of the House of Representatives and the action of the Senate on the budget estimates submitted to each body. The final amount approved for the regular and supplemental appropriation bills for 1957 is $59,729,807,628. This amount is a net decrease of $220,529,181 from the budget estimates of $59,950,336,809 submitted to the Senate. The table does not reflect permanent appropriations, estimated to total $7,564,859,833, which required no further action from Congress.

The table also shows action by the Congress on deficiencies and supplementals for 1956. The final amount approved for these was $918,109,962, which is a decrease of $24,531,766 below estimates of $942,641,728 submitted to the Senate.

The grand total of all appropriations approved by the 84th Congress, 2d session, amounts to $60,647,917,590, which is $245,060,947 below the budget estimates of $60,892,978,537 considered by the Senate during the session. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a table showing the details on the appropriation for each department for the session.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1956—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the conference report on the social security bill is at the desk. I ask our beloved and cherished friend the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], to submit it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7225) to amend title II of the Social Security Act to provide disability insurance benefits for certain disabled individuals who have attained age 50, to reduce to age 62 the age on the basis of which benefits are payable to certain women, to provide for continuation of child's insurance benefits for children who are disabled before attaining age 18, to extend coverage, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the report.

(For conference report, see House proceedings of July 26, 1956, pp. 14815–14828, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the reports?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, this bill was very thoroughly debated in the Senate. I think all Members of the Senate are familiar with its main provisions, all of which are retained in the conference report. Some of the other amendments—while meritorious, of course—are not retained in the report, because the House would not agree to them.

I therefore move the adoption of the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have prepared a written address on the social security bill. While perhaps I covered the high points of this address in my speech before the Senate the other day, I ask unanimous consent that the address be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I feel strongly that we have arrived at the time when we should improve our social security program by providing for the payment of insurance benefits to the men and women of our country who are unfortunate enough to become permanently and totally disabled.

INSURANCE VERSUS ASSISTANCE APPROACH

The hearings which the Finance Committee conducted in 1950, 1954, and this year have amply demonstrated that it is imperative to liberalize the social security program to help disabled persons. The burden of disability is a crushing load on many families. Not only does the disabled person have the worry, the discouragement, and the frustration due to the loss of his health, but he has the heavy weight of increased medical and hospital bills, nursing services and drugs, the loss of his regular income, and the continued financial responsibility for the support of his wife and the education and care of his children.

Every Senator knows individual cases where prolonged sickness and disability has reduced a proud and self-supporting person to a helpless, dependent individual who must look to his wife, or to his children or relatives, or to private or public charity to support him. The children may have to drop out of school to help maintain the family. The wife may have to work long hours at low-paying odd jobs to earn enough to keep the family together.

In my judgment, this is not a sound or wise policy. Every time we cut short the education of a promising young boy or girl we are not only making it difficult for that person to have a successful career but we are losing for our Nation productive or inventive skills which may have been developed through proper schooling. Every time we force a mother into the labor market against her will we are disrupting family life and sowing the seeds of further hardship, delinquency, and despair.

Today, there are over 400,000 permanently and totally disabled persons receiving public relief in the United States. Just think of that. I ask Senators to stop and reflect for a moment what it would mean if someone you knew, someone you held dear to you, some friend of yours, had to apply for public relief because he or she was permanently and totally disabled.

I wonder how many of us realize that the number of disabled on public relief is increasing every month. I recognize that we cannot organize our society so that we can prevent all disability or insure everyone against it. We must have a system of public assistance for those disabled who are in need. I am proud to have been a member of the conference committee in 1950 which authorized Federal grants to the States for aid to the needy disabled. This was a forward step at the time and has yielded us much in experience. It was a wise step, and many of the fears about the administration of such a proposal have proved to be groundless.

But, in my opinion, we cannot be content with the assistance program as one of our major approaches to meeting the economic needs of our disabled group.

I find it singularly distressing and very strange in the year 1956 to hear the arguments of those who say we can rely upon public assistance to meet the needs of our disabled. We have not followed this principle with respect to our aged, our widowed mothers and dependent children, or the unemployed. As a progressive and enlightened Nation we have adopted the policy that assistance is a second line of defense and that we want to rely on the tried and tested method of contributory social insurance to meet the major economic hazards of our industrial society. I believe we should, we can, and we must now apply the contributory social insurance principle to the risk of permanent total disability.

MAJOR PROVISIONS OF DISABILTY PROPOSAL

Before discussing in more detail my reasons for wholeheartedly supporting the disability proposal, I want to outline the major provisions of the proposal. The disability-insurance provisions have been carefully drawn. They are the result of many years of consideration by those who have studied the problem. The provisions safeguard the financial soundness of the program and they assure that it can be administered economically, efficiently, and wisely.

To be eligible for disability benefits an individual must comply with all of the eight following requirements:

1. He must have worked and contributed to the social security program for a substantial period of time. In order for an individual to be insured for disability benefits he must meet not merely one test of attachment to the labor market, not merely two tests, but three separate, distinct requirements. An individual must have had 6 quarters of coverage, that is 1½ years, in the 13 quarter period ending with the quarter of his disablement and 20 quarters of coverage, that is 5 years, in the 40-quarter period ending with the quarter of his disablement. He must also be fully insured, which means that an individual who becomes disabled in the future may need as much as 10 years of coverage and contributions under the Social Security System. These eligibility conditions are adequate assurance that casual and intermittent workers will not be eligible for benefits. Only persons who have demonstrated that they can hold a job for a substantial period of time can gain insurance rights for disability. There is adequate protection in this way to the System. As I said, there are three separate eligibility tests—all of which must be met. This is a carefully designed program. I ask Senators to remember this because these provisions have been intentionally drawn with the idea in mind of preserving the sound insurance basis of the present program.

2. A second requirement which the individual must meet is that he must be so disabled that he is "unable to engage in any substantial gainful activity." I ask you Senators to note this requirement very carefully. It means that if the disabled individual can engage in any substantial gainful activities he is not eligible for disability insurance benefits. This is a very conservative requirement. It is the requirement recommended by the experts who were members of the Advisory Council on Social Security to the Finance Committee in 1948.

3. A third requirement is that the disability must be "a medically determinable physical or mental impairment which can be expected to result in death or be of long-continued and indefinite duration." Under this requirement the applicant for benefits must present sound and convincing medical evidence that he has a medically determinable impairment. The evidence must include medical reports giving the history of his condition, the diagnosis, and the clinical findings which must indicate not only the nature of the impairment but also its severity. Pertinent nonmedical information must be secured from the applicant and from other sources such as the employer in connection with the employment record of the individual. The guides for evaluating disability were developed in consultation with State agencies and with the advice and assistance of an outstanding medical advisory committee. The doctors on this committee were all members of the American Medical Association. I think I can fairly state that these standards are reasonable, practical, and represent the best medical thinking in the United States on the subject. Disability determinations are being made every day under this definition and these standards for the disability "freeze" provisions enacted by the Congress in 1954 as part of the social security amendments.

4. A fourth requirement which every disabled person must meet is that each disabled person must have been disabled for a 6 months waiting period. Throughout this 6-month period the individual must have been been disabled. During this period no benefits are paid under the provision. The requirement of a waiting period clears up the great preponderance of temporary ailments. It reduces the cost of the program and gives the administrative agency ample time to process the claim carefully and make all the necessary medical determinations.

5. The fifth requirement is that an individual must be age 50 or over in order to receive benefits. Over one-third of all disabled persons are under the age of 50 and would not immediately be benefited by the proposal. Personally, I am of the opinion that the age 50 requirement is arbitrary and unrealistic. I believe that there is just as much justification for the payment of benefits to the disabled person at age 48 or 49 as to the disabled person at age 50 or 51. As a matter of fact the younger person may have heavier financial and family responsibilities, less savings and resources, than a man of 50 or 60 who becomes disabled. From a social point of view I believe it would be more desirable to strike the age 50 requirement from the proposal. I introduced such an amendment and still believe it is the sounder policy. But I am willing to go along with the more conservative, the more restricted policy embodied in the House-passed bill because our colleagues in the Ways and Means Committee in the House have felt we should be careful and conservative in starting this program.

6. A sixth requirement in the proposal is that an individual is not to be considered disabled unless he furnishes such proof of the existence of the disability as the administrative agency may require. In other words, the disabled individual must prove his case. The social-insurance program is also protected by the fact that the bill specifies that if the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare believes, on the basis of information obtained by or submitted to him, that an individual ceased to be disabled, the Secretary may suspend the payment of benefits until it is determined. These provisions give the Secretary ample power to administer the program on a careful and economical basis.

7. A seventh requirement in the proposal is that disabled individuals are referred to the State agency administering vocational rehabilitation. Moreover, an individual must accept rehabilitation services available to him under a State plan approved under the Vocational Rehabilitation Act unless he has good cause for refusal. In addition, the bill specifically states that after entering upon a program of rehabilitation, for a period of 1 year a disabled person shall not be regarded as being able to engage in substantial gainful employment solely on the basis of services rendered in connection with an approved rehabilitation program. These requirements in the bill encourage rehabilitation. They indicate that every reasonable effort is to be made to rehabilitate the disabled individual. Only when rehabilitation is not feasible, or is not available, or where the age of disablement of the individual does not respond to rehabilitation will the individual continue to draw his benefits.

8. An eighth requirement is that benefits are reduced under the plan by any amount an individual receives as a disability benefit from any other Federal law or any State workmen's compensation law. There is ample protection, therefore, against duplicate public payments.

SEPARATE DISABILITY FUND

Another feature of our proposal is that the funds for disability payments are earmarked in a wholly separate fund. These moneys will not be commingled in any way with the funds for old age insurance or for widows and orphans. The contribution income and the disbursements for disability payments will be kept completely distinct and separate. In this way the cost of disability benefits always will be definitely known and the costs always will be shown separately.

The disability program is limited to a total of one-quarter of 1 percent of payroll from employers, one-quarter of 1 percent from employees' and three-eighths of 1 percent from the self-employed and disbursements cannot exceed the amount available for this purpose. Thus, the argument that has been made against the original proposal as considered by the Finance Committee, namely, that the cost of the proposal cannot be determined, is met by our amendment. Moreover, another argument that was made against the original proposal that the program eventually may cost more than originally estimated and may thus divert some of the funds from old-age or survivors insurance is also met by our proposal. Senators who have had any doubts about the financial aspects of the proposal can vote for the amendment with complete assurance as to its financial soundness.

ADMINISTRATIVE FEASIBILITY

Mr. President, I have enumerated eight specific requirements that are necessary in order to qualify for the permanent-total-disability benefits in the bill. I have also pointed out that under our proposal the financing of the proposal would be separately earmarked. I have given these provisions careful study. I say to you now—in all earnestness—that these requirements safeguard the program. It is my considered judgment that Senators may confidently vote for this proposal with assurance that it will be soundly administered.

One of the arguments which sometimes is made against the disability insurance proposal is that it is administratively difficult to determine disability in certain types of cases. I am willing to admit the validity of the point that it is more difficult to determine disability in some cases than to determine age or the fact of death. But we do determine unemployment under the unemployment insurance program of the Social Security Act and I venture to state that it is also difficult to determine unemployment in some individual cases.

But, with the administrative skills we have in this country we have not shied away from determining unemployment or disability just because there are some difficult cases. If every time someone indicated that there were some problems in the administration of any program, we would give up that program, then we would not have any programs for anything. Wherever there are human beings there are problems. It is our duty to face these human problems and try to solve them to the best of our ability.

As a matter of fact we are now determining disability in the social-security program and have been doing so for many months. Under the amendments enacted in 1954, each individual who is determined to be disabled has his insurance rights frozen to protect his old-age and survivors insurance benefits.

Under the proposal I am making, the same definition of disability would be used, the same medical information would be obtained, the same procedures and medical standards would be utilized, and the existing administrative machinery would serve both for the disability freeze and the payment of disability benefits.

The administration of the disability freeze is proceeding satisfactorily. The hearings before the Finance Committee have a full report on this matter at pages 39 to 48. Relationships with doctors, hospitals, and other medical groups are satisfactory. The House and Senate Appropriations Committees have reviewed the operation of the disability freeze in connection with this year's appropriations. No criticisms have been advanced by anyone during the hearings regarding the administration of disability under the existing definition or procedures.

Since we are going to use the same definition and procedures for the payment of disability benefits, I believe we have a good solid administrative basis on which to operate the disability insurance program. The Social Security Administration has operated the existing social-security laws economically, efficiently, and carefully. I have complete confidence in their ability to administer disability insurance benefits. The officials of the Social Security Administration worked out the technical details in the disability provisions as passed by the House and I am sure, therefore, that the provisions are workable in every respect.

In addition to the fact that disability determinations are being made every day in the social-security program, Congress has also authorized the determination of disability as well as the payment of disability benefits under a number of other Federal laws. The railroad retirement system is most comparable with the social-security system in that it is a contributory social-insurance plan for industrial and commercial employees. Disability determinations and payments are being made under that program to the complete satisfaction of the Railroad Retirement Board, railroad management, railroad labor, and the medical profession.

In the nine different retirement systems for Federal civilian employees, disability determinations and payments are being made. Disability beneficiaries under the civil service retirement system in 1953 represented only 3.1 percent of the number of covered employees. Members of Congress and legislative employees have the same disability protection as do employees of the executive branch. In my opinion, similar disability insurance protection should be available to all industrial, farm, commercial, business, and professional groups.

The Tennessee Valley Authority also includes disability in its retirement plan as does the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

Disability insurance provisions were included in United States Government life insurance sold to men in military service in both World War I and II.

Moreover, State and local retirement plans for public employees, teachers, and policemen and firemen all include disability provisions.

The various States are determining disability under the disability assistance provisions of the Social Security Act (title XIV) as well as under their workmen's compensation programs.

All of these programs I have mentioned have been enacted by the Congress. They are sound and desirable. They have been proven to be administratively feasible and necessary. All we are asking today is that Congress now accept and extend the same principle to the rest of our working population covered by the social-security system. We ask only that the persons covered under the social-security system and their employers be allowed to contribute toward this protection. Not a single cent of the cost is to be borne out of general revenues.

We are not asking for authorization for appropriating funds from general revenues. We are asking that self-supporting Americans be allowed to contribute toward their own security so they will not need to rely on aid from general revenues.

Mr. President, I have studied this proposal from every angle. We have had the proposal before the Finance Committee since 1950. We have had it studied by several independent advisory groups. It is sound and practical. It is humanitarian and at the same time realistic and workable.

All of the experience in the administration of disability programs has been studied and evaluated by the Government agencies and by the Advisory Council of 1948 which reported on this subject. I would like to quote the conclusion of this Advisory Council on this matter of administration. They said: "We believe that there is enough administrative ability in our Government organization to provide effective machinery for meeting this pressing social need."

Some of the doctors who appeared before the Finance Committee pointed out some of the medical problems involved in determining disability as a basis for their opposition to the disability proposal. I have more faith and confidence in the doctors than they seem to have in themselves. I have confidence in their professional skill and abilities and in their integrity. They are making medical reports at the present time on disabled persons in all these other Federal and State retirement programs. I see no reason why they cannot do so for social security. The fact of the matter is they are making disability reports right now under the disability freeze and they are doing this job cooperatively and satisfactorily.

I have consulted with the two previous commissioners of social security and they tell me that they are convinced the disability insurance proposal is sound in its basic conception and administratively feasible. Arthur J. Altmeyer, who was in charge of the social-security program from its inception until 1953, has stated that this disability proposal can be administered satisfactorily. John W. Tramburg, who was the first commissioner of social security appointed in 1953 by the present administration, has wholeheartedly endorsed the proposal. Mr. Tramburg was responsible for initiating the administration of the disability freeze program in 1954 and he is convinced that the Social Security Administration can efficiency handle this matter based upon their successful handling of the disability freeze. The testimony of State public welfare administrators indicated that they believed the disability insurance program was sound and feasible.

The disability insurance proposal has been studied for many years. Every aspect has been carefully investigated. We know more about the disability problem and how to administer the program than we did about old-age insurance in 1935 when we enacted the original program. Extensive public hearings have been held on the disability proposal. Expert groups have studied it very carefully.

I should like to point out that in 1938 the American Medical Association endorsed disability insurance. In 1944 the United States Chamber of Commerce endorsed disability insurance benefits beginning at age 55. Marion B. Folsom was the chairman of the chamber's committee. He supported the principle of disability insurance at that time. This recommendation was endorsed by 67 percent of the chamber's membership. In 1945 the various private insurance companies endorsed the chamber's proposal.

In 1948, the advisory council on social security to the Senate Finance Committee appointed by the distinguished senior Senator from Colorado, voted 15 to 2 in favor of disability insurance benefits without any age restriction. In 1950 and 1954 the Congress adopted every major recommendation of this council. Only the disability insurance recommendation remains to complete their splendid work which began nearly 10 years ago.

In addition to the views of these outstanding experts, I have just received a letter from eight outstanding citizens advocating disability insurance. They are:

Dr. Sarah Gibson Blanding, president of Vassar College;

Joseph W. Fichter, past master of the Ohio Grange;

Miss Elizabeth Magee, general secretary of the National Consumers League;

Mrs. Agnes Meyer, of the Washington Post;

Dr. Ellen Potter, M. D., of New Jersey;

Miss Ollie A. Randall, vice chairman of the national committee on aging, National Social Welfare Assembly;

Dr. Edward S. Rogers, M. D., at School of Public Health, University of California; and Mrs. Theodore O. Wedel, president, United Church Women.

In addition, both the AFL-CIO and numerous State public welfare administrators endorsed disability insurance in the hearings. So did the American Nurses Association, the American Association of University Women, and the American Public Welfare Association.

There is thus widespread support from the general public and from experts for disability insurance. The addition of disability insurance protection to the tens of millions of men and women now participating in the social-security program would give the same kind of protection against the catastrophes of crippling injury and disease as has long been provided for Government employees, and employees of certain large private organizations. The time for this addition to the basic individual protection program of the Nation is now—not 2 years from now, or 4 years from now, or at some distant time when the cost estimates may have been refined to the sixth decimal point and tons of papers, and analyses, and studies stacked. For no amount of figuring or estimating or assessing will detract a whit from the elemental fact that a cash disability payment is an essential and inevitable part of the old-age and survivors insurance program. Let us do the constructive thing, the sensible and needed and practical thing, and put it there without further delay.

REHABILITATION

Of course, we all recognize that the ideal help for the disabled is their complete rehabilitation into nondisabled status. But of what present use is that abstract principle, sounds as it is, to the multiplied thousands of unfortunate men and women in America who are incapacitated beyond real hope of recovery or of return to any kind of gainful activity? What of the unskilled worker who, after having worked and paid social security taxes for nearly 20 years, is blinded or crippled, and so must undergo a long period of convalescence, adjustment, and training before he can even hope to earn a living again?

For one, I would be humiliated to say to these disabled people that, because rehabilitation is the ideal answer to their problems, money to buy food, shelter and medicine would be less than ideal, and therefore we chose not to provide disability payments under the old-age and survivors insurance program. To add that those who lack means to purchase the necessities of life might apply to the public welfare offices for aid would be merely to beg another question. Why should one having contributed regularly for years to a Government program designed to make him independent of public welfare in retirement, be compelled to turn to public welfare when he is forced into retirement prematurely by disability? As many Senators present could verify from constituents' letters, the question has been a difficult one to answer. When we say to the disabled man of 50 or 60 that he has benefit rights but that he cannot collect upon them until he is 65, his reply is frequently that his condition is such that he cannot expect to live to 65. He may well point out with bitterness that in his state of disability retirement, his need for retirement benefits is much greater than it would have been in retirement in good health at age 65. He has had fewer years to accumulate savings and must bear the medical expenses that go with his condition. I must commend these facts to the earnest consideration of every Member of the Senate.

Mr. President, the disability benefits would certainly do no injury to the rehabilitation program with respect to a great number of people who are, for all practical purposes, beyond the reach of rehabilitation techniques we have today. As to those people who are capable of being rehabilitated, I find it difficult indeed to believe that, in any general sense, they would reject the hope and chance of resuming an active life simply because they can get a small monthly check by remaining disabled. The very highest benefit payable to a disabled person under the House bill would be $108.50 a month, and the average would be much lower, in the neighborhood of $70 to $80 a month.

The amount is simply not enough to put a premium on prolonged disability. Instead, is it not more reasonable that the regular monthly payments would enhance the prospects for rehabilitation? It seems clear to me that the better state of mind, the degree of relief from strain, that would often be provided by the checks would act to improve the disabled person's outlook and attitude, and thus make him a more likely subject for eventual rehabilitation. I cannot believe that any great proportion of the American people would be seduced into a life of unnecessary idleness and malingering by the disability benefit payable under this program.

COSTS AND FINANCING

At this point I want to comment on two important aspects of the proposal: The cost and the methods of financing the cost.

Detailed actuarial cost estimates will be found in the Finance Committee hearings at pages 57, 58, 59, and 60. The Chief Actuary of the Social Security Administration has stated that the intermediate cost of the disability proposal is equivalent to about four-tenths of 1 percent of the payroll. That means that the cost can be completely financed by the employees paying two-tenths of 1 percent of payroll and the employer paying the remaining two-tenths of 1 percent. However, in the interest of sound financing in our amendment we have placed the contribution rate at one-quarter of 1 percent on employees and a similar rate on employers. Moreover, the estimates given by the actuary are the long-run costs assuming there is no further improvement in employment or earnings in the United States. Moreover, it assumes no improvement in the rehabilitation of the disabled. These are very pessimistic assumptions which I do not share. It is my opinion, therefore, that these estimates overstate the cost.

Nevertheless, I am willing to accept the estimates of the actuary for our present discussion because whatever the proposal costs I believe the people and the economy of the United States are willing and able to pay for the care of their disabled men and women. I do not think one-quarter of 1 percent of payroll is a tremendous burden on the employees of this country; nor is this amount a crushing burden for business to set aside each year for the care of the disabled.

According to the estimates of the actuary the proposal would cost substantially less than four-tenths of 1 percent of payroll for many, many years to ocme. In the first year, it would cost only about eleven-hundredths of 1 percent of payroll and by the fourth year would only be about one-quarter of 1 percent of payroll. This cost is so small that by itself it would not justify an increase in the payroll tax at this time.

The next increase in social-security taxes is scheduled for 1960. In the pending bill we have included provisions for the establishment of an Advisory Council to study the financing of the program and to report back to Congress prior to 1960 with any recommendations. The bill provides for the established of such an Advisory Council at the time of each scheduled increase. Thus, there is adequate protection in the bill to assure that the financing of the program will be retained on a sound basis.

One further word on costs and financing of disability: The people of the United States do not intend to allow their fellow citizens, their neighbors, their relatives and friends, to become disabled without some aid and protection. Already 400,000 disabled persons are receiving public assistance through State public welfare departments. This aid is financed, in part, from Federal funds. It is clear, therefore, that we are caring for the disabled and we will continue to care for the disabled. This cost is already being borne by the general taxpayer out of general revenues. By covering the risk of permanent total disability under the social-security program, we can reduce these costs to the general taxpayer and at the same time have a more dignified method of dealing with this human problem.

In addition to reducing the cost for the general taxpayer, there is another important effect of paying a disabled person under the social-security system rather than through public relief. Many of the States with per capita incomes lower than the national average, which includes many States in the South and the Midwest, cannot afford to pay as much as the States with per capita incomes over the national average. While the national average being paid to persons on permanent total disability assistance was $56.53 per month in March 1956, this average varied from $116.70 in Connecticut, to $24.54 in Mississippi. In my State of Georgia the average was $42.21. In Virginia the average was $39.91. In Oklahoma, $58.28 and Colorado, $57.80. No matter how hard you try these wide variations cannot be justified on grounds of differences of cost of living.

But if disability payments are made under the insurance provisions of the social-security program, they will be based on the previous earnings of the disabled man. Consequently, the payment to disabled individuals will be in some reasonable relation to their previous standard of living and earnings. They will be somewhat more adequate in the South than present public assistance payments and will thus help to maintain income and purchasing power and raise the standards of living.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, the social security legislation to be enacted by this Congress is the last which I shall have the opportunity to influence as a Member of this body. For that and many other reasons, I have had an especially keen interest, and I think an understandable one, in the direction and development of the legislation before us. I have had the great honor and privilege to be a Member of the Senate throughout the life of this very important program. I sat here when it was first enacted into being over 20 years ago, and when controversy surrounded its very principle. It was new and different then, and we approached it with much more caution than confidence. But it worked, and it grew in favor, because it was soundly conceived and administered with understanding and skill.

Successive Congresses, realizing these things, increased its size and scope, until today the old-age and survivors insurance system pays monthly benefits to more than 8 million people, provides basic protection against want in old age or in orphanhood, or widowhood to 9 out of 10 American families and pays out more than 5 billion dollars a year. The Congress has not been loath to adapt and extend this program of protection as time and experience have pointed the way. There has developed through the years a feeling both in and out of Congress that the contributory social insurance principle fits our times—that it serves a vital need that cannot be as well served otherwise. It comports better than any substitute we have discovered with the American concept that free men want to earn their security and not ask for doles—that what is due as a matter of earned right is far better than a gratuity. And so the social security system—now tried and proved by nearly a generation of experience—is once more surveyed by the Congress. What we decide, how we dispose of the legislation before us, will not only affect the rights of participants generally, but will be of immediate and urgent interest to many thousands of our older citizens and disabled citizens in every State and every community in the Nation.

Mr. President, I regret to differ with the recommendation of my great friend, the distinguished senior Senator from Virginia, but I must in candor assert that the bill now before us has been shorn of its most valuable and needed provision. The removal from the bill of the provision for cash disability benefits is a backward step. I am convinced that the provision is timely, practicable, and workable, and that it ought to be restored by the Senate.

Many persons who become permanently disabled, whether from cancer, a heart attack, polio, blindness or other causes, use up all their savings and sooner or later become dependent on private charity or public relief. Under my proposal they will be able to remain self-supporting with the aid of a regular monthly social-security payment toward which they will have contributed during their working lifetime.

Social security is not a handout; it is not charity; it is not relief. It is an earned right based upon the contributions and earnings of the individual. As an earned right, the individual is eligible to receive his benefit in dignity and self-respect.

Mr. President, the proposal to include disability benefits in the social security program is part of the age-old struggle to improve conditions for our fellow men. It is part of the movement to prevent suffering and human misery.

We have come a long way in the past 20 years in the social security measures we have adopted to relieve human suffering and misery. We have not reached the goal of perfection. But we have made steady progress.

I am proud to have been intimately connected with every step in the evolution of the social security program since it was established in 1935. As a member of the Finance Committee, I believe we have over the years built slowly and surely on a solid foundation.

Now we come to what is a vital decision. Are we going to continue to ask our disabled to rely on relief or are we going to improve the insurance system to help meet this risk?

I am willing to stake my reputation on one prediction: the movement for the improvement of the disabled will not stop if disability insurance is defeated this year. It will only become more intensified. You cannot hold back a sound tested movement whose objective is to help the crippled, the blind, the disabled.

We have passed legislation to help build public roads and public housing, to improve our rivers, our agriculture, our crops and soil. We have passed legislation to provide foreign aid and technical assistance. Is the welfare of our disabled any less important?

We have adopted legislation providing insurance payments under the Social Security Act to the aged, to widows and orphans, and the unemployed. Are the disabled any less deserving?

Mr. President, my proposal to pay disability benefits would help everyone in the community. It would help the disabled person and his family. It would help the disabled person's children to continue their education. It would help the disabled man or woman to pay his rent, his grocery and doctor's bill, and his life insurance premiums.

These are practical reasons for supporting the proposal. They are good reasons. They are important reasons.

But I should also like to appeal to Members of the Senate for support of the proposal on the grounds of humanitarianism, on the grounds of Christian charity, on the grounds of building a better life for the men and women who have worked to make our country great and strong.

As I look back over my many years in the Senate, I recall many great issues and debates, many controversies and crucial votes. The vote on this issue may not seem as important to other Senators as it seems to me. I respect the convictions of other Senators and I know the sincerity and conscientious devotion they have to their responsibilities. I hope that other Senators will find it reasonable and timely to join with me in making another advance in humanitarian progress.

Mr. President, it is not pleasant to differ so markedly and so strongly with the majority of the able committee of which I have for so long been a member, but it is with a sense of rightness and conviction that I recommend the adoption of the amendment I have discussed. It represents an addition to social security protection that will be valued and appreciated not only by the thousands upon thousands of older women and disabled people who would derive early payments because of the amendment, but also by millions of other Americans to whom the amendments would bring an added sense of security. This Nation, blessed by an abundance beyond the dreams of others, cannot afford to be penurious, timid, and mean in the search for ways to make the life of its aged and infirm a better and easier and happier one. The provision I recommend to you would contribute materially to that high purpose. It has been carefully drawn and studied. While the amendment is somewhat long and complex, this is largely due to the necessity of repeating many provisions in existing law. The amendment has been carefully prepared by the Senate legislative counsel. As I have pointed out, the purpose of the amendment is very simple. I urge your support of the amendment that we may set it into operation to provide a measure of hope, and relief, and freedom from anxiety for American citizens in every State and section of this land.

THE PANAMA CONFERENCE—A NEW ERA IN INTER-AMERICAN RELATIONS

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, as we all know, the chiefs of state of the American Republics met at a unique and highly publicized conference in Panama. The occasion was the anniversary of the Panama Congress, convoked by Bolívar in 1826. One hundred and thirty years ago Bolívar envisoned a vast league of the newly independent American nations, based on sovereign equality, and pledged to the peaceful settlement of their conflicts and to mutual defense. The present Organization of American States, the oldest continuous international body, owes its origin and inspiration to the ideas Bolívar outlined at Panama.

The assemblage of 19 chief executives, the largest of its kind in history, was certainly an impressive tribute to the pan-American ideals of Bolívar. And behind those men last week in Panama stood more than 300 million people, united in their determination to defend their freedom against any adversary. Moreover, the meeting had far-reaching implications beyond the narrow confines of the Western Hemisphere. The spectacle of many nations, small and large, of diverse languages, religions, cultures, and strengths, but working together as sovereign equals, was a vivid demonstration of the possibilities of mutual cooperation among free nations.

I was glad President Eisenhower could attend the historic conclave for it was fitting that the Chief Executive of the more than 160 million English-speaking members of the Organization of American States should take his place alongside his Latin American counterparts. From all reports, President Eisenhower was accorded a rousing reception by the people of Panama; so much so, in fact, that the security measures for his protection almost broke down under the pressure of the enthusiastic crowds.

But more developed at the weekend in Panama than the happy proof that the Panamanian people warmheartedly welcomed the President of the United States. The uncertainty which attended preparations for the meeting and its lack of formal agenda led many to believe that the American nations were going to indulge merely in some ceremonial handshakes and timeworn clichés. The handshakes were there, of course, and the eloquent declamations were there.

The President of the United States, in a moving speech, gave a positive emphasis to the inter-American system. He said:

The destiny of America is to create a civilization that will give tangible meaning to the concept of human liberty, to the principle that the state is the servant of man and not his master, to the faith that man will reach ever greater heights in his spiritual and material development and to the proposition that all nations can live together in peace and dignity.

The full realization of the destiny of America is inseparable from the economic and social development of its peoples and therefore makes necessary the intensification of national and inter-American cooperative efforts to seek the solution of economic problems and to raise the standards of living of the continent.

The President then concluded by saying:

Our organization can never be static. We are here to commemorate a dynamic concept initiated at the first inter-American conference in 1826 convoked by Simón Bolivar. We here pay tribute to the faith of our fathers, which was translated into new institutions and new works. But we cannot go on forever merely on the momentum of their faith. We, too, must have our faith and see that it is translated into works.

My own sentiments regarding close economic and social cooperation with our sister American Republics, I believe, are well known. On numerous occasions in the past I have risen to urge action in creating a positive program in Latin America, over and beyond the vital mutual defense system we now possess. It has long been my conviction that the Americas working together could and must demonstrate to the world how free nations can tackle problems that communism promises to relieve. We have in fact a unique opportunity to show once again the visionary idealism, the boldness, the originality that gave America its special attraction in epochs past. Latin America and the United States together could show the world a new dimension in international cooperation.

The Senate, I believe, shares my conviction. In the last few years each time the Department of State presented us with a meager program for Latin America, a token gesture, the Senate has augmented its request by adopting amendments offered by me. In 1954 Congress approved an amendment I introduced to hike our technical assistance program in the 20 Republics from $23.5 to $44.5 million—$10 million over the administration request. Likewise, in 1955, we managed to earmark $17 million more for Latin America out of a contingent fund where it would never have found its way south of the Rio Grande considering the cool attitude of the Department of State toward assisting the American Republics. Again this year, I introduced an amendment to the Mutual Security Act to increase aid to Latin America to promote health, education, and sanitation in the region. Congress responded with a $15 million increase over the State Department request.

The intent of the Congress has been apparent by its willingness to support a more substantial program in Latin America. This was evidenced by the fact that on several occasions it overwhelmingly voted appropriations for Latin American assistance over and above funds requested by the administration. Yet by inertia, inability, or unwillingness, the State Department continued its policy of relegating Latin American affairs to the bottom of the pile. In the past, every time I discussed our Latin American program with the Under Secretary of State, or his staff, I met with the same answer, "Our program is adequate and if additional funds are appropriated no plans are developed to give effect to the intent of Congress."

It is quite obvious that the thinking and desire of the President of the United States has at least in the past been at variance with those of his subordinates who carry out our foreign policy in Latin America, for his recent statements at the Conference in Panama clearly indicate a call for effective action in further promoting and implementing our "good neighbor" relations. I hopefully trust that the President will be able to instill in the minds of his subordinates the sincerity of his convictions so that their views will now coincide with his own. If he can convince the State Department of his sincere objectives, great strides can be made toward giving a meaningful effect to our good neighbor policy, for as we all know Latin America is extremely important to us from the standpoint of trade, strategy, and raw materials, and we, of course, on the other hand are equally important to that region. In helping this area in their economic difficulties, we unquestionably help ourselves.

I am, of course, delighted to find that the President has rediscovered America. But I was disappointed by his "concrete" suggestions that he brought forth at Panama to implement his plan. His recommendation to examine the hemisphere possibilities to utilize nuclear power for industry and to combat disease is indeed meritorious. However, the press has lauded his suggestion to form a new council of special representatives to, quoting the President, "join in preparing for us concrete recommendations for making our organization of American States a more effective instrument in those fields of cooperative effort that affect the individual." To these representatives he continues, "We could look for practical suggestions in the economic, financial, social, and technical fields which our organization might appropriately adopt."

Anyone who has followed the development of our Latin American policy knows that we already have a plethora of such studies and suggestions. Among the more notable is the report of Milton Eisenhower, himself, after his factfinding trip over the region; the report of the International Development Advisory Board entitled "An Economic Program for the Americas"; the report of the Joint Brazilian—United States Commission; studies by the Pan American Sanitary Bureau; numerous reports by the UN Economic Commission for Latin America; or if you prefer to keep the UN out of the regional undertaking, there is the Organization of American States' own Economic and Social Council, firmly established at Bogota in 1948 after its provisional establishment at Chapultepec in 1945. Ironically, the predecessor to the Economic and Social Council of the OAS, known as the Financial and Economic Advisory Committee, was created in 1939 by the First Conference of Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the American Republics in Panama.

Obviously, the idea of creating still another advisory group to study the problems of Latin America provides hardly a ray of hope in helping this area solve its economic difficulties. What is needed instead is a firm determination, coupled with effective and specific programs—many of which have already been suggested by some of the already established agencies now and for a long time operating in this field. There are already recommendations on combating malaria, leprosy, and many other tropical diseases, as well as specific programs for sanitation, for highways, for schools. But the State Department will not, and does not, approve of any of these programs, so that nothing of a practical nature is done.

I'm sure all people of Latin America and those interested in them hope that the President will instruct the State Department to present to the Congress next session some realistic, practical plans for Latin America.

EXPRESSION OF APPRECIATION TO THE CHAIRMAN AND RANKING MINORITY MEMBER OF THE APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, I do not wish this session to come to a close without paying a tribute to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the distinguished senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN]; and to the ranking minority member of the committee, the distinguished senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. Those two Senators not only organized the Appropriations Committee, but they have carried through the most orderly method of conducting the Appropriations Committee session I have witnessed during all my experience on the Appropriations Committee. I commend the distinguished chairman [Mr. HAYDEN] for an excellent job.

FLOOD INSURANCE—STATEMENT BY SENATOR BUSH

Mr. BUSH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement which I have prepared in connection with the flood-insurance conference report, the housing report, and other events of the day.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR BUSH

The adjournment of the 84th Congress is a landmark in the period since President Eisenhower took office—a period of progress and unparalleled peacetime prosperity.

This session of Congress, like its predecessors, has taken actions which will have a profound effect upon the lives of the people of Connecticut and the future economic development of our State.

There have been improvements in the social-security system, and elsewhere in the field of health, education, and welfare. Legislation has been adopted for greater protection of our people against the hazards of hurricanes and floods. A highway program, largest in the history of America, has been started which will bring a new era of safe and rapid travel and expansion of business opportunities in our State, as in others. Slum clearance and urban renewal have taken a new lease on life in our communities.

In all of these advances, I have been privileged to play a part.

While this Congress has made a good record in some respects, there have been distressing failures as well. It has failed to implement President Eisenhower's forward-looking recommendations in many fields, notably civil rights, aid for school construction, and reform of the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act.

It has taken some actions, such as the geographical dispersal amendment to the Defense Production Act, which, if not carefully held in check by wise administrative judgment, could have detrimental effects upon the future economic well-being of our State. There is a desire on the part of some Members of Congress from the South and Southwest to use Federal tax funds and governmental machinery to stimulate the growth of their regions at the expense of the long-established industrial areas, such as New England. Connecticut must remain vigilant against such maneuvers, always pressed in a Democratic-controlled Congress because Southern Democrats hold the key positions of power.

A disturbing development in this session was evidence of a breakdown in the spirit of nonpartisanship in the field of foreign affairs—a spirit which has been symbolized by the close cooperation between President Eisenhower and the distinguished Democratic chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, Senator GEORGE, of Georgia. Some Members of the Congress on both sides of the aisles have allowed their hatred and distrust of communism, feelings shared by all Americans worthy of the name, to lead them into expressing a lack of confidence in these two men whose experience in the intricacies of our foreign relations is unmatched and whose patriotism and devotion to the long-range interests of the United States is above question.

I am deeply appreciative for the cooperation I have received during these years from State and municipal officials, whether under Republican or Democratic administrations, in seeking solutions to the problems which have arisen. As a Senator, I have felt it my duty to give my fullest assistance to all elected officials in our State whenever matters are involved affecting the well-being of the people we represent. Without this mutual cooperation, our rapid recovery from the flood disasters of 1955 would not have been possible, nor could we have obtained the urban renewal programs in our cities and the beneficial provisions of the highway legislation directly affecting Connecticut's own roadbuilding program.

These past few years have been a deeply rewarding experience. I shall always be grateful to the people of Connecticut for having given me this opportunity to serve them. Within a few short weeks they will have the opportunity to review my record and the record of the Eisenhower administration, which I have supported and assisted fully. Should they approve, I shall count it an honor and privilege to have the opportunity to serve them again.

This has been a great day for the people of Connecticut and New England generally, and for the people of other areas exposed to the hazards of hurricanes and floods.

In the final day of the 84th Congress, we have enacted legislation which—

(1) provides a 5-year experimental program of Federal flood insurance;

(2) appropriates $2 million to expedite the construction of small, but urgently needed local flood protective works under the terms of the Bush-McCormack Act.

(3) makes possible additional flood protection for Connecticut by authorizing the construction of flood control dams and reservoirs at Torrington and Winsted, Conn., and Littleville, Mass.

(4) permits faster Federal urban renewal assistance to disaster areas;

(5) increases FHA insurance for disaster mortgages from $7,000 to $12,000;

(6) permits continuation of the work of protection and improvement of our harbors and coastal areas, stimulated by the Bush Hurricane Survey Act of last year and prior authorizations, by authorizing the construction of the Bridgeport Harbor project and Federal participation in beach erosion control in the New Haven-Guilford area.

Additional restoration of eroded beaches will be made possible in the future by our enactment earlier this year of legislation permitting Federal assistance in this work on privately owned beaches in circumstances when a public benefit is involved.

I am grateful to my distinguished colleague from Connecticut, Senator PURTELL, and to the Members of our House delegation who have given encouragement and support in these endeavors, introducing, in many cases, companion measures to bills I drafted. I express my appreciation also to my colleagues on the Committees on Public Works and Banking and Currency of the Senate, for their support of this legislation, to members of the Appropriations Committee, whose response to our requests for flood control funds has been most generous, and to the distinguished Senators from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] and California [Mr. KNOWLAND] for their assistance in scheduling the bills for prompt consideration.

COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Texas, and by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Presiding Officer to join a similar committee of the House of Representatives to notify the President of the United States that the two Houses have completed the business of the session and are ready to adjourn unless he has some further communication to make to them.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. JOHNSON of Texas and Mr. KNOWLAND members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

FAREWELL TO RETIRING SENATORS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, we are reaching the point of adjournment sine die—the point of no return insofar as this session of the Senate is concerned.

As always, most of us have a sentimental lump in our throats as we think of our friends who we shall not see for many months. There are some who will leave at the end of this session and who will not be with us when we reconvene in January.

On that list are two of the greatest statesmen of our times—the senior Senator from Georgia and the senior Senator from Colorado. Both are retiring voluntarily after a lifetime of eminent service to our country.

I think the members of this Senate already know how I feel personally about those two great statesmen. Senator GEORGE and Senator MILLIKIN are to me an inspiration for all who love their country and who rest secure in the confident belief that there are men of great intellect and men of great patriotism to steer us through the troubled waters.

I merely at this point want to say not good-by, but farewell until we meet again.

There are others who are leaving us. There is the junior Senator from Kentucky, ROBERT HUMPHREYS. It has not been my good fortune to boast of a long acquaintance with him. But in the period that he has been here, I have formed for him an attachment that amounts to deep friendship.

He entered the Senate to take over the seat held by our late and dearly beloved colleague, Alben W. Barkley. Senator Barkley was a man of towering eminence and to follow him would be a difficult and exacting assignment for any man.

I think it is a measure of the junior Senator from Kentucky that he discharged his responsibility ably and in the finest traditions of his State.

Another one who is leaving us is the junior Senator from West Virginia, WILLIAM R. LAIRD III. Young, alert, and aggressive, he has been a splendid Senator, cooperating with the leadership and making a genuine contribution to the deliberations of this great body.

I predict that Senator LAIRD is a man destined to go far in the field of public service. We shall hear more from him.

Finally, there is the junior Senator from South Carolina, THOMAS A. WOFFORD.

He, too, came into the Senate on short notice during the hectic days when we were engaged in the heaviest volume of business in the session. The people of South Carolina can be very proud of Senator WOFFORD and the dignity and effectiveness with which he has conducted himself.

Here, now, before the session adjourns I want to say to all of these men farewell, good luck, and I hope we will all meet again. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3732) to provide insurance against flood damage, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11742) to extend and amend laws relating to the provision and improvement of housing and the conservation and development of urban communities, and for other purposes.

CLOSING REMARKS OF SENATOR LYNDON B. JOHNSON TO THE SENATE

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the last hour of the 84th Congress is here.

All of us, I think, greet it with a variety of emotions.

There is, of course, a feeling of relief—relief that the days and the nights of hard work and hard decision have come to an end, at least for a while.

There is also a touch of sadness: sadness that we have not accomplished more, and sadness in different ways for each of us that things we wanted to do could not be done.

But in this final hour there is time to speak of one emotion which at such a time as this lies close to the hearts of all. It is fitting to speak of it now.

I speak of friendship—the warm friendship that has been forged through our days together here on the floor.

The Members of this body and the people who aid us have a sense of identity rarely equaled in any institution in the world. The existence of this identity transcends politics. It cuts across party and regional lines. Men from all sections of our country from coast to coast, from north to south, assemble here on this floor and under the impetus of a common work and a common goal become as one.

Those who watch our activities have often attempted to grasp at the essence of this sense of identity which they sense but cannot define. Usually they take refuge in a stereotyped phrase such as "the most exclusive club in the world." And in using such a phrase as that they lose entirely the meaning of this institution, which is truly the greatest deliberative body the world has ever known.

As the majority leader of the Senate I know now as I stand here how very, very much I personally owe to every Senator and to those who are associated with the Senate. In the days and the nights of work, in the long hours associated with the management problems of the leadership, I have not forgotten that. I do not forget it now. To all of you who I know have felt impatience at my impatience I can say only that I ask your forgiveness.

Most of the time I know—even though occasionally I have forgotten—that the leadership is an impossible task without your friendship and without your cooperation. I cannot say what is in my heart tonight about this friendship. I can express only in a more inadequate manner my knowledge of how much you all have done for me and how deeply grateful I am.

And now I turn, as every day and almost every hour I have turned, to my friend across the aisle. No majority leader can be effective without the friendship and, above all, the understanding of the minority leader.

Senator KNOWLAND, you have made me a fortunate man.

In selecting you to lead them, your colleagues have placed me in their debt, just as they owe that same debt to you. Words can be debased, just like coins, by overusage. One of the most abused words in the English language is the word "integrity" because it is so often applied by people who do not know its meaning to so many little men.

Yet there is no other single word which so describes Senator WILLIAM KNOWLAND. [Applause.] And when I use it tonight I know full well that to those outside the Senate it is just another word. But every man on this floor tonight knows and understands its special meaning when I say that integrity in its simplest and purest meaning is the only fitting way to describe the character of the minority leader.

It is hardly unusual for BILL KNOWLAND and me to disagree on the issues of the day but it is impossible for me ever to take exception to his honor. In all the years I have known him never once has he gone back on his word. My relationship with him is not merely the friendly, formal relationship of men who by circumstance happen to occupy positions where they must deal with each other daily so that the business of this great parliament can be done.

I will be his friend at any time and under any set of circumstances. He is a man who makes us all proud that we are men and who fills us with hope for the future of men.

And now I come back to my own side of the aisle to speak of my good right hand, the senior Senator from Kentucky, EARLE CLEMENTS, the greatest of all the whips. [Applause.]

This able, this effective leader enjoys the confidence and has the admiration of all of us. He is quiet, he is gentle, and all of us can bear witness he is most persuasive. This gentle gentleman from a State of great gentlemen, great politicians, and great statesmen is deserving of all the praise all of us could heap upon his shoulders. And curiously enough, it would embarrass him more than anyone else I know. For here is a modest man, modest in his own evaluation of his great talents. I do not think my colleagues will take offense if I say that modesty is a rare quality.

The truth is that only EARLE CLEMENTS and I know how much he has done for his majority leader. I know it better than he. His comrades at arms will welcome him back to us next January.

My friends, I am tempted to call the roll and after each name tell you of my gratitude to every one of you. But the hour is late, we are tired in body and in mind, and I will spare you this last duty of listening to the majority leader once more.

Instead, I want to mention just briefly those who rarely receive the praise and never receive the rewards for their devotion to the Senate.

There is our distinguished and gracious Secretary of the Senate, Felton Johnston. "Skeeter" Johnston has been for so many years a part of this Chamber that he has become, in fact, even if not in title, "the 97th Senator." The State of Mississippi has sent many great men to the Nation's Capitol; it has in its time produced great Americans and the name of Felton Johnston is on Mississippi's roll of honor.

There is the Chaplain of the Senate, the Reverend Frederick B. Harris, who serves our spiritual needs. To serve our corporeal needs there is Dr. George W. Calver and his staff, and here I want to send for all of us a special word of thanks after Dr. R. W. Gifford, who has recently left us.

And now—Bobby Baker. I know I should refer to him formally as secretary to the majority, but my tongue, even as my heart, says "Bobby" instead. His quick intelligence, his tremendous fund of knowledge about the Senate, which is almost appalling in one so young, has kept the machinery on this side of the aisle working with smooth precision. Always present, always alert, and, more than anything else, always understanding and persuasive with his wise counsel, I say to all of you here tonight that here, indeed, is a young man of rare and real promise.

He is ably assisted, too, by Jessop McDonnell, who has come a long way in a short time.

I hope you will indulge me if I say a special word of thanks to the counsel of the majority policy committee, Gerald Siegel. He knows that I will express my appreciation of gratitude in a more personal way and at a more private time but I cannot let this moment go by without a public expression of this somewhat private debt. But above and beyond his service to me he has served the Senate well. His encyclopedic knowledge of the legislation before us has made the difference, more times than any of us can count, between a good bill and a bad bill. This body owes him much.

Will my colleagues forgive me if I trespass for a moment on their side of the aisle? Every one who sits here can remark upon how ably they have been served by their own people. It is, however, not my function to tell you this and I speak only of the courtesies and the kindnesses and the help and cooperation which they have properly given to us of the majority. I speak of Mark Trice, secretary to the minority. I speak also of Bill Reed and of Don Pierre and of Bill Brownrigg.

I sometimes think that were the temper of this body to change and were open warfare to exist between us, the minority could reduce the majority to impotence almost overnight by telling this handful of four men "just don't cooperate." This I know would never happen and I am happy in expressing to them our heartfelt thanks.

Our thanks go to Sergeant at Arms Joseph C. Duke, the indispensable man from Arizona and his deputy, Robert G. Dumphy. They carry heavy responsibilities and all of us are safer and better cared for because they discharge those responsibilities so ably.

There is Charles L. Watkins, the Senate Parliamentarian, who frequently is the only man who knows where the Senate is and where it is going, and his assistant, Floyd M. Riddick. Without them, we would frequently be powerless to move.

There is Emery L. Frazier, our Chief Clerk, a storehouse of knowledge who probably knows more about the traditions of the Senate than any other living man.

All of us are deeply grateful to Edward J. Hickey, the Journal clerk, and Edward E. Mansur, the legislative clerk. Their duties are important; their rewards are few. But their service is always faithful.

These are the men with whom we are in daily contact on the floor. But off the floor there is a vast corps of hard workers. There is no way of thanking these men adequately. It is difficult to do more than list their names.

I am referring to men like Lewis W. Bailey, executive clerk of the Senate; William H. Wannall, the printing clerk, and his assistant, Thomas N. Gay, the Senate Disbursing Officer, Robert A. Brenkworth, and his assistant, William A. Ridgley; the large corps of official reporters presided over by James W. Murphy, of whom we spoke yesterday; the superintendent of the document room, Theron W. Marshall; and the librarian, Richard D. Hupman.

In the press galleries are the very able staffs headed by Joe Wills, Bill Perry, and Harold McGrath. As we all know, Harold is retiring this session, and we will all miss him.

I would like to say one final word about the Metropolitan Police detail, headed by Capt. Mike Dowd. Mike is the witty, beguiling son of Erin who can rightfully claim every Member as a personal—and charmed—friend.

Mike and his detail are on the job whenever the Senate is in session. And they ably supplement the corps of Capitol police headed by the distinguished Robert C. Pearce.

I must cut the rollcall short. I cannot go down the long list of committee staffs and the many upstanding Americans who play such an important role in the legislative process.

At this hour it is hard to sum up what I have been trying to say. There are, I know, many ways of doing it. Many men have tried before me and most have been successful. There should be an easy way but I have none. At this moment—and for this moment only—I wish I were an admiral and not a Senator. Because then I would merely have to give the traditional order, which is the highest praise of the Navy—"Break out the signals and fly 'well done'."

But I am not an admiral; I am a Senator. All I can say is thanks—thanks to everyone for a job well done.

[Applause, Senators rising.]

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I do not wish this occasion to pass without rising and paying tribute to LYNDON JOHNSON who, I believe, will go down in the history as one of the great leaders of the Senate. I have had the opportunity of working with Senator JOHNSON as closely as any other man in the Senate, be he of his own party or of my party. I know the heavy burdens he has carried. I know of the illness that he suffered not long ago, and of the great recovery that he made from that illness. I know he has carried on his heavy and burdensome duties with courage and ability and integrity and friendship, and has carried on with a knowledge of operations of the Senate which have served well the traditions and the history of the Senate. It has been a great privilege for me as an individual to serve with him, to know him, and to count him as a friend.

I hope that we shall have Lyndon back in a position of leadership, be it on the majority side or the minority side, for many years to come. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I cannot help but express appreciation for his most generous personal remarks about the minority leader. I wish to join with him in paying joint tribute to the very fine staff we have on both the majority and minority sides, all those who day by day serve us in their various capacities and without whom we could not carry on the work of the United States Senate.

I wish at this time to express my word of appreciation to my good friend and colleague, STYLES BRIDGES, who has carried not only the burden of the chairmanship of the Republican Policy Committee, but who is the ranking Republican member of the Committee on Appropriations; to my associate and coworker, LEVERETT SALTONSTALL, the Republican whip; to EUGENE MILLIKIN, another very fine and outstanding Senator who, like the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] is voluntarily retiring from the Senate at the end of this session; to the members of our staff and others who have served us on this side of the aisle.

Mr. President, we who serve in the Senate come to realize that association means a great deal. It is true that we have a center aisle dividing us. The Democrats sit over there and we sit over here, but we consider the great problems of our country as Americans, without any partisan distinction.

I believe that in the history of our country our people can be proud of the fact that in meeting the great issues of the day, men go back and forth across party lines and try to make decisions which will best serve the cause of our common country. So long as we have men like LYNDON JOHNSON and WALTER GEORGE serving the country, the latter having given such great leadership to his party and to his country in foreign affairs, and who, we are all happy to know, is going to serve the Nation in new and high responsibility, we can know that our Nation is safe and that we shall play our full part as Americans in trying to preserve a free world of free men.

[Applause, Senators rising.]

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I agree completely with every word said by the majority leader and with every word said by the minority leader, but on the impulse of the moment we are likely to forget others who have also rendered to the Senate and to Senators individually a great service. I know of one boy in the Secretary's office who has been there at least 49 years and who is a veteran of the First World War.

I speak from personal knowledge when I say that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from New Mexico, and, believe it or not, the chairman of the Republican National Committee, used to be clerks in the Senate, at the time we had such Members as Knox, of Pennsylvania, Penrose, of Pennsylvania, John Sharpe Williams, of Mississippi, and others.

I think it is only proper that those who have served Senators on both sides of the aisle, as has the Negro, Vernon Talbertt, in the Secretary's office, who has been here 49 years, should be paid a tribute on account of their services to the United States Senate.

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE TO RECEIVE MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Texas, and by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That notwithstanding the sine die adjournment of the present session of the Congress, the Secretary be, and he is hereby, authorized to receive messages from the House of Representatives after the sine die adjournment.

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE TO MAKE APPOINTMENTS TO COMMISSIONS OR COMMITTEES AUTHORIZED BY LAW

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Texas, and by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That notwithstanding the final adjournment of the present session of the Congress, the President of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to make appointments to commissions or committees authorized by law, by concurrent action of the two Houses, or by order of the Senate.

COMMITTEE SERVICE

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Texas, and by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SCOTT] be excused from further service as a member of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs; that Mr. HUMPHREYS of Kentucky be and is hereby excused from further service as a member of the Committee on Public Works and assigned to service on the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs; and that Mr. SCOTT be assigned to service on the Committee on Public Works.

NOMINATION OF A POSTMASTER

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, as in executive session, I send to the desk the nomination of a postmaster reported from the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service. I should like to have the nomination confirmed immediately, because the man in question is from the home town of my good friend from West Virginia [Mr. LAIRD], who will not be here very long, and I wanted to give him something while he is here. [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, and as in executive session, the nomination will be read.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Johnston Winston Chapman to be postmaster at Montgomery, W. Va.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed, and, without objection, the President will be notified.

THE THANKS OF THE SENATE TO THE VICE PRESIDENT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution and ask that it be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 328) as follows:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Senate are hereby tendered to the Honorable RICHARD M. NIXON, Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate, for the courteous, dignified, and impartial manner with which he has presided over its deliberations during the second session of the 84th Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution is agreed to. [Applause.]

THE THANKS OF THE SENATE TO SENATOR GEORGE, OF GEORGIA (S. RES. 329)

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 329), as follows:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Senate are hereby tendered to the Honorable WALTER F. GEORGE, President pro tempore of the Senate, for the courteous, dignified, and impartial manner with which he has presided over its deliberations during the second session of the 84th Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

MIKVEH ISRAEL CEMETERY, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of H. R. 7181.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7181) to provide for the designation of Mikveh Israel Cemetery, in Philadelphia, Pa., as a unit of the Independence National Historical Park.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LANDS TO THE INDIANA UNIVERSITY

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 2835.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2835) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to quitclaim all interest of the United States in and to certain lands located in Indiana to the State of Indiana and to the Board of Trustees for the Vincennes University, Vincennes, Indiana.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. It is a quitclaim title bill involving a university in the State of Indiana. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART] is very much interested in the measure. There is a favorable report on it. The bill was reported favorably by the committee, by poll.

Mr. MORSE. Who owns the land now?

Mr. CAPEHART. The Federal Government owns it.

Mr. MORSE. What compensation is the University of Indiana to pay for it?

Mr. CAPEHART. I do not know.

Mr. MORSE. I shall object until I know what that is.

Mr. CAPEHART. Will the Senator withhold his objection? I think the information can be obtained.

Mr. MORSE. Yes. I want to know whether this is simply a case of Federal property being transferred to the University of Indiana without compensation. If it is, then I shall object. If the transfer is to be made without compensation, it is a violation of the principle for which I have been fighting for 10 years.

Mr. CAPEHART subsequently said: Mr. President, I have amendments which I propose to offer.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, in reference to the bill providing for transfer of land in Indiana, the Department of the Interior report itself, which the Senator brought over to me, shows that the Department recommended that the institution involved should pay the fair market value for the property, which is, of course in conformity with the Morse formula, for which I have fought for 10 years, and which, for the record, I should say, has resulted in saving the taxpayers $500 million, if all the savings in 10 years are added up. That is not a bad one-man economy drive, I submit.

The amendment prepared by the Senator himself adopts the recommendation of the Department of the Interior and provides for the payment. The only problem is that I do not know how, at this hour, we can get the amendment adopted by the House and have the bill passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. If the Senator will let the Senate proceed to adopt the amendment, we can get the bill over to the House.

Mr. MORSE. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments of the Senator from Indiana will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed on page 1, line 3, after the word "the", to strike out "Secretary of the Interior" and insert "Administrator of General Services."

On page 1, line 4, after the word "deed", to strike out "without consideration" and insert "upon the payment of the fair market value of the right, title, and interest to be conveyed thereby, less any value resulting from any development or improvement made by the grantee or its predecessors in interest."

On page 2, line 6, after the word "The", to strike out "Secretary" and insert "Administrator."

On page 2, strike out lines 21 to 25, inclusive, and insert the following:

"SEC. 2. The Administrator of General Services shall execute the conveyances described in the first section of this act only after he has been informed by the interested parties that the following conditions have been met:".

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART].

The amendments were agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 2835) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, (a) the Administrator of General Services is authorized and directed to convey by quitclaim deed, upon the payment of the fair market value of the right, title, and interest to be conveyed thereby, less any value resulting from any development or improvement made by the grantee or its predecessors in interest, to the State of Indiana all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to that parcel of land located in the city of Vincennes, Ind., title to which was vested previously in the city of Vincennes, Ind., by the act of March 3, 1881 (21 Stat. 505), and which is more particularly described as follows: All that part of survey numbered 5 in Upper Prairie surveys, township 3 north, range 10 west, which lies between Second Street and Fourth Street in the city of Vincennes, all in Knox County, State of Indiana.

(b) The Administrator is further authorized and directed to convey by quitclaim deed, without consideration, to the board of trustees for the Vincennes University, Vincennes, Ind., all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to that parcel of land located in the city of Vincennes, Ind., title to which was vested in the city of Vincennes, Ind., by the act of March 3, 1881 (21 Stat. 505), and which was authorized to be conveyed with certain reservations to the board of trustees for the Vincennes University by the act of June 30, 1944 (58 Stat. 645), and which is more particularly described as follows: All that part of survey numbered 5 in Upper Prairie surveys, township 3 north, range 10 west, which lies between Second Street in the city of Vincennes and the Wabash River, all in Knox County, State of Indiana.

SEC. 2. The Administrator of General Services shall execute the conveyances described in the first section of this act only after he has been informed by the interested parties that the following conditions have been met:

(1) That the city of Vincennes, Ind., has released and conveyed to the State of Indiana any right, title, and interest that such city may have in and to the lands described in subsection (a) of the first section of this act;

(2) That the city of Vincennes, Ind., has released and conveyed to the board of trustees for the Vincennes University any right, title, and interest that such city may have in and to the lands described in subsection (b) of the first section of this act; and

(3) That the board of trustees for the Vincennes University has released and conveyed to the State of Indiana any right, title, and interest that such board of trustees may have in and to the lands described in subsection (a) of the first section of this act.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the Administrator of General Services to quitclaim all interest of the United States in and to certain lands located in Indiana to the State of Indiana and to the board of trustees for the Vincennes University, Vincennes, Ind."

PROPOSED MERGER LEGISLATION

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, while Senators who are interested in the bill are securing the information necessary for the Senate to act, I should like to say that I have never seen a session approach adjournment in a more felicitous mood. The splendid speech of the majority leader and the equally fine speech of the minority leader leave us all very deeply touched.

Yet, Mr. President, I feel an obligation to make a comment and to make a request which I hope will not in any way impair the felicitous atmosphere in the Senate.

Early in the evening, before the conference reports were being sent over by the House to be submitted to the Senate for agreement—one of which was presented by me—I gave notice to the Senate that it would be my intention to ask to separate a bill which came to the Senate from the House of Representatives last April and which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for action, and which, by the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, was assigned to the subcommittee of which I have been the acting chairman, namely, the Committee on Antitrust and Monopoly.

The bill which came to our committee, and to which we gave lengthy and diligent attention, was a procedural bill approved by the Department of Justice to enable the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission to be notified in due time by companies proposing to merge. It was an attempt by law to enable the Antitrust Division, the Department of Justice, and the Federal Trade Commission to begin prosecutions before the mergers became like scrambled eggs.

The Committee on the Judiciary unfortunately was prevented by certain events which took place during the closing days of the session from sitting during the sessions of the Senate in order to complete consideration of the bill. A request was made by one of the Members of the Senate, in absentia, to postpone consideration for a week. That made it impossible for the committee to consider this simple—and I say simple advisedly—procedural bill until Thursday, July 26.

The committee met that morning, and at that session there was added to the bill by motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] another House bill which had been referred to the Senate in June. This was H. R. 1840.

It seems to me, in all the good feeling which is being shown tonight on both sides of the aisle, we ought to pay some courtesy to the House of Representatives and, if possible, return to the House the bills which they have sent to us for our consideration. The bill has become a sort of omnibus bill because of the addition, by amendment, of the bill which is sometimes called the Kefauver bill, sometimes called the Patman bill, and sometimes called the Rodgers bill, which was designed to amend the Clayton Act with respect to the good faith defenses provided in that act.

I felt frankly, as I told the Senator from Tennessee when he presented that amendment, that the only result would be that we would probably not have an opportunity to consider the measure in time before adjournment.

But there has occurred to me, as I said earlier this evening, an opportunity to bring the matter to a favorable conclusion. I think that in the splendid mood in which the Senate is now enjoying itself, wonders can be done by unanimous consent. [Laughter.]

So I should like to ask—I promised the Senator from Tennessee that I would ask—that the bill which he offered as an amendment to the procedural bill which we had studied in the committee for months be separated from the bill which has been reported to the Senate by the Committee on the Judiciary, the omnibus bill, bearing No. H. R. 9424. I should like to ask, if it is possible to do so, by unanimous consent, to separate that measure from the other with the understanding that no amendment may be added to it, and with the further understanding that there shall be no debate except 20 minutes, 10 minutes to each side.

If the Senate would give unanimous consent to that request, then the Senate could proceed to the consideration of section 3 of this bill.

If the Senate should deny that request, then I would ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H. R. 9424 minus section 3.

Having fully explained the request, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, it is very difficult to oppose a request by such a genial and fine friend and Senator as the junior Senator from Wyoming. I agree with him that much good will and brotherly kindliness are being shown tonight. I do not wish to destroy it. Therefore, I shall have to object. [Laughter.]

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I did not understand the part of the unanimous-consent request to which the Senator from Ohio objected.

Mr. BRICKER. To the only request which was made.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, the bill, H. R. 1840, which, because there was only one last meeting of the Committee on the Judiciary, was added as an amendment to the major bill, which is H. R. 9424, is one of the most important pieces of proposed legislation for small business that has been before Congress in a long, long time. It is made important because of the fact that small business failures have been increasing greatly in the past few years. Small-business profits in the past 4 years are down from 8.6 percent to 2.2 percent. Small business is being crushed under the increasing concentration of economic monopoly.

The bill is intended simply to amend the Clayton Act and the Robinson-Patman Act so as to carry out what Congress intended to do when the bills were enacted in 1936. In other words, the intent is to make it impossible or unlawful for a seller to discriminate in the matter of prices to purchasers, retailers, or wholesalers, unless the discrimination is based upon the size of the order or the cost, where the result would be to create a monopoly or lessen competition.

The majority of the Federal Trade Commission are in favor of it. Full hearings have been held on the bill. It is important for small business. As a representative of the wholesale grocers said in testimony, "A lot of good people we have today will not be here next year, when Congress can straighten out the situation we have facing us today."

Full hearings have been held in the Senate and the House. An amendment has been offered to take care of any question of freight rate absorption.

I certainly hope, even at this late hour, that the Senator from Ohio will reconsider his objection and let us at least discuss the bill and vote on it, so there can be a determination by the Senate as to whether there should be given this greatly needed protection to small business and the small merchants of the United States.

I do not believe a discussion of the bill would take very long, probably 10 minutes to a side. I think there is great interest in the bill. The bill is sponsored by some 30 Members of the Senate. The Senate should be able to vote on it tonight.

I hope the Senator from Ohio will reconsider his objection to the bill.

In conclusion, I should like to say to the Senator from Ohio that the bill has been sponsored by 30 Senators, and it passed the House by an overwhelming vote. I think we are entitled to vote on the merits of the bill. It is a simple bill. Ten minutes to each side should be sufficient to explain it. I think it is important for small business and industry.

I wonder if the Senator from Ohio will withdraw his objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I will not withdraw my objection.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I did not understand the Senator from Ohio. Did he say he would or would not?

Mr. BRICKER. I will not withdraw my objection to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

AUTHORIZATION TO SIGN ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution 277.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution 277, which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That, notwithstanding the sine die adjournment of the two Houses, the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate be, and they are hereby, authorized to sign enrolled bills and joint resolutions duly passed by the two Houses and found truly enrolled.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION—NOMINATION

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, as in executive session I ask unanimous consent that the Senate consider and confirm the nomination which I now send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the nomination.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Harry L. Bolen, of Illinois, to be a member of the Mississippi River Commission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask that the President be immediately notified of the nomination today confirmed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

LAKE MICHIGAN WATER DIVERSION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3210) to authorize the State of Illinois and the Sanitary District of Chicago, under the direction of the Secretary of the Army, to test, on a 3-year basis, the effect of increasing the diversion of water from Lake Michigan into the Illinois Waterway, and for other purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. What is the pending business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending business is the Lake Michigan water diversion bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I asked the distinguished Senator from Ohio if he would yield to me briefly. He graciously did so, and I now yield to him, with the hope that he may make a brief statement, so the Senate may proceed to vote the bill up or down.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I had intended to read excerpts from the testimony, which I had not seen before. Much of the opposition comes from States in the lower Great Lakes region.

I read a statement in the testimony to the effect that Chicago is the healthiest city in the United States. As a result of that testimony, I am not alarmed by the statement of Illinois that the health of Chicago would be imperiled.

In the second place, the bill is opposed by the Bureau of the Budget, and by the administration. The President vetoed a similar bill 2 years ago. We are asked to pass a bill without having received a final report from the Commission which was appointed to investigate the matter, not knowing whether water can be diverted without doing damage to the lower lakes or doing damage to shipping.

I am therefore compelled to oppose the bill.

My mind goes back to the case to which the Senator from Illinois referred a moment ago, wherein a distinguished former Chief Justice of the United States made a finding against the city of Chicago, requiring it to comply with an order—an ex parte order, I grant, but an order—that there be built a disposal plant for the city of Chicago to take care of its sewage. A few years later it was necessary—I happened to be one of many counsel in that case—for me, representing the great State of Ohio, to bring a citation contempt in the Supreme Court of the United States to compel the city of Chicago to comply with that order.

I do not know for sure whether the order was completely complied with or not, but at least the results are apparent that improvement has taken place in sewage disposal at Chicago. I have no question in my mind that Chicago could meet its needs, if it wanted to put up the money, without having to be a detriment to shipping on the lower lakes.

This problem becomes more magnified because of the fact that we have passed the St. Lawrence Waterway improvement bill. The channels for the cities on the south shore of Lake Erie will have to be deepened. The same thing is true of Pennsylvania and New York. The same thing is true in Michigan. It costs millions upon hundreds of millions of dollars, both Federal money, State money, and local money, to deepen the channels. Every inch makes many thousands of dollars of difference in the cost, as well as lessening the amount of tonnage which can be carried per ship into the Great Lakes ports.

So I think the Senate should defeat the bill at this late hour. We have not had an opportunity thoroughly to investigate the bill, thoroughly to argue it, and completely to understand it. The testimony is not given in the committee report. The only adverse statement in the committee report is that from the administration, which, of course, was responsible for the veto 2 years ago.

So, Mr. President, in my judgment, the bill should be defeated at this time, and should be taken up after the report of the Commission has been made, so that we may have all the facts upon which to predicate a proper judgment.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. Does not the Senator from Ohio think that possibly the fear of an unfavorable report may be responsible for the unseemly haste in trying to achieve this diversion before a report can be made? Is it likely that if the proponents of the bill anticipated a favorable report, they would be undertaking in the last 3 hours of this session to push through a bill which would divert up to 5,000 feet of water at the low-water period from the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence River into the Illinois Canal?

Mr. BRICKER. I certainly would not want to attribute to the proponents of the bill any such motive, although exactly the same thing happened 2 years ago, and in the same way, at the last hour of that session.

Mr. AIKEN. And the President who vetoed the bill then is the President today.

Mr. BRICKER. I think the urge comes from the city of Chicago, which up to this time has been unwilling to meet its own obligations. I say that in view of the fact that it was necessary to bring a citation of contempt against the city in 1932, in order to force it to comply with the master's order.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. BRICKER. I am happy to yield to my friend, the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I believe the Senator from Ohio and likewise the Senator from Vermont take both sides, by saying there was not adequate time in which to consider this matter, whereas it was considered by the Senate 3 years ago. Both the Senate and the House of Representatives passed an almost identical bill at that time.

This bill was passed by the House of Representatives nearly a year ago.

So, Mr. President, over a period of 3 years, there has been ample time for Members of the House of Representatives and Members of the Senate to fortify themselves on the issues involved in this matter. Certainly that would be enough time to enable the busiest Member of the Senate to familiarize himself with the provisions of a simple, two-page bill.

Mr. BRICKER. Then, in the light of the statement made by the Senator from Illinois, I plead guilty to neglect; but this is the first time I have seen the typewritten copy of the record, and there is no printed copy; and this is the first time I knew the bill was to be brought up tonight.

So I plead guilty to what the Senator from Illinois states. However, we have been rather busy; and I think every Senator can understand that situation.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. President, I wish to assure the Senator from Ohio that I would be the last one on earth to attempt to cast the slightest reflection or aspersion upon one whose friendship I value so very highly.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I did not consider the Senator's remarks in that light at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to amendment.

If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Texas [Mr. DANIEL], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] are absent on official business.

I further announce, if present and voting, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], would each vote "yea."

Mr. KNOWLAND. I announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. WELKER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. POTTER] is absent by leave of the Senate on official business as a member of the American Battle Monuments Commission.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ALLOTT], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BUTLER] are detained on official business.

I also announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BUSH], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] are necessarily absent.

If present and voting, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. WELKER] would each vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 33, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, its reading clerk, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the following bill and joint resolution of the Senate:

S. 1355. An act for the relief of William Luke Phalen; and

S. J. Res. 199. Joint resolution to authorize an additional position of Assistant Director in the Bureau of the Budget.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 938) to provide for the payment and collection of wages in the District of Columbia, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 276) providing for the sine die adjournment of Congress on July 27, 1956, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 277) providing that notwithstanding the sine die adjournment of the two Houses, the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate be authorized to sign enrolled bills and joint resolutions found to be truly enrolled, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

DIMINUTION, CONTROL, AND TREATMENT OF JUVENILE DELINQUENCY

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar 2813, Senate bill 4267.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 4267) to provide for assistance to and cooperation with States in strengthening and improving State and local programs for the diminution, control, and treatment of juvenile delinquency.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4267.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, the purpose of the proposed legislation is to authorize programs which the Federal Government can usefully undertake to combat the growing problem of juvenile delinquency.

The programs set forth in the proposed bill would operate for the most part through the States, by grants-in-aid.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Delinquent Children's Act of 1956."

FINDINGS AND POLICIES

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress hereby finds and declares that—

(1) juvenile delinquency, since it is a social disability that impedes the development of children into responsible citizens, thereby diminishes the strength and vitality of the Nation;

(2) juvenile delinquency is a steadily mounting problem of nationwide proportions in both our urban and rural communities, the problem overreaches local and even State boundaries in some of its aspects; State and local resources, especially in regard to the availability of specialized facilities and professional personnel trained to handle the problems of delinquency, are, in most cases, inadequate; and

(3) although major factors in juvenile delinquency are basically related to conditions in the home, the neighborhood, the community, and the State, requiring concerted and coordinated action on those fronts, the Federal Government can and should provide such leadership as is possible in stimulating home, neighborhood, community, and State efforts, and should undertake such measures as the neighborhoods, communities, local institutions, and States cannot initiate or support by themselves.

(b) It shall, therefore, be the national policy to provide such Federal leadership and such funds as may be required: to stimulate and promote the training of specialized personnel, and to supplement State and local resources for this and other purposes, and to encourage coordination and planning among public and voluntary nonprofit agencies whose programs relate to the diminution, control, and treatment of juvenile delinquency, especially those agencies concerned with the welfare, health (including mental health), spiritual development, education, and recreation of children and youth, and to assist the States in strengthening, improving, and encouraging State and community programs to diminish, control, and treat juvenile delinquency, both as specialized programs and as part of general State, community, and neighborhood programs related to the problem of juvenile delinquency.

TITLE I—ESTABLISHMENT OF FEDERAL ADVISORY COUNCIL ON JUVENILE DELINQUENCY

SEC. 101. In order to provide the Secretary with advice concerning programs for the diminution, control, and treatment of juvenile delinquency, and to help carry out the purposes of this act, there is hereby established in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare a Federal Advisory Council on Juvenile Delinquency (hereinafter referred to as the "Council"). The Council shall consist of the Secretary or his designee, representing the Secretary, and 21 members appointed by the Secretary without regard to civil-service laws. The 21 members so appointed, none of whom shall be officers or full-time employees of the Federal Government, shall be eminent in fields related to juvenile delinquency such as education, law, child psychology, criminology, penology, sociology, psychiatry, social work, juvenile court work, probation and parole services, spiritual guidance, recreation work, police work, and community organization work and representatives of the public well known for leadership in programs concerned with juvenile delinquency. In making such appointments, the Secretary shall give due consideration to recommendations for such appointments submitted to him by private voluntary organizations and professional associations interested in and associated with the above fields, including, but not limited to, such organizations as the National Association of Social Workers, the American Public Welfare Association, the American Public Health Association, the Industrial Areas Foundation, the National Association of Training Schools and Juvenile Agencies, the Child Welfare League of America, the Family Service Association of America, the National Council of Juvenile Court Judges, the International Association of Chiefs of Police, the National Probation and Parole Association, the American Bar Association, the National Education Association, the American Association of School Administrators, the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, and the American Medical Association.

SEC. 102. The terms of each of the 21 appointed members of the Council shall be for 4 years, except that the first Council shall be appointed as follows: 7 members shall be appointed for 16 months, 7 members shall be appointed for 32 months, and 7 members shall be appointed for 4 years. Any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor is appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term.

SEC. 103. The Council shall, among other duties and functions, submit an annual report to the Secretary. The Council shall make such additional reports, from time to time, to the Secretary, as the Council shall deem necessary and appropriate, which reports, in the discretion of the Council, shall be of public record. Such reports shall deal with the status of the problem of juvenile delinquency, the progress being made with the problem, and shall contain such recommendations as the Council may deem appropriate with regard to any matter covered under this act: Provided, That the Council's annual reports shall be submitted by the Secretary to the Congress, and the Secretary, in transmitting such reports, shall append such comments, especially with respect to recommendations contained therein, as he may deem appropriate: Provided further, That such of the Council's reports to the Secretary which the Council decides shall be of public record shall be made public by the Secretary, together with such comment by the Secretary as he may deem appropriate.

SEC. 104. The Council is authorized to comment upon applications for special projects submitted to the Secretary under title IV of this act and to recommend to the Secretary for grants under such title any such projects or any projects proposed by the Council which show promise of making valuable contributions to the diminution, control, or treatment of juvenile delinquency. The Secretary is authorized to utilize the services of any member or members of the Council in connection with matters relating to this act, for such periods, in addition to conference periods, as he may determine.

SEC. 105. Decisions by the Council in regard to reports or in regard to any other matters within its jurisdiction shall be by majority vote of all the members of the Council, except that the Secretary or his designee may not vote except in the case of a tie.

SEC. 106. Appointed members of the Council, while attending meetings of the Council or while otherwise serving at the request of the Secretary, shall be entitled to receive compensation at a rate to be fixed by the Secretary, but not exceeding $50 per diem, and shall also be entitled to receive expenses while so serving away from their places of residence.

SEC. 107. The Council shall elect a chairman and a secretary who shall serve without additional compensation and the Council shall be provided by the Secretary with such technical, consultative, clerical, and other assistance as the Council shall require, subject to the approval of the Secretary.

TITLE II—GRANTS TO STATES TO STRENGTHEN AND IMPROVE PROGRAMS

SEC. 201. For the purpose of assisting the States to strengthen and improve State and local programs for the diminution, control, and treatment of juvenile delinquency, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1957, the sum of $5 million, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1958, the sum of $7,500,000, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1959, the sum of $10 million, and for each of the following 4 fiscal years such sums as the Congress may determine.

SEC. 202. The sums appropriated under section 201 shall be available for making grants to States to assist them to establish, strengthen, and improve, under approved State plans, programs for the diminution, control, and treatment of juvenile delinquency by—

(A) determining the most urgent needs of the State and localities for the diminution, control, and treatment of juvenile delinquency;

(B) developing a plan of priorities for meeting such needs in a coordinated and balanced manner;

(C) coordinating, on a continuing basis, the execution of such plans;

(D) providing either directly or through entering into contracts with private voluntary organizations demonstrations of improved services for the location, treatment, and aftercare of delinquent youth; and

(E) conducting either directly or through entering into contracts with private voluntary organizations research and investigations for assessing the causes and extent of juvenile delinquency and the effectiveness of existing programs for the diminution, control, and treatment of juvenile delinquency, and for developing improved methods for the diminution, control, and treatment of juvenile delinquency.

SEC. 203. The Secretary shall approve any State plan for carrying out the purposes set forth in section 202 if he finds that such plan—

(A) designates a State agency which shall, either directly or through arrangements with other State or local agencies, carry out such purposes;

(B) shows that in developing such plan there has been consultation with and among representatives of State agencies concerned with juvenile delinquency, including to the extent feasible the State welfare, education, health, and labor departments, mental health and vocational rehabilitation authorities, the employment service, State and local agencies responsible for services to, or care of, delinquent youth, and private voluntary organizations engaged in or responsible for such services and persons representative of juvenile courts and probation and police services; and provides for the participation of such agencies, representatives, organizations and persons in carrying out the purposes of section 202 and for coordination of public and voluntary services within the State dealing with juvenile delinquency in furtherance of the national policy as set forth in section 2 of this act;

(C) provides for financial participation by the State;

(D) provides for the establishment of a State advisory council to advise the designated State agency on the administration of the program under this act; such council to be representative of private voluntary organizations, professional associations and civic groups interested in the problems of children and youth, especially juvenile delinquency;

(E) provides for a determination of the most urgent needs of the State for strengthening and improving its programs for the diminution, control, and treatment of juvenile delinquency, for developing plans for strengthening and improving such programs, and for planning and initiating a program or training of specialized personnel for such programs;

(F) provides that the State agency designated to carry out such plan shall make such reports, in such form, and containing such information as the Secretary may from time to time reasonably require, and shall comply with such provisions as he may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports;

(G) provides for such methods of administration (including methods relating to the establishment and maintenance of personnel standards on a merit basis except that (A) the Secretary may, if he determines that this requirement is not feasible or would unduly delay the maximum effectiveness of a State plan, exempt portions of a State plan from this requirement and (B) the Secretary shall exercise no authority with respect to the selection, tenure of office and compensation of any individual employed in accordance with such methods) as are necessary for the proper and efficient operation of the plan; and

(H) makes a substantial contribution toward the fulfillment of the purposes set forth in section 2 of this act.

SEC. 204. (a) From the sums made available in any fiscal year for grants to States under section 202, each State shall be entitled to an allotment of an amount which bears the same ratio to such sums as the child population of such State bears to the child population of all States. The allotment to any State under the preceding sentence for a fiscal year which is less than $50,000 shall be increased to that amount, the total of the increases thereby required being derived by proportionately reducing the allotments to each of the remaining States under the preceding sentence but with such adjustments as may be necessary to prevent the allotment of any such remaining States from being thereby reduced to less than $50,000.

(b) From each State's allotment under this section for any fiscal year the Secretary shall pay to such State an amount equal to its Federal share (as defined in section 507 (B)) of the cost of carrying out the purposes set forth in section 202 in accordance with its State plan approved under section 203: Provided, That, from each State's allotment for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1957, and June 30, 1958, the Secretary shall pay to such State an amount equal to 100 percent of so much of the cost of carrying out the purposes set forth in section 202 as does not exceed $30,000 for the 2 years combined, and an amount equal to the Federal share (as defined in section 507 (B)) of the cost of carrying out the purposes set forth in section 202 as exceeds $30,000.

(c) At such time or times of each fiscal year as the Secretary determines, after receiving advice from the States with respect thereto, that the amounts (if any) to be paid to any State from its initial allotment for such year will total less than such allotment, the Secretary shall reallot the portion of such initial allotment which he determines will not be so paid to such State. Such portion shall be available to other States which the Secretary determines have need in carrying out their State plans for amounts in excess of their initial allotment; such reallotment to be made on the basis of such State plans after taking into consideration the child population of each such State as compared with such population of all such States. Any amount so reallotted to a State shall be deemed part of its allotment under section 204 (b).

TITLE III—GRANTS FOR TRAINING PERSONNEL

SEC. 301. For the purpose of training personnel employed, or preparing for employment, in programs for the diminution, control, and treatment of juvenile delinquency, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1957, the sum of $5,000,000 and for each of the following 7 fiscal years such sums as the Congress may determine.

SEC. 302. The sums appropriated under this title shall be available for grants to States and to approved nonprofit institutions of higher learning for paying the cost of training personnel employed, or preparing for employment, in programs for the diminution, control, and treatment of juvenile delinquency, or for the development of courses for such training, including the establishment and maintenance of such fellowships and traineeships, with such stipends and allowances (including travel and subsistence expenses) as the Secretary may determine to be necessary.

SEC. 303. Payments under this title may be made in advance or by way of reimbursement for services performed and purchases made as may be determined by the Secretary and shall be made on such conditions as the Secretary finds necessary to carry out the purposes of this title.

TITLE IV—GRANTS FOR SPECIAL PROJECTS

SEC. 401. For the purpose of demonstrating or developing improved techniques and practices for the diminution, control, and treatment of juvenile delinquency, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1957, the sum of $1 million, and for each of the following 6 fiscal years such sums as the Congress may determine.

SEC. 402. The sums appropriated under this title shall be available for grants to States and to public and private nonprofit institutions of higher learning or research for paying the costs of special projects carried out directly or through contracts with private voluntary organizations which, in the judgment of the Secretary, hold promise of making a substantial contribution to the strengthening or improvement of programs for the diminution, control, or treatment of juvenile delinquency. States may expend such sums as are made available under this title either directly or through the political subdivisions of the State. Any grant of funds under this title which will be used for direct services to delinquent children must have prior approval of the State agency supervising the administration of the State plan pursuant to title II of this act.

SEC. 403. Payments under this title may be made in advance or by way of reimbursement for services performed and purchases made as may be determined by the Secretary, and shall be made on such conditions as the Secretary finds necessary to carry out the purposes of this title.

TITLE V—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 501. In carrying out his duties under this act, the Secretary shall—

(A) make such studies, investigations, demonstrations, and reports as will promote the strengthening of programs for the diminution, control, and treatment of juvenile delinquency;

(B) cooperate with and render technical assistance to States in matters relating to such programs;

(C) disseminate information as to the studies, investigations, demonstrations, and reports referred to in paragraph (A) hereof and as to other matters relating to such programs; and

(D) until June 30, 1958, provide short-term courses of training and instruction in technical matters relating to the diminution, control, and treatment of juvenile delinquency, including the establishment and maintenance of such fellowships and traineeships, with such stipends and allowances (including travel and subsistence expenses), as he may deem necessary, except that no such training or instruction (or fellowship or scholarship) shall be provided any individual for any one course of study for a period in excess of one year.

SEC. 502. The Secretary is authorized to make regulations governing the administration of this act.

SEC. 503. The Secretary shall include in his annual report a full report of the administration of this act.

SEC. 504. There are hereby authorized to be included for each fiscal year in the appropriation for the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare such sums as are necessary to administer this act.

SEC. 505. The method of computing and paying amounts pursuant to section 204 shall be as follows:

(A) The Secretary shall, prior to the beginning of each calendar quarter or other period prescribed by him, estimate the amount to be paid to each State under the provisions of such section for such period, such estimate to be based on such records of the State body and information furnished by it, and such other investigation, as the Secretary may find necessary.

(B) The Secretary shall pay to the State, from the allotment available therefor, the amount so estimated by him for any period, reduced or increased, as the case may be, by any sum (not previously adjusted under this paragraph) by which he finds that his estimate of the amount to be paid to the State for any prior period under such section was greater or less than the amount which should have been paid to the State for such prior period under such section. Such payments shall be made through the disbursing facilities of the Treasury Department, in such installments as the Secretary may determine.

SEC. 506. (a) Whenever the Secretary, after reasonable notice and opoprtunity for hearings to the State body supervising the administration of the State plan pursuant to title II finds (1) that the State plan or a specified portion of the State plan submitted and approved under section 203 has been so changed that it no longer complies with a provision required by section 203 to be included in the plan, or (2) that in the administration of the plan or a specified portion of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with such a provision, the Secretary shall notify the State body that no further payments will be made to the State under section 204 (b) (or, in his discretion, that further payments will not be made to the State for portions of the State plan affected by such failure) until he is satisfied that there will not longer be such failure. Until he is so satisfied, the Secretary shall make no further payments to such State under section 204 (b) (or shall limit payments to portions of the State plan in which there is no such failure).

(b) If any State is dissatisfied with the Secretary's action under subsection (a), such State may appeal to the United States Court of Appeals for the circuit in which such State is located. The summons and notice of appeal may be served at any place in the United States. The findings of fact by the Secretary, unless substantially contrary to the weight of the evidence, shall be conclusive; but the court, for good cause shown, may remand the case to the Secretary to take further evidence, and the Secretary may thereupon make new or modified findings of fact and may modify his previous action. Such new or modified findings of fact shall likewise be conclusive unless substantially contrary to the weight of the evidence. The court shall have jurisdiction to affirm the action of the Secretary or to set it aside, in whole or in part. The judgment of the court shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in title 28, United States Code, section 1254.

SEC. 507. For the purposes of this act—

(A) The term "State" includes Alaska, Hawaii, the District of Columbia, the Virgin Islands, and Puerto Rico.

(B) (1) The "Federal share" for any State shall be 100 percent less that percentage which bears the same ratio to 50 percent as the per capita income of such State bears to the per capita income of the continental United States (excluding Alaska), except that (A) the Federal share shall in no case be more than 66⅔ percent or less than 33⅓ percent, and (B) the Federal share for Hawaii and Alaska shall be 50 percent, and for Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands shall be 66⅔ percent.

(2) The "Federal shares" shall be promulgated by the Secretary between July 1 and September 30 of each odd-numbered year, on the basis of the average of the per capita incomes of the States and of the continental United States (excluding Alaska) for the three most recent consecutive years for which satisfactory data are available from the Department of Commerce. Such promulgation shall be conclusive for each of the two fiscal years in the period beginning July 1 next succeeding such promulgation.

(C) The term "child population" means the population under the age of 21 years, and the "population" and "child population" of the several States shall be determined on the basis of the latest figures furnished by the Department of Commerce.

(D) The term "programs for the diminution, control, and treatment of juvenile delinquency" shall include programs for the control and treatment of delinquent youth up to the age of 21 years.

SEC. 508. Not later than January 1, 1962, the Secretary shall transmit to the President for transmission to the Congress a report of the experience had by Federal, State, and local agencies in the administration of this act, together with his recommendations and the recommendations of the Council as to the expiration, continuance, or revision of the act.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a statement which I have prepared on the subject of the bill just passed.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR LEHMAN

I am gratefully pleased that the Senate has an opportunity to act on S. 4267, the Delinquent Children's Act of 1956.

I am also proud that, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Juvenile Delinquency of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, I directed the drafting of this bill. I wish to pay tribute at this time to my colleagues on that subcommittee, the distinguished Senators from Michigan [Mr. McNAMARA], and from Connecticut [Mr. PURTELL]. Considerable credit should also be paid to the able members of the Senate Subcommittee on Juvenile Delinquency—a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary—for the findings and recommendations they have made as a result of many hearings throughout the country. Many of their findings and recommendations are embodied in the Delinquent Children's Act of 1956.

This legislation is vitally important to the future well-being of our Nation. It deals with a subject which should be of urgent and overriding concern to each and every one of us here in this Chamber and to each and every American in our Nation. This bill deals with a precious commodity—our Nation's children. It is to them that we must look to carry on what we here so earnestly strive to accomplish. It is to them that we shall one day entrust our cares and duties. Our Nation will be only as strong as the strength of our children. As we strive earnestly to provide for them a clean and wholesome upbringing, so do we strive simultaneously for the strength and worth of our Nation.

We read daily in the papers of horrendous crimes committed by our youth. Banner headlines proclaim this robbery or that burglary, this car theft or that mugging.

What are the facts? Has the situation been overstated? Is the problem of juvenile delinquency not as serious as it has been made out to be? Is it all a matter of newspaper headlines?

Unfortunately, the case has not been overstated. It is not a matter of newspaper headlines. Juvenile delinquency is a serious problem gnawing at the very vitals of our Nation. It must be checked and brought under control.

I appreciate that our children and youth cannot be presented in the form of cold statistics. I know only too well that they are living, breathing human beings with a life before them which we have the power to enrich and make fruitful and useful to themselves and to the Nation.

But figures can tell a story. And the story they tell about juvenile delinquency is not a pretty story. It is a very disturbing and in many ways a frightening story. Delinquency court cases have been rising for the past 7 years. Percentagewise, it has been rising far faster than our juvenile population. In 1955, delinquent children coming to the attention of juvenile courts rose 9 percent, while the child population rose only 3 percent. For the corresponding year, the Federal Bureau of Investigation figures show an 11.4 percent rise in police arrests of young persons under 18 as compared to the preceding year.

Here is another cold, hard fact, Mr. President. In 1954, 1 out of every 13 children in the United States between the ages of 10 and 17 was in trouble with the law.

Think of it, Mr. President, 1 out of every 13 children.

Here is another fact, Mr. President. One and one-third million children were picked up by the police; 335,000 were sent by the police to juvenile court; 40,000 of these children were committed to training schools for delinquent children.

And that is not the worst of it, Mr. President. It has been estimated that unless this upward trend can be brought to a halt, and brought to a halt quickly, by 1960 the number of children between the ages of 10 and 17 getting into trouble with the police will increase to 2 million.

I am looking at this in perspective. I am not overlooking the fact that the vast majority of our boys and girls will grow up to become decent, upright, law-abiding men and women who will do this Nation proud. I am not gainsaying the worth and the integrity of the vast majority of our children.

But to say that the vast majority of our children will not be stricken with polio is not the same as saying that this Nation is not concerned with those who may be so stricken.

The same is true about juvenile delinquency.

What is there to do?

Juvenile delinquency has many causes and contributing factors. It cannot be attacked on a single front. It must be attacked on many fronts.

Juvenile delinquency is not a problem for the experts alone. Juvenile delinquency is everybody's problem. It must be attacked and brought under control by everyone.

Too long have we allowed this problem of juvenile delinquency to be shuttled aside—to be handled as though it were of concern only to a limited number of people. It must be made the concern of all of us.

That is what this bill attempts to do.

It seeks to provide Federal leadership in an all-out attack on the problem. It seeks to achieve coordination of all forces at the State and local levels to bring about the diminution, control, and treatment of juvenile delinquency.

I shall not burden the Senate with a recitation of the details of this bill. It establishes a Federal advisory council on juvenile delinquency, advisory to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, as well as a system of grants to assist States in extending and improving their programs for the diminution, control, and treatment of juvenile delinquency and grants for training of much needed personnel to work in this program. It also provides grants for special projects to demonstrate new techniques of fighting juvenile delinquency. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, to have printed at the end of my remarks a brief analysis of this bill.

I earnestly—I sincerely—urge with all the persuasion at my command, the favorable consideration of this bill.

S. 4267, DELINQUENT CHILDREN'S ACT OF 1956: ANALYSIS OF MAJOR PROVISIONS

1. Establishes a 21-member Federal Advisory Council on Juvenile Delinquency in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare with members being chosen from among knowledgeable persons in the various fields concerned with the problems of juvenile delinquency. The Council would be advisory to the Secretary of the Department with respect to juvenile delinquency programs, would comment upon applications for grants for special projects in this field and would recommend to the Secretary such of these projects as show promise of making a valuable contribution to the diminution, control or treatment of juvenile delinquency.

2. Authorizes, for a period of 7 years, Federal grants-in-aid to the States to assist them in strengthening and improving State and local programs for the diminution, control or treatment of juvenile delinquency. Appropriations authorized would be $5 million for 1957, $7,500,000 for 1958, $10 million for 1959, and such sums as the Congress determines for the next 4 years. Allotments of the funds appropriated are to be made on the basis of child population. The amount of State matching funds required would vary inversely with per capita income within a minimum of 33⅓ percent and a maximum of 66⅔ percent. The Federal grants are to be used by the States to determine the most urgent needs of the State and localities for the diminution, control and treatment of juvenile delinquency, to develop a plan to meet those needs to coordinate the execution of such plan, to provide demonstrations of improved services for the location, treatment and aftercare of delinquent youth, and to conduct research and investigations with respect to the causes and extent of juvenile delinquency, the effectiveness of programs, and improved methods for the diminution, control and treatment of juvenile delinquency. Funds would be made available to States submitting State plans approved as meeting the requirements set forth in the bill. A provision for the reallotment of unused funds is also contained in the bill.

3. Authorizes the appropriation annually for 8 years of funds for grants to the States and to approved nonprofit institutions of higher learning for training personnel employed, or preparing for employment, in programs for the control and treatment of juvenile delinquency. The amount authorized is $5 million for 1957 and, for the next 7 years, such sums as Congress determines.

4. Authorizes the appropriation annually for 7 years of funds for grants to States and to public and private nonprofit institutions of higher learning for research for special projects which hold promise of strengthening or improving programs for the diminution, control or treatment of juvenile delinquency. The amount authorized is $1 million for 1957 and, for the next 6 years, such sums as Congress determines.

5. Authorizes the Secretary of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to make and disseminate information relative to studies, investigations, demonstrations and reports promoting the strengthening of programs for the diminution, control or treatment of juvenile delinquency, to render technical assistance to States and for 2 years, to provide short-term technical training programs. The Secretary is to transmit a report to the Congress by January 1, 1962.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point, as a part of my remarks, a statement which I have prepared relating to the bill just passed by the Senate.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR KEFAUVER

The investigations of the Juvenile Delinquency Subcommittee have pointed up sharply the urgent need for more national leadership in the field of juvenile delinquency. It has also highlighted: (1) The striking gaps in existing programs for the control of juvenile delinquency; (2) the need for better coordination of services; and (3) the great need for more training programs for personnel serving delinquent youth.

In view of the above situation, I sincerely feel that the enactment of the legislation under consideration into law would result in the following beneficial effect:

1. Better State and local planning for improving programs in behalf of juvenile delinquents. It would, we feel, make the same kind of contribution in this area that the planning grants under the hospital-construction program have made.

2. A greater degree of coordination within each State of the programs of the various State and local agencies concerned with the control of juvenile delinquency.

3. Increased cooperation between voluntary and governmental organizations in this field.

4. Development of training programs for a wide variety of kinds of personnel in many agencies and institutions concerned with juvenile delinquency.

5. Stimulation of new and creatively conceived projects and programs that would contribute to methodology and to individual treatment.

6. Encouragement of research activities so that we may learn new ways of helping delinquent youth and evaluating the effectiveness of present treatment programs, and certainly of programs for the prevention of delinquency.

Such a deliberate refocusing of attention can be encouraged if the National Government were to make it possible for local communities to be effective in dealing with problems in local situations. I do not mean by this that the National Government can afford to become a police agency with reference to juvenile delinquency; I do not mean by this that the National Government can afford to give direction to these local programs or should be permitted to give direction to these local programs; but I do think the Government is equipped, in this extremely well-advised Senate bill 4267, to provide a permanent agency and immediate resources in an effort to make communities out of localities that are not communities, and can give, for example, to police departments and various agencies in those communities, for wherewithal, the training, the understanding, and the skills in terms in which the problem can be effectively handled at that point. I urge that we face up to the fact that what we need, and what this legislation in fact is, is not a proposal for the National Government to become the caretaker of the delinquents of the country, but is a proposal to offer resources to local communities to deal with the problem at the only point where it can be effectively dealt with, at the family level, at the local community level, and through the organization of these local communities, by the agencies of the States.

The appropriation of moneys in this bill falls into three categories felt to be vital in the fight against delinquency. These are (1) grants-in-aid; (2) grants for training; and (3) provision of risk capital.

GRANTS-IN-AID

The object in this area is to provide increased consultation or technical aid, give assistance in attracting and training personnel, and temporarily provide the risk capital needed for local organizations and agencies to launch and demonstrate the value of new services and programs.

The activities of the present Children's Bureau staff in the field of juvenile delinquency will lay the groundwork for development of the programs in the States which are contemplated under S. 4267. Important as the technical aid and research activities of the Bureau are in helping States, their experience over the past 3 years shows that the States cannot make the most effective improvement in their programs for the control of juvenile delinquency unless Federal grants are available to assist them in this undertaking.

The treatment and control of juvenile delinquency requires the cooperation of a wide variety of services and agencies. These include the police, detention care, courts, probation services, foster-family care, health services, including psychiatric consultation, vocational counseling and education, training schools and other types of group-care facilities, and aftercare, which refers to placement and supervision usually after release from a training school.

Some of these services and facilities have been traditionally looked upon as responsibilities of local communities, while others have been generally accepted as responsibilities of the State. Whether State or local, public or voluntary, these activities are interrelated. Again, our experience shows that often a major reason why prolonged and costly treatment is not successful is that continuity in treatment and followup care are lacking, at both the State and local levels.

Coordination of effort, then, is a key factor in effective planning and development of programs for the treatment and control of juvenile delinquency. Yet, because of the variety of services and agencies involved, most States and local communities have not yet developed a mechanism for effectuating this coordination. It is necessary, therefore, that plans must be made for this as well as for the detailed technical and training activities.

S. 4267 authorizes a major grant for strengthening and improving State programs. This grant would be available on an annual basis for a period of 7 years. The purpose is to assist the States to establish, strengthen, and improve their plans and programs for the diminution, control, and treatment of juvenile delinquency. This will be done by assisting them: (1) To estimate their needs for services to strengthen and improve their existing programs for the control of juvenile delinquency; (2) to develop plans for State and local action to strengthen and improve these services, including their effective coordination; (3) to coordinate services on a continuing basis, at State and local levels; (4) to demonstrate or develop improved techniques and practices; and (5) to conduct research and investigations for assessing the causes and extent of juvenile delinquency and the effectiveness of existing control programs, and for developing improved methods for the control of juvenile delinquency.

The grant-in-aid formula provided for in this bill making financial assistance available to the States is a sound one. This was first demonstrated in the twenties under the Sheppard-Towner Act, under which the Federal Government gave grants to the States to help them build up health programs for mothers and infants.

It has been demonstrated for the past 20 years in the grant-in-aid programs for maternal and child health, crippled children, and child welfare, under the Social Security Act. Under this formula, the States are given complete freedom to draw up their own plans, tailored to their own needs, subject only to broad requirements of the act.

In providing States and communities both with the leadership of the Children's Bureau and with financial grants to initiate and strengthen programs, the Congress is recognizing that the people of the Nation have a right to use their Federal, as well as their State and local governments, to work on a problem of national proportions that, to put it in constitutional terms, provides for both the general welfare and the national defense.

The American Parents Committee, in a statement advocating the legislation under consideration, stated that "treatment and prevention must both take place in the cities and towns and counties where the children live and play and go to school. The problem is so big, however, that most communities are overwhelmed by it. We believe a grant-in-aid program set up in S. 4267 will bring the communities some of the help they need."

GRANTS FOR TRAINING

S. 4267 has provision for grants for training. The objective is to get money out to the States so that people can be trained to fight juvenile delinquency with the utilization of all available knowledge at their disposal.

The primary purpose of all the various types of assistance to be provided under this bill is to improve the quality of the care and treatment given to delinquent children and youth and thus to inject throughout the treatment process elements that are preventive in nature and that will reduce repetition of delinquent acts.

And so in the bill there is emphasis on training personnel who come in day-by-day contact with boys and girls who are in trouble with the law, emphasis on special projects that will provide opportunity to try out new and improved methods of locating and working with delinquents, emphasis on finding ways and means for public and voluntary agencies to work together and pool their planning and experience, emphasis on research to gain new knowledge about causes and treatment.

Thomas J. S. Waxter, director, Maryland State Department of Public Welfare, spoke to the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare and stated, "Services which are to deal effectively with the deep complexities of human problems must be given with skill and understanding by persons who have a professional level of training and experience. One handicap faced by Maryland and other States is a lack of such personnel. In our opinion any Federal legislation must make provision for obtaining and training the staff necessary to do the job. We strongly advocate that funds for the training of the various types of necessary personnel be provided for in Federal legislation. Because of the urgency of this need, we recommend that funds be made available on a nonmatching basis."

The encouragement this bill gives to the employment of trained personnel in treatment services is highly desirable. We have seen the damage that is done, and the wastage of human lives that follows, when youngsters in trouble with the law are handed on from one untrained worker to another. The stimulus this bill would give to experimentation and demonstration will get many communities out of the mood of discouragement. It would get them off the dead center of inertia about their delinquency problems.

PROVISION OF RISK CAPITAL

Here the objective is to make funds available to States for utilization as risk capital to be used solely to launch and temporarily support new services only.

We must expect the Federal Government to share the leadership role in an attack on this problem by assuming the financial responsibility for the provision of such programs which are designed to strengthen local and State programs. Such grants can and should be made through the Children's Bureau which has already accomplished a great deal in this field and is universally recognized as the agency through which these grants should be made.

It would devolve upon the Children's Bureau to coordinate all national efforts by public and private agencies toward the accomplishment of the following objectives:

1. It would provide technical aid to States and local communities.

2. It would help in devising programs for training of personnel which would deal with prevention and rehabilitation; it would use existing formulas of their grants-in-aid program to make certain that proper and adequate funds would go to those areas which are most in need in the attack upon this problem.

Congressional action is essential to authorize and appropriate the necessary funds to aid the States and localities in promoting decent housing, welfare, health, education, and recreational facilities which will make it possible to rear our children under conditions which will give them a fighting chance to avoid the pitfalls of juvenile delinquency.

Title I provides for the establishment of a Federal Advisory Council on Juvenile Delinquency. This advisory council would consist of the Secretary of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, or his designee, and 21 members appointed by the Secretary.

Objective: The council would review applications for special projects submitted to the Secretary under title IV of this act and to recommend to the Secretary for grants under such title. The purpose in creating this council is to get the expert knowledge of the leaders in the many fields concerned with juvenile delinquency, education, and related areas, who will be in a position to give valuable assistance to the Secretary of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare in matters necessary to properly administer said act,

Section 101 provides for an advisory council to the Secretary of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. The members of various associations who would be on the advisory council should be persons who have had experience in rehabilitative work, medicine, juvenile court work; in fact, a variety of people who have had different types of experience in the delinquency field. It is felt that this council would greatly strengthen the position of the Division in the Federal Government.

It is clear that S. 4267 provides for the inclusion of agencies, both governmental and voluntary, whose concern is not merely with a specialized approach to delinquency, but also with a broad community approach as a part of the program. This offers a real hope for the development of a broader approach to the problems of juvenile delinquency in our country. It gives the voluntary organizations their proper place in the picture, but, even more important, it provides a hope that in this program a beginning may be made in a true community approach which is the only sound approach in dealing with problems of juvenile delinquency.

Recognition of the fact tht the control of juvenile delinquency can best be achieved through close working relations between public and private agencies concerned with the well-being of children is sound. We hold firmly to the principle that public funds should and must be expended by public agencies, but we also believe that private or voluntary agencies have a great deal of value to contribute to public agencies and the work of all should be meshed together.

It was the hope of people in the delinquency field that whatever final act was passed by the Congress it would contain ample encouragement to the Children's Bureau and to the State public agencies receiving Federal funds to draw on the advice and counsel of all other public and private organizations, both in designing plans for action and in carrying out such plans.

Title II provides for grants to the States to strengthen and improve programs.

Purpose: To provide to the States funds to strengthen and improve statewide programs to combat juvenile delinquency.

Within the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, the Children's Bureau would have primary responsibility for the planning and administration of the grants provided under this bill, and for giving technical assistance as requested by the States. In addition, an interdepartmental mechanism would be established so that the Office of Education, the Public Health Service, and other constituents would contribute toward developing an overall plan for the administration of the program under this act. The Secretary would expect to appoint the advisory committee contemplated in the bill as soon as possible.

For the administration of strengthening and improving grants, we find that title 2 of S. 4267 places administration in a State agency in concert with representatives of voluntary agencies, and public agencies. This will have the good effect of bringing new ideas into the program.

Coordination among State and local public and voluntary agencies and organizations working in behalf of delinquent children is generally inadequate. State services for the control of juvenile delinquency are often scattered among many State departments—such as State departments of welfare, health, education, or correction; State youth authorities; and employment agencies. In most States, certain functions are entirely local and are not represented by a State department. This is particularly true of courts, probation departments, police, and often recreational agencies.

In most States provisions are lacking for assuring continuity in planning and providing care for individual delinquent youth. Responsibility for an individual child often shifts back and forth from the courts, to public or voluntary child-caring agencies, clinics, local and State institutions for delinquent youth, and other State departments or institutions. In many States and communities, there is little continuity in treatment during this movement. While certain avenues of cooperation between agencies and departments have been established, the procedure is often cumbersome and slow. As a result, many delinquent children do not receive the proper care and treatment at the time when it would be most effective.

In order to eliminate such practices, S. 4267 provides planning and program grants for strengthening and improvement of State and local programs. One of the major purposes of the planning grants is to enable official State agencies and local agencies with responsibility for services in the control of juvenile delinquency, to have time and funds to develop a coordinating mechanism and a coordinated plan for strengthening and improvement of their programs. Each State will determine the mechanism best adapted to the needs, resources, and organizational pattern within the particular State. Then, through the strengthening and improvement grants, the States will be helped to effectuate the plan developed for coordination of services.

Should this legislation be enacted, I believe that it would stimulate the States and local communities to greater accomplishments than ever before in strengthening and improving programs for the control of juvenile delinquency.

Title III provides for grants for the training of personnel employed, or preparing for employment, in programs for the control and treatment of juvenile delinquency, or for the development of courses for such training, including the establishment and maintenance of such fellowships and traineeships.

Objective: To provide the trained personnel in all categories in both the preventive and correctional aspects of the delinquency problem.

We feel that there are many things which are currently known in terms of the handling of troublesome and delinquent children which a national training service, made available to State training schools, could get over to them in terms of inservice training, and do an excellent job in a relatively short space of time. This should not be imposed from above and no one would suggest that. But if the service were available on request, I am confident that State after State and agency after agency would seek that service.

Alfred J. Kahn, professor at Columbia University, who represents the American Association of Social Workers and the Citizens' Committee on Children, said that New York State recently passed legislation which provides a sound structure for State aid to probation training, State aid to curriculum building, State aid to inservice training, but the appropriations are very small despite the soundness of the total act. And the passage of Federal grant-in-aid legislation would certainly permit the expansion of training of this kind in a manner similar to that now projected in the field of vocational rehabilitation and the manner similar to that which has proven to be so effective in the field of child welfare and mental health.

Therefore, in reacting to this piece of legislation, Professor Kahn stressed the importance of those items in the proposed bill dealing with demonstration, research, pioneering efforts, expansion of services, inservice training, and particularly the importance of enabling institutions of higher education to expand training facilities and to offer scholarships and fellowships to people on the job who want to qualify themselves by leaves of absence and also people who want to enter into this field as a career after leaving their undergraduate training.

Services which are to deal effectively with the complexities of human problems must be given with skill and understanding by persons who have a professional level of training and experience. One of the primary obstacles to the development of the total range of social-welfare services is the shortage of people who have these qualifications. If it is agreed that these services are necessary, and that they call for personnel with special qualifications, it then follows that any broad measure to improve services must provide, among other things, for increasing the number of persons having the requisite qualifications. Among the ways for achieving this are training stipends for individuals and support for schools in providing specialized kinds of training that is otherwise not readily available.

As matters stand today, it is futile to expand services to deal with the delinquency problem without also doing something about acquiring personnel—and in this field, acquiring them means training them. It should also be borne in mind that a critical shortage of qualified personnel exists in all social-welfare fields. Moreover, people who do have the necessary qualifications move from one job to another. It is, therefore, not likely that concentrating on improving the personnel shortage in one specialized field alone, such as delinquency, will raise that one specialty to a position of distinct advantage. All parts of the pool rise together. But at least it is reasonable to expect that a specialized field should contribute as much to the personnel pool as it expects to take out.

Title IV provides for special projects for the purpose of demonstrating improved techniques and practices for the control and treatment of juvenile delinquency.

Objective: To encourage special projects which hold promise of making a substantial contribution to the strengthening of programs for the control or treatment of juvenile delinquency.

Despite our inadequate understanding of juvenile delinquency, we are not making effective use of the knowledge and techniques we presently possess. The attacks on the problem which are represented by existing programs are too often halfhearted and uncoordinated and overwhelmed by the vastness of the task and the imperfections of the available equipment. Moreover, communities frequently find that the various agencies and services are working at cross purposes as a result of conflicting concepts and objectives.

There must be a willingness to face up to the true proportions of the problem of juvenile delinquency, and to develop programs and services which represent the best available information and methods; which provide consistent coverage without major gaps; and which all work in harmony and coordination toward a common purpose.

Much has been learned about the nature of juvenile delinquency and how to prevent and treat it, but there is also much more that we need to know. We need more scientific information about the social, psychological, and physical aspects of delinquency and the ways of applying this knowledge. We need to know more about the ways in which to organize and administer programs for making our services more effective in the communities throughout the country. For this reason it is of particular importance to experiment and try new ways of doing things. Any Federal legislation should make possible special projects carried out at a Federal and State level to help discover new methods of approach and to test the old.

Title V: Provides for certain activities in the DHEW which would serve the purpose for which the bill was introduced.

Objective: The above includes the following:

1. To make such studies, investigations, demonstrations, and reports as will promote the strengthening of programs for the control and treatment of juvenile delinquency;

2. to cooperate with and render technical assistance to States in matters relating to programs for the control and treatment of juvenile delinquency;

3. to disseminate information as to studies, investigations, demonstrations and reports;

4. to provide short-term courses of training and instruction in technical matters relating to the control and treatment of juvenile delinquency.

It is felt by some that the most important feature of this bill is that which has to do with grants for planning and coordination at a State level. This sounds pretty dry when you read it in the legislative language, but in the course of the past 3 years the subcommittee has traveled in many States and talked with the public officials and voluntary officials, and the programs that have impressed the subcommittee members most are those in a few states such as California, Wisconsin, Minnesota, where, at a State level, an agency has employed a small number of persons, usually called community organizers, community service consultants, with training who are available not to give service to any individual youngster but to go into a local county or a city where there is a group of persons; it might be the Rotary, it might be the Legion, it might be a religious group, but to go into a local community and help citizens that have an interest in this problem in assessing what happens to youngsters in that local community, what they can do about it, what are the obstacles to doing it and how can they overcome those obstacles.

These programs which are planning and coordination in action seem to me to have great significance insofar as they use a small amount of tax money, of public money, to help people do for themselves and they create thereby, by giving people an avenue of action, the spirit of caring, which we seem to agree in the testimony is the essential for licking this problem.

There is much that remains to be learned of the nature of juvenile delinquency, and of the techniques that will be effective in its prevention and treatment. Therefore, there must be increased attention to studies and research that will yield more knowledge in these areas. At the same time there is such a wide range of firmly held yet conflicting opinions as to how to deal with this problem that the more serious and less spectacular efforts are too often lost in the confusion.

It is true that more knowledge of delinquency is needed. Nevertheless, there is enough well-established information now available to demonstrate that a great many of the opinions and recommendations which are advanced on the subject are too narrowly conceived. Juvenile delinquency seems to be a prime example of a subject upon which quickly formed opinions and theories are held with great firmness and assurance while those arrived at after years of thoughtful study and objective deliberation are modestly advanced as tentative and incomplete.

Research—even the best research—is not going to be of much help if the information developed is not put to constructive use. Therefore, there must also be increased understanding on the part of the Federal Government and a willingness to support measures such as S. 4267 which are positive, well-balanced, and comprehensive.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement which I have prepared on the subject of the bill which the Senate has just passed.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR WILEY

I support the juvenile delinquency bill (S. 4267) just reported by the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, of which my distinguished colleague, Mr. LEHMAN, is chairman.

This bill is a thorough and effective approach to the long-range solution of the problems of juvenile delinquency which our modern machine civilization is creating and having difficulty in allaying.

I am glad to say, also, that the distinguished members of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare thought well enough of the bill, which I introduced early in this Congress (S. 894), to incorporate some of the provisions and ideas of that bill into the one which is now before you. I welcome a cooperative approach to this problem and believe that many heads are better than one when a difficult matter needs deep and creative thought. I believe the pending bill will go far toward aiding our young people and their seniors to help the unfortunate ones who have chosen, we hope only temporarily, the path of antisocial behavior, rowdyism, and often crime.

RAPID RISE OF JUVENILE DELINQUENCY

The serious spread of juvenile delinquency is a comparatively recent phenomenon in America. But, it has been growing by leaps and bounds during the last 7 years.

Since 1948, when juvenile delinquency first began to rise, it has increased by 70 percent. This figure is based upon the number of children involved in court delinquency cases. And in 1955, of 20 million American children between 10 and 17 years of age, about one-half million of them became involved in delinquency charges before a court.

Of course, the number of children in the United States during this 7-year period has increased. But the number of children has increased only 16 percent; whereas, as I just said, the number of child delinquents rose 70 percent.

During the last calendar year, children brought to juvenile court as delinquents rose 9 percent. During 1955, the number of children in the United States rose only 3 percent. So that the number of delinquents rose 3 times faster last year than did the number of children in the United States.

Unless we can stop the increasing rate of juvenile delinquency, it has been estimated that we may have, by 1960, 2 million children annually getting in trouble with the police.

That is a state of affairs which we cannot, in justice to future generations and to our American heritage, allow to happen.

THE PROBLEM OF JUVENILE DELINQUENCY

It is often thought that juvenile delinquents are only to be found in the slums of our big cities. But, although the most serious problems do seem to arise in the big cities, the number of delinquency cases in cities of less than 100,000 population have increased since 1948 at a higher rate than the national increase.

The students of the problem have also concluded that it is not confined to the poorer cities; but also exists in cities which are well off financially.

It has been well said that "no child is born delinquent". His or her environment creates problems which help to lead our girls and boys astray, into paths which bring them into conflict with constituted authority.

Children in good happy homes seldom get into trouble with the police. It has been pointed out that broken homes are a frequent cause of maladjustment which make it easier for the child to get into trouble. The homes may be broken by desertion or death or by lack of kindly faith among the parents. The resulting damage to sound parent-child relationships helps to cause the emotional conflicts in the child's mind which tempt him to resist authority and to break the law in order to get what he wants and feels he has been unjustly denied.

Besides the home, our churches, our schools, our athletic organizations, our welfare agencies and the boys and girls movements like the Boy Scouts, the Boys' Clubs, and the Boys' Nation, are all doing their part to keep our youth happily adjusted. And so, most of our young people grow up strong mentally, morally, and physically, and well able to behave themselves in the modern world.

However, there are not enough people trained in the problems of youth to counsel with the families, to initiate their organized youth programs, and to study the causes and suggest the cures for our rapidly growing juvenile delinquency.

Of course, legislation cannot direct an end to juvenile delinquency. But it can help to find a way to buttress the fine work which our homes, churches, schools, and other organizations are doing.

THE DELINQUENT CHILDREN'S ACT

The pending bill would authorize programs to operate through the States, by grants-in-aid. They will be administered through the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. They would be designed to strengthen and expand State and local programs against juvenile delinquency. They would also stimulate the increased training of people who wish to dedicate themselves to helping our youth avoid juvenile delinquency. They would also stimulate research, so that we would have more reliable information as to the causes and prevalence of this social difficulty among our youth.

The bill would authorize a 7-year program. Appropriations would be authorized for the first year of $5 million, for the second year of $7,500,000, for the third year of $10 million, and for the subsequent 4 years of such sums as the Congress might determine.

The States would submit their programs and receive allotments on the basis of their child population.

However, the matching appropriations by the States would be computed on the basis of an inverse ratio to their per capita income.

That would mean that the poorer States would contribute proportionately less than the more well-to-do States. But, the minimum State contribution would be one-third and the maximum State contribution would be two-thirds.

CONCLUSION

In the light of the seriousness of the problem to America and because increasing juvenile delinquency will undermine the moral and physical strength of our country, at a time when we need all our power to face a threatening world, these appropriations are not too much to add to private efforts to help our children succeed and be happy.

There is nothing about our young people which is essentially wrong. They are the best this country has ever had. Some of them, in this uncertain world, have run into difficulties which have never faced youth before. We are, to some extent, perhaps responsible for the condition of the world today. And we are, certainly, responsible for the state of the Nation. We must do our utmost, not only to improve and stabilize our national life, but also to help the States to help wayward youngsters toward a better adjustment to their surrounding circumstances.

I urge immediate enactment of this bill in order that the program may start right away.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, your committee appointed to wait upon the President and inform him that the Congress is ready to adjourn sine die, has informed him of that fact, and has inquired whether he has any further communication to make to the Congress; and the President has advised us that he has no further communication to make to the Congress.

EMPLOYMENT OF CANADIAN VESSELS IN THE COASTWISE TRANSPORTATION OF COAL

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2824, House bill 9874.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R 9874) to authorize Canadian vessels to be employed in the coastwise transportation of coal to Ogdensburg, N. Y.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON].

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

CIVIL RIGHTS LEGISLATION

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. NEUBERGER]. I had arranged earlier in the day with two Senators who wished to make brief speeches. I ask that I may yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Oregon for that purpose without losing my right to the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Oregon may proceed.

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, I desire to detail for the Senate the reasons why I voted against adjournment on the night of July 24.

Basically, my decision was premised on two major facts.

First, I realized that it was impossible to enact civil rights legislation at this late hour during the session of Congress, because of the prolonged debate which would be demanded by the opponents of even as mild a bill as that passed by the other House.

Second, I did not care to risk the possibility of interminable debate of this bill resulting in the fatal delay or defeat of the social-security conference report, because I believe that the social-security bill contains more benefits for average families in this Nation—families of any race, white or colored—than any other legislation of the 84th Congress or of recent years.

Mr. President, even though I have been a Member of the Senate for only a year and a half, I am proud of my record in the field of civil rights—much of it at the State government level.

In 1949, it was my privilege, as a State senator, to sponsor the first fair employment practices bill ever introduced in the Oregon State Legislature. That bill led directly to what was, I believe, only the third FEPC act passed by any State legislature in the Nation. Oregon pioneered in this respect, and I was honored to be among those active in its pioneering effort.

Several years later, my wife, Maurine, and I were both cosponsors of a strong and effective civil-rights bill passed by our legislature. Mrs. Neuberger was a member of the Oregon House of Representatives. This bill outlawed discrimination in public places based on race, creed, religion, or color. It was passed against some bitter and vehement opposition, I might add. In addition, my wife was a sponsor of legislation prohibiting discrimination against religious or racial minorities in various trade schools. I helped to pass this measure through our State senate, after it had passed in the Oregon House of Representatives. We are proud of this record of successful effort in our legislature toward assuring persons of any race, at the State level, of freedom from discrimination in their jobs, in education, and in all kinds of public accommodations such as theaters, hotels, restaurants, barber shops, beauty parlors, and motor courts. I believe this record demonstrates, beyond doubt, my long-standing and continuing ambition to help with any step which may really accomplish something toward ending legal race discrimination and official bigotry in our great democracy.

I favor Federal civil rights legislation. I am a cosponsor of several civil rights bills, and I would gladly vote for the very limited but worthwhile program sent to the Senate by the House of Representatives. I concur in the lofty aspirations voiced so eloquently by the distinguished senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENNINGS] in his moving talk on the Senate floor July 24.

II

Why, then, Mr. President, did I not support the motion offered by the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] for adjournment, so that he might file a motion to bring the civil rights bill to the floor?

Congress is on the eve of final adjournment of this session. Everyone knows that. The press has reported it, the leadership has announced it. Civil rights legislation on the Senate floor, at this late juncture, will inevitably provoke a debate that will continue until the fall of the gavel, be it this week or several weeks hence. I regret that fact, but a fact it is—a fact of life. I deplore the Senate rules which make it possible to prevent a vote in the Senate almost forever, but those rules exist and I cannot change them—at least not now. To deny these things is to deny what is, and to shut one's eyes and ears and mind to reality.

Mr. President, there have been civil rights bills before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary ever since the early days of the last session, since January of 1955. Several of these bills were reported out by the Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights, under the chairmanship of the able senior Senator from Missouri, in February and March of this year. I know of no effort which has been made, whether by supporters of the administration or from this side of the aisle, to discharge the committee from further consideration of those bills.

Although the chances for completing debate and acting on the bills would have been slight even then, the move would have had a good deal more plausibility than it can have today. Now it must be recognized as little more than a gesture, in the light of Senate Rule 22—a gesture which carries with it more danger for other important and humanitarian legislation than hope of gain for the individual rights, in which both its sponsors and I believe.

Mr. President, I think the chronicles of this important episode in the Senate should show that, at about 4 o'clock in the afternoon of January 5, 1955, a meeting of 14 or 15 liberal members of this body was held in the office of the illustrious junior Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN]. I well remember that occasion, because I had been sworn in as a Senator only 2 or 3 hours earlier. I also recollect that the distinguished junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCNAMARA] and I stood in the corner, as befitted our junior status, because of a shortage of chairs. When our opinion was sought, we passed, because we pointed out that our tenure as Senators was barely of several hours duration, and we had no experience to contribute to the question.

The issue was what should be done about civil-rights legislation in the coming session. I recollect that discussion turned to whether or not an effort should be made to revise rule 22, which is the rule that so aids and reinforces a minority seeking to prevent action on a bill. Mr. President, I believe I can state categorically that only one person at that meeting urged an immediate effort in the 84th Congress to assault rule 22, so that civil-rights legislation might eventually have some favorable chance of passage. That person was the Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN]. To my memory, nobody else urged this course of action. The RECORD should show this, to the credit of that great man, the Senator from New York, who alone urged action then which might make reasonable and consistent an effort to bring up the civil-rights bill passed by the other House this late in the session. Looking back upon that situation, I believe the Senator from New York was right in his opinion.

III

Mr. President, I think it is quite possible that an effort may be made to amend Rule 22 of the Standing Rules of the Senate in a future session. If so, I am confident it will be made so early in the session that there will be ample time to debate at great length all the issues of the Senate Rules, of the proper function of debate in the Senate, and even of civil rights legislation itself, without destroying the Senate's ability to carry out and complete the rest of its legislative program during the remainder of the session. But the present session, Mr. President, no longer offers that opportunity.

For what could have been the result of literally interminable debate at this time, when we face the imminent end of the second session of the 84th Congress?

The result might be to foreclose the final enactment of various conference reports and other legislation, now in the concluding stages of processing but still not quite ready for approval by the President of the United States.

What was some of this legislation? Let us look at just a few examples.

First, there was the farm credit bill, and never in recent times have the farmers of our country been in such dire need of a relaxation of their credit market. Their plight is apparent to all of us.

Second, there was the conference report on housing, and we all realize that many of the people most concerned about civil rights also are most in need of slum clearance and a relief from shabby tenements.

Third, there was the omnibus public works bill, authorizing projects for improved navigation, for preventing tragic and catastrophic floods in many parts of the country, for generating low-cost hydroelectric power and for aiding in work for purifying drinking waters and reclaiming lowlands and plateaus.

Finally, above all, there was the social security conference report, which includes a reduction in the eligibility age for women from 65 to 62 and also social-security benefits, commencing at the age of 50, for all permanently or totally disabled American workers.

It is exclusively the social security conference report to which I want to address myself today.

Is any person on this floor of liberal and humanitarian views right to risk any legislative or parliamentary maneuver which would cost the working people of the United States the far-flung benefits in that conference report? What if an interminable and heated filibuster over civil rights should result in the loss of social security? Who would be the victims of such a catastrophe?

The victims, Mr. President, would be the average men and women, who would benefit so greatly from the far-reaching improvements which the social security conference report provides. Fortunately, there is no color line in the Social Security System. The benefits are paid without regard to race, creed, or color. That is as it should be. I emphasize this to show that among the foremost suffers from a loss of these new social security advances would be millions of the very colored people, for whom the late effort in behalf of civil rights was purported to be undertaken.

IV

Mr. President, civil rights means not only the human liberties which we stress so properly, but also a decent and respectable standard of living. A man who has liberty but no economic security is in peril of losing his liberty, too. Effective civil rights are tied up intimately with such tangibles as good housing, healthful food, adequate medical care, and the assurance of comfort and respectability in old age. The ability to claim ones' legal rights is, in practice, dependent on the freedom of action and the confidence which come only with security against poverty.

Mr. President, I feel a sort of proprietary interest in the social security conference report. On January 18, 1955, I introduced, as my first bill as a United States Senator, for myself and 10 cosponsors, the original Senate bill in this Congress proposing a reduction from age 65 to 60 in the social security retirement age for women. I testified in some detail before the Senate Finance Committee in support of this proposal. I consider the even partial achievement of this goal, in the reduction to age 62 made by the bill we have passed, to be the greatest accomplishment of the Congress in the past 2 years—accompanied by the other major improvements in the social security bill, particularly the disability provisions.

I would deeply regret to see these great gains lost—perhaps for years to come, Mr. President—because the Senate is plunged into a bitter, endless, and hopeless debate over civil rights at this final stage in the life of the 84th Congress.

This does not mean that I believe no effort should be made to pass civil-rights legislation. On the contrary, I shall always welcome an opportunity to participate in an effort actually to enact necessary civil-rights laws. But such an effort should be made when it has a reasonable chance of success.

When the next Congress convenes in January, I shall be glad to join in a determined and ethical fight to amend the standing rules of the Senate so as to make it possible for the Senate to bring civil-rights legislation to a vote after full and adequate debate. I hope that Members from the other side of the aisle who profess support of the President's civil-rights program will join in such an effort, for it may require that the Senate stay in session around the clock, 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, for a month, maybe 2 or 3 months, to settle whether our rules should make it possible for a small minority to prevent forever a vote by the whole Senate on the merits of legislation.

But, Mr. President, why start the civil-rights effort at a time when there is no opportunity whatsoever to bring the debate to a successful end? Why start it when the only casualty might be social security, rather than the foes of civil rights?

There is a right time and a wrong time, Mr. President, to undertake any great cause. Security in old age and in sickness and injury is as great a cause as even that of civil rights. Let us never risk a situation in which one might bring about the delaying or retarding of the other.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I want to express the utmost admiration for the courage and humanitarianism of the Senators from New York, Illinois, and Missouri, who have undertaken their brave efforts during these past few days. I especially desire to salute the foresight and vision with which the Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN] prophesied the current developments over a year and a half ago.

I want the RECORD to show that sincere and conscientious individuals, all equally interested in civil-rights legislation, can disagree honestly over methods and time for action which can be successful and effective.

Mr. President, I say this with all the emphasis at my command. The time must come, and in the 85th Congress, when the Senate can vote on the great question of civil rights for all Americans. It is too late in this session to conduct the prolonged debate which may be necessary to change the rules of the Senate, so that such a vote can occur.

But come it must, Mr. President. The onward march of mankind cannot be retarded by anachronistic rules which have no place in a great democracy. There must be an hour for decision, when a legislative body like the United States Senate is ready to act. Full debate must be possible, but interminable debate—never.

How can we parade our democracy before the world, when Members of the Senate are denied, by a series of intricate rules, the privilege of expressing their viewpoint on, of all issues, the challenging question of human liberty.

Speaking for myself alone, I am willing to come back here in January, if I am permitted by the Almighty to do so, and to participate for as long as my strength will permit in an effort to change the rules of the Senate, so as to allow a vote on any legitimate issue. Of course, it must be a fair and honorable effort. If the Senate defeats civil-rights legislation in a fair and bona fide test, that is quite one thing. But for civil-rights legislation to be kept off the floor by parliamentary maneuvers and undemocratic procedures, is quite a totally different thing, indeed.

The year 1957 may well be the year of decision for the United States Senate—the year when Members of this body decide, once and for all, whether this is to be a Chamber in which democracy truly prevails. To deny a majority the right to vote is to thwart democracy. Democracy and the suffocation of the will of the majority are not consistent with each other.

DATE OF MEETING OF THE 85TH CONGRESS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I introduce a joint resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read by title for the information of the Senate.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 203) fixing the date of meeting of the 85th Congress, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the 85th Congress shall assemble at noon on Monday, January 7, 1957.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 203) was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ATOMIC ENERGY LIABILITY

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a letter, dated July 27, 1956, written by the President of the United States to the Vice President, relative to S. 4112, the atomic energy insurance bill.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, July 27, 1956.

The Honorable RICHARD M. NIXON,
The Vice President of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: The bill, S. 4112, now awaiting Senate action is important to accelerate our country's efforts to devote atomic energy to peaceful purposes. The bill was reported over a month ago by the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. I understand there was only one dissenting vote.

The bill would fix the extent of liability of owners and operators of atomic reactors. It would also protect the public by providing governmental indemnification in the extremely unlikely event of accident. Its effect would be to speed the adaptation of atomic energy to peaceful purposes, in keeping with the spirit and letter of the atomic energy law.

If this bill fails of passage in this session, our Nation's efforts to advance the peaceful uses of atomic energy will be needlessly delayed. I earnestly urge, therefore, that every possible step be taken to enact this legislation before the Congress adjourns.

Although I am much aware that other programs of national importance which I have urged be passed are also still pending before the Senate, I call this bill to your attention now because I have not previously mentioned it to the Congress on the premise—obviously a mistaken one—that, it having bipartisan support, there would be no question as to its enactment.

I am also writing the Speaker of the House urging that the House approve the companion bill, H. R. 12050, before the House adjourns.

Sincerely,

DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER.

SERVING AND CONSUMPTION OF ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES ON AIRPLANES

Mr. NEUBERGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a brief statement by me on H. R. 8000.

There being no objection, the statement was was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR NEUBERGER

I regret that H. R. 8000, as passed by the House of Representatives, has not been enacted by the Senate before its adjournment tonight. This is the bill which would have prohibited the serving or the consumption of alcoholic beverages on airplanes.

I was the sponsor of a similar bill in the Senate. This legislation had the support of the personnel—pilots and stewardesses—who fly on the Nation's airlines, who are responsible for the safety and the comfort of passengers on our commercial airplanes, and who have had first-hand experience with the dangerous and disturbing element which is, quite unnecessarily, introduced in air travel by the consumption of intoxicating drinks on airplanes.

I cannot understand how enactment of this legislation could not be in the public interest. Therefore I regret, I repeat, Mr. President, that it has not been adopted by the Senate after having passed in the other House.

CIVIL RIGHTS LEGISLATION

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, this has been an unusually cordial and friendly evening, and I wish to join in the many expressions of friendship and good will which have been so characteristic of this session.

At this moment, however, I rise with a rather heavy heart to speak on a subject which is very meaningful to me, the subject of civil rights.

The last few days have been troublesome for me, for I have found myself for the first time in my Senate career separated from three of my closest and most beloved colleagues whose respect and friendship I value deeply.

There is no subject with which I am more intimately identified than the subject of civil rights. There is no subject more meaningful to me than the subject of human rights.

As mayor of the city of Minneapolis, under the general powers of the executive office, I established and appointed the mayor's council on human relations. This civic body has just commenorated its 10th anniversary. It is an established institution. It has done great good. It has served to mobilize the community's resources for the advancement of human rights and the improvement of human relations.

As a result of the work of the mayor's council on human relations cooperating with other civic groups, the city of Minneapolis was awarded the brotherhood award of the National Council of Christians and Jews in 1948, the final year of my service as mayor.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, may we have order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota is entitled to order in the Senate, and the Chair will appreciate the cooperation of all Senators in extending to him the courtesy to which he is entitled. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, the second accomplishment in the field of civil rights was the adoption in the city of Minneapolis, during my service as mayor, of the first municipal fair employment practice commission ordinance with enforcement powers. That legislation has proved effective. It set the pattern for other municipalities. From that limited beginning other cities in my State of Minnesota have adopted other similar legislation. In the most recent session of the Minnesota State Legislature, a State fair employment practice commission was authorized. I have worked steadfastly along with others for the fulfillment of that objective.

My colleagues will remember, some with satisfaction and others with regret, my participation in a debate on a civil-rights plank at the 1948 Democratic Convention.

From the first days of my service in the United States Senate, I have been the legislative author and leading sponsor of what we know to be the civil-rights program. The very bills, today and indeed lately embraced by the administration, are the embodiments of the bills which I have been preparing at every session since 1949. It is these very bills which are now the subject of controversy on this floor.

Yet, within recent days I found myself separated from the efforts of three of my associates and coleaders in the move for civil rights. I wish to make it clear why I felt compelled to take such action.

Tuesday night I joined all but three of our Democratic colleagues in voting against a motion to adjourn made by the distinguished senior Senator from Illinois. The motion was made and joined in by the senior Senator from Missouri and the junior Senator from New York out of the deep conviction on their part that this parliamentary move was essential as a means of achieving some expression by the Senate before final adjournment on civil-rights legislation. My vote could have been misinterpreted, by those who are unsympathetic to or unaware of my motives, as a vote to prevent a final expression by the Senate on civil rights. My friends and my conscience know that the contrary is true.

Civil rights to me has always been a broad vision of greater opportunity, greater happiness for ever-growing numbers of Americans regardless of their race, color or creed. Civil rights and human rights are one and the same. They are the expression of the American dream and of the religious spirit which guides this Nation.

The picture of America which I believe should be our goal is the picture of a Nation wherein our people are permitted to participate in full citizenship, free in spirit, unrestrained by the artificial barriers of race, religion, creed or color. Yes, an American people who are contributing to the greatness of America in the full measure of their talents and abilities. An America where we all stand with shoulders high, with dignity and with the expression of joy and happiness which comes in a society based upon principles of freedom, equality and justice. It is the picture of children in good schools with capable and dedicated teachers. It is a picture of our older citizens reaching the closing days of their lives gracefully and with dignified composure. It is the picture of our disabled enjoying the gifts of life and security.

This goal is to me the goal of human rights. It encompasses within it the essence of social security legislation which we seek to constantly improve. It includes within it humane, democratic immigration legislation. It includes within its definition a foreign policy which highlights aid to underprivileged nations and peoples. It includes minimum wages, health, education, housing legislation. It includes encouragement to an agricultural economy which emphasizes the humane social values of maintaining the family farm and, yes, Mr. President, it includes a civil rights program, with protection of the right to vote, the right to be secure against violence—a permanent commission on civil rights, equality of opportunity for employment, and the organization of all branches of government so as to secure those rights of human equality.

This broad picture of human rights must constantly advance on all fronts if our Nation is to live up to its dream. Mr. President, I am proud to be an American because this program of human rights has indeed advanced on all fronts, throughout the history of our Nation, and in particular since 1933 when a great President arose to a great challenge and set a course for a national program from which we have still not deviated. The progress we have made has been the result of dedicated effort by the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of our Government, supported by an informed citizenry aware of their responsibilities and ready to pay the price for social progress.

We must never allow ourselves to lose sight of our goal.

The goal and the dreams, however, Mr. President, are by themselves incomplete. It is also our responsibility to discover and achieve reality for them. We must search for the method of achieving them. Those of us who are members of this body cannot afford the luxury of merely talking about our objective. We also have the responsibility as legislators to answer the question: how do we achieve that objective?

It is in the area of how to achieve our objective that I felt compelled, respectfully and regretfully, to differ with my friends. I could not be a party to a parliamentary effort, the effect of which I believed was to endanger the most advanced social security bill that the Congress has passed in 20 years. For social security is to me an essential part of the human rights program. It is designed for and its benefits go to the people in the low- and middle-income groups.

We must not forget that the social-security measure, in aiding the working people and the needy, cuts across racial and religious lines.

I could not in good conscience be part of a parliamentary tactic, the effect of which would be to hold the legislative process locked in its tracks at this crucial period before we had enacted a much-needed housing program designed to provide authority and funds for slum clearance, housing for our elderly and for urban redevelopment, before we enacted mutual security appropriations, farm credit extension and expansion, customs simplification, and the scores of other legislative proposals which are so essential to the functioning of our democratic government.

These are the facts, whether we like them or whether we do not. I regret that these are the facts, but I refuse to attempt to delude myself into believing that these real facts do not exist.

My plea to the United States Senate has been and still is that we mobilize our resources to complete the unfinished work of the Congress expeditiously and with the common purpose that dedicates all of us to the public good as we see it. This could best be done by following the leadership of the Senate in its determination of a schedule for the completion of our work.

It is important, however, that I make one thing clear. The uncompleted work of the Congress includes the necessity of acting favorably on civil-rights legislation. We cannot be blind to the honest, rightful, and eager aspirations of millions of Americans for some kind of positive expression by the United States Senate in the area of civil rights. The Senate will not be true to its responsibilities and not true to its proud heritage if this body is not given an opportunity to express itself on this most vital issue. I differed with my three colleagues from Illinois, New York, and Missouri on the tactics that they pursued. But I commend and encourage and join with them in the goal they pursue.

I have never wavered from the goal of civil rights and cannot in good conscience waver from it. I will work unceasingly with perseverence and determination for constructive action until we succeed.

In good faith, and fully cognizant of the obstacles of emotionalism on both sides that, unfortunately, sometimes prevent even reasonable men from coming to reasonable solutions on the gravest of problems, I have endeavored to act responsibly and realistically toward achieving some progress toward that goal.

In January 1955, during the first week of this 84th Congress, I urged my colleagues who joined with me in sponsoring civil-rights legislation not to stimulate a procedural fight regarding the rules of the Senate because I believed that this body, under its effective and responsible leadership, should be given an opportunity to proceed in an orderly, rational manner. That was not a popular move for me to make among my friends and associates. But I was motivated by my own conscience and judgment as to what was best for this country.

Since that date, I again introduced the complete series of civil-rights bills. I testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee urging favorable action on those bills. I ask unanimous consent that materials relative to those bills be printed in the RECORD following these remarks. I made it clear to all who would listen that I established no priority, but would welcome favorable action on any one bill, even the most noncontroversial one, so long as it could be said that some forward movement had taken place.

I had hoped that the Senate would recognize and encourage such an honorable course. My colleagues from the North and Midwest and Far West have patiently awaited the results of what might develop from those efforts. It appears, however, that the climate and temper of the Senate have made those efforts untimely—and today we stand nearing the closing hours of the Congress and there is still no action.

My plea has been and is a twofold one. It has been and is a plea for responsibility and calmness, but also for intelligent, democratic decision making. To be sure, those of us who are eager for civil-rights legislation did allow the leadership to proceed with its schedule so that the work of the Congress could be expedited.

I have asked and shall continue to ask that the leadership of this body, and those in this body who out of regional considerations and different experiences oppose our efforts for civil rights, allow the Senate to express itself on at least one bill designed to move forward in the area of greater opportunity for all Americans. I plead with my colleagues once again, as I have done in the past, to put party politics aside and work together in achieving that objective.

The civil rights legislative program is still before the Senate Judiciary Committee. On April 9, I called upon my Republican colleagues to supply us four votes in that committee out of the seven members that they have on that committee, to join with four of our Democratic colleagues and together make a majority of eight—which would insure favorable committee action on our program. This plea went unheeded. There has been no action. The constructive work of the Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights, under the able chairmanship of Senator HENNINGS, has been blocked. The subcommittee recommendation on civil rights bills have been smothered by committee rules, procedures, and inaction.

The Senate Committee on the Judiciary has refused to act on even one of the bills. Yet, these bills are fair, constructive, and long overdue.

No amount of parliamentary maneuvering will change the conviction of the vast majority of the American people that the program of civil rights bills, reported favorably by the Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights, should not have been adopted by this Congress. Three of these are bills that I have sponsored, and that several other Senators have cosponsored.

Mr. President, let me in conclusion reiterate my conviction that full civil rights, for all Americans, are becoming a reality in the United States—and will eventually become an accomplished fact in American history regardless of what we have done in this session. We have failed in our efforts to gain legislation in this Congress. It will, however, be only a temporary failure. Our behavior this week will be only a footnote in history.

Within a few months, a new Senate will convene. This grave issue will still be with us.

I make a plea to my colleagues—North and South—Democrat and Republican, to join in a serious and sincere effort to find a formula for a legislative program which will end the bitterness and emotionalism which today surrounds the civil rights issue, and, instead, allow the intelligence and responsibility of the Senate to make its full and rightful contribution to the forward march of American democracy. I stand ready to join with my colleagues from both sides of the aisle—with the able and sincere minority leader, Senator KNOWLAND, and with our effective, honorable, and hard-working majority leader in designing a legislative program that will achieve progress and constructive action.

We can do no less. We cannot, again, permit basic human rights to be the victim of Senate rules and congressional stalemate. We owe it to ourselves, and to this great Nation, to face up to the issue of civil rights. Further delay can produce only further frustration, which, if continued, leads to irrational response. In the words of the Prophet Isaiah: "Come, let us reason together."

It will be in that spirit that the junior Senator from Minnesota, in the next session of the 85th Congress, will appeal to his colleagues on the basis of reason and fairness for constructive action.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I will say to my friend from Minnesota that he will find the Senator from Texas available every day to reason with him on any subject of importance to the American people.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I always have.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I thank my friend.

PAYMENT FOR DAMAGES CAUSED BY CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN DAMS AND RESERVOIRS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2093) to authorize the Secretary of the Army, acting through the Corps of Engineers, to undertake certain public works and grant compensation for certain property damages as a result of the construction of the Oahe, Gavins Point, and Fort Randall Dams and Reservoir projects, Missouri River, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Army is authorized and directed to pay to any bona fide lessee or permittee owning improvements situated on a railroad right-of-way or on Indian tribal land the fair value, as determined by the Secretary, or by a court of competent jurisdiction, of any such improvements which will be rendered inoperative or be otherwise adversely affected by the construction of the Gavins Point, Fort Randall, and Oahe Dams and Reservoir projects on the Missouri River.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Army is authorized and directed to pay to the Pollock Independent School District No. 3, Pollock, S. Dak., an amount equal to the difference between the sum paid for the taking of school facilities of said school district in the condemnation proceeding entitled "United States of America, plaintiff, against 10.00 Acres of Land, and so forth, defendants", civil No. 682ND, filed in the United States District Court for the District of South Dakota, northern division, on May 7, 1956, and the actual cost of replacing the school facilities so acquired as the Secretary shall find to be reasonable: Provided, however, That in no event shall the additional amount paid pursuant to this authorization exceed $200,000.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Army is authorized to provide the funds necessary to carry out the provisions of this act from any moneys appropriated for the construction of the Oahe, Gavins Point, and Fort Randall Dams and Reservoir projects: Provided, however, That in no event shall the amount so expended exceed $550,000.

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act to provide compensation for certain property losses in certain reservoir projects and for the replacement of school facilities of the Pollock Independent School District, Pollock, S. D., acquired by the United States for the Oahe Dam and Reservoir."

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

PAYMENT AND COLLECTION OF WAGES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 938) to provide for the payment and collection of wages in the District of Columbia, which was on page 3, line 14, after "discharge" insert:

: Provided, however, That in the instance of an employee who is responsible for monies belonging to the employer, the employer shall be allowed a period of 4 days from the date of discharge or resignation for the determination of the accuracy of the employee's accounts, at the end of which time all wages earned by the employees shall be paid.

Mr. McNAMARA. Mr. President, the amendment of the House is acceptable. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PROMOTION OF THE FISHING INDUSTRY, RELATING TO THE TRAINING OF PERSONNEL

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2379) to promote the fishing industry in the United States and its Territories by providing for the training of needed personnel for such industry, which were on page 1, line 7, strike out ", including the establishment of scholarships,"; on page 2, line 1, to strike out "fisheries" and insert "fishing"; on page 2, strike out lines 11, 12, and 13; on page 2, strike out lines 21, 22, 23, and 24, and on page 3, lines 4 and 5, strike out "$550,000 for vocational education and extension service" and insert "$375,000 for vocational education."

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to.

VINCENT P. SVELNIS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of H. R. 10006.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 10006) for the relief of Vincent P. Svelnis.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EMPLOYMENT OF CANADIAN VESSELS IN COASTWISE TRANSPORTATION OF COAL TO OGDENSBURG, N. Y.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar 2824, House bill 9874.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 9874) to authorize Canadian vessels to be employed in coastwise transportation of coal to Ogdensburg, N. Y.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution 276, which was read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall adjourn on July 27, 1956, and that when they adjourn on that day, they stand adjourned sine die.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the resolution of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], without losing the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, first, I wish to commend the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] for the statement he made tonight in defense of the small-business people who, in my judgment, are being done a shocking injustice by the Congress in not passing S. 11. As chairman of the Small Business Subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee, I think it is most unfortunate that Congress failed to pass that bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a speech which I intended to make on the subject, and some communications which I have received from small-business men in Oregon urging the passage of S. 11.

To those businessmen of my State I wish to say that the bill would have passed tonight if we could have gotten it to the floor, but objection was made on the other side of the aisle.

There being no objection, the speech and communications were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MORSE

THE REPUBLICAN RECORD MAKING SMALL BUSINESS SMALLER

At the beginning of this session of Congress, I had high hopes that much would be accomplished to improve the position of small business in America. I had hoped for administration support for our efforts to maintain our free economy by bolstering the economic climate for small concerns. But, what did we get from this Republican administration? Another committee—composed of, and note this list, Charles Wilson, Secretary of Defense; Sinclair Weeks, Secretary of Commerce; James Mitchell, Secretary of Labor; Arthur Flemming, Director of the Office of Defense Mobilization; Dr. Burns of the Council of Economic Advisers; Albert Cole, Housing and Home Finance Administrator; and, out of the kindness of their hearts, Mr. Wendell Barnes, Small Business Administrator.

In lieu of concrete recommendations for assistance to small business, in the absence of positive support for the small-business measures already before Congress, the administration proposed a grand substitute: A committee designed to study small-business problems until the election period is past. I am reminded of Congressman CELLER'S recent remarks that a "commission is a group of the uninformed, appointed by the unwilling, to do the unnecessary." And this committee is unnecessary. If this administration had wanted to do something to assist small business it would have lent its support to some of the constructive measures before this Congress. Let's examine the administration record on three major and specific bills of importance to the small enterprises of this Nation.

First, consider the proposals before this Congress to provide tax relief to the small corporations of America. As all Members of this body know well, changes in our tax laws benefiting small business are very difficult to pass particularly in the face of opposition from the executive branch. Permit me to digress a moment, Mr. President, to explain why tax relief for our smallest corporations is of such vital importance. A lack of capital is doubtless the overriding problem facing all small business today. Small concerns do not have adequate cash to cover operations and to finance expansion. They do not have the needed cash because: (a) High tax rates on small corporations prohibit the plowing back of earnings into the business, (b) rising interest rates make borrowing not only more expensive but in some areas, exceedingly difficult to obtain at any price, and (c) the heavy cost of small stock issues makes capital financing worthless for most small firms.

I had hoped that in this session we would move to alleviate the inequitable tax burden on small corporations. I have, therefore, supported measures to grant needed tax relief to our small corporations. Now, Mr. President, let us explore the administration's contribution to these efforts. Mr. Wendell Barnes, testifying before the Senate Small Business Committee last April, declined to support measures to grant tax relief to the Nation's small corporations because George Humphrey, Secretary of the Treasury, had already gone on record in opposition to relief for small corporations.

Mr. Barnes frankly stated that he, "would have to follow the administration's position." He further admitted that he was precluded from making recommendations on "administration policy that is the primary responsibility" of another agency even though the subject at issue is of vital concern to small business. This is the support we get from the Republican Small Business Administration, the agency established by Congress to "aid, counsel, assist, and protect insofar as is possible the interests of small-business concerns."

For my second illustration, let's consider the bill to strengthen the Robinson-Patman Act by limiting the "good faith" clause where the effect of a discriminatory pricing practice may substantially lessen competition or tend towards monopoly. This measure is S. 11, the "equality of opportunity" bill, which I cosponsored. The same Mr. Wendell Barnes appeared before the antitrust subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee in opposition to the bill. Mr. Barnes appeared in his role of spokesman for small business. His testimony, however, made clear that he was not speaking for small business. Let me read you two brief excerpts from the hearing record:

"The CHAIRMAN. Did you get any correspondence or were any views presented to you from the small retail organizations which indicate a disposition to oppose S. 11?

"Mr. BARNES. I do not think so.

"Mr. CHAIRMAN. Have you received any complaints from any small manufacturers to the effect that this proposed legislation is detrimental?

"Mr. BARNES. We have not * * * We have not solicited their views."

It was clear that the SBA Administrator was taking his cue from the Federal Trade Commission and from the Department of Justice, or as Mr. Barnes put it: "As a part of the executive branch, we would, of course, be guided by the opinions of the agencies that have the operating responsibility of enforcing the law in this field." This is the assistance we got from the Small Business Administrator despite the declaration of the Congress vesting the Small Business Administration with the responsibility for strengthening the overall economy by assisting our small-business enterprises. This is the Republican record despite the fact that this bill is fully consistent with the spirit of the antitrust laws designed to encourage free and unrestricted competition.

Finally, let's look at the antimerger bill requiring advance notification to interested governmental agencies of pending mergers. Corporate and banking merger rates are now at alarming levels. So common have mergers become that early this year a large New York bank advertised in a financial journal offering advice on mergers under a headline reading: "Would your company benefit by a corporate merger?" Quoting the magazine Business Week to the effect that "corporate mergers in business and industry tripled in the last 4 years," this "merger, anyone?" approach offered a finders' service with the hint that "your bank * * * may even know where preliminary investigations would prove fruitful."

The administration record on this bill was particularly revealing. The Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Antitrust Division and the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission strongly supported the measure. The Secretary of Commerce, however, just as vigorously opposed the bill. Apparently, Secretary Weeks and the big-business interests are not bound by the administration line. Apparently, Secretary Weeks is not under wraps in opposing measures favorable to small business. Can we assume that the team concept operates only to gag the small-business arm of this administration?

This is the Republican record on three specific measures of interest to small business. The administration did nothing to improve the climate for small business by strengthening the antitrust laws. It was ineffective and divided in efforts to limit unwholesome mergers. It did nothing to improve the capital position of small business by easing the inequitable-tax structure.

After 3½ years of inaction, this administration seeks to hide its big-business bias behind a smokescreen of a Cabinet-level study committee—good until the election is over. Will the American small-business men be fooled? I think not. Many of us from this body will be with the voters this fall to point up the truth and to place the responsibility for failure to assist small business on the Republican administration where it belongs.

MIDLAND REALTY CO.,
Chicago, July 16, 1956.

Hon. JOHN SPARKMAN,
Senator from Alabama,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Having been in business for the last 44 years, my personal observation and belief is that if the Eisenhower administration remains in power another 4 years, the small-business man will become extinct. The million-dollar corporations will become billion-dollar corporations and the small-business man will go to the poorhouse.

Investigate 50 corporations or more and you will find that they are controlling half a dozen other lines in addition to their own. That is not a healthy situation.

A month or so ago I saw something that I believe is worth mentioning. Some of the chain food stores now have drug and cosmetic counters. (However, they do not fill prescriptions as yet.) That of course denies the corner drugstore business which is rightfully theirs, and they surely have a struggle as it is.

As the chairman of the Committee on Small Business, Senator SPARKMAN, I hope you will do something about it, for conditions are ripe enough for a thorough investigation now. I believe that small-business men are the backbone of the Nation's industry. Therefore, I hope the Congress will see to it that the giant corporations will not eliminate the small-business man. The prosperity we have today is sectional and not uniform.

Sincerely yours,
G. K. PAPAZOGLIDIS, President.

DEAR SENATOR MORSE: The equality of opportunity bill will be before the Senate for consideration and we would certainly appreciate your favorable consideration of this legislation.

The principal purpose of S. 11 is to plug a loophole that developed in the Robinson-Patman Act when the United States Supreme Court ruled that good faith was a complete defense for discriminatory sales to large outfits.

As you are probably aware, this bill passed the House by a large vote with, I believe, only 3 Members voting against it and 393 voting in favor of it. We are most anxious for this bill to be considered at this session of the Congress and would certainly appreciate your favorable consideration of this measure when it is before the Senate.

Hon. Senator WAYNE MORSE,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR HON. SENATOR MORSE: We wish to thank you for the support you have given small business by signing the equality-of-opportunity bill, S. 11, that was introduced in the United States Senate on January 6, 1955, by Senator ESTES KEFAUVER.

Price discrimination, as you well know, is extremely detrimental to small businessmen and especially to the gasoline retailer.

We understand that the S. 11 bill will probably reach the floor of the United States Senate during the latter part of June or early July 1956 and we sincerely hope that you will continue to favor the passage of this important legislation.

Our association is comprised of 1,200 gasoline retailer members in the southern California area who have been forced into gasoline price wars many times during the past 20 years by the major suppliers who use a subsidy, rebate, or special allowance program discriminately. We believe that the Kefauver-Patman bill will eliminate the majority of our troubles and allow us to compete on a basis of service and efficiency.

Your continued support is urgently needed by small business and we feel certain that you will want to give us the legislation that will restore us to a competitive basis without discrimination.

Thank you for your kind consideration to this letter and if we can possibly ever be of service to you please feel free to use the services of our trade association.

Yours very truly,

The Honorable WAYNE L. MORSE,
United States Senator,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MORSE: You undoubtedly know that the House passed H. R. 1840, known as the equality-of-opportunity bill, by a vote of 393 to 3, and that it has been sent to the Senate Judiciary Committee for action.

Also, unquestionably you are familiar with the necessity for passage of this bill in order to give the small-business man an equal break with the "bigs." Particularly since the recent decision of the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals in the Standard Oil of Indiana case, has it become necessary to make clear the intent of Congress with respect to the Robinson-Patman Act.

From your past record, I feel sure you are in favor of this bill. The thing we, as small-business men, are up against now is getting this bill out of the Senate Judiciary Committee and onto the Senate floor for action prior to the adjournment of Congress.

Anything you can do to expedite the clearing of this bill through the Senate Judiciary Committee will be greatly appreciated.

You are aware, I am sure, that this bill does not offer protective legislation to the smaller-business man, other than that he must be given an equal break in price and sales conditions, on like quantity and quality, with the "bigs" within his own competitive area.

Your good attention will be most appreciated.

Cordially yours,

OLIVER HURTIG.

NATIONAL CONGRESS OF PETROLEUM RETAILERS,
Detroit, Mich., June 19, 1956.
Hon. WAYNE MORSE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MORSE: The Nation's service station operators earnestly request your support and help in securing Senate adoption at this session of H. R. 1840 (the equality of opportunity bill to strengthen the Robinson-Patman Act) passed by the House 393 to 3—which is identical with S. 11 of which you were a cosponsor.

You are familiar with the reasons why the Nation's small-business men need this bill:

1. Price discrimination weakens and destroys small business.

2. The protection against price discrimination which Congress intended to provide in adopting the Robinson-Patman Act has been largely taken away by the Supreme Court decision in the Standard Detroit case (1951), making the "good faith" defense absolute rather than procedural so that it excuses price discrimination even where there is lessening of competition and tendency toward creation of a monopoly as a result.

3. Following the Supreme Court decision, new waves of destructive price discrimination have struck our industry and other industries as well with an alarming increase in small-business failures and destruction of small-business opportunity.

4. H. R. 1840 restores the intention of Congress as shown by the record in adopting the Robinson-Patman Act, by providing that the "good faith" defense shall not apply where there is a lessening of competition or tendency to create monopoly.

5. H. R. 1840 will undo the damage done by the Supreme Court decision and give small business the protection which it needs and deserves against this destructive practice.

We ask you to tell your colleagues why it is so necessary that H. R. 1840 be passed by the Senate at this session—that there will be new thousands of business failures and tragic loss of faith as well as economic loss if small business must wait another 2 years for this needed protection.

We sincerely believe that the American economic system should be made to work for small business as well as big business. If those who profit from crushing small business through price discrimination practices cannot be curbed, there will be a loss of economic freedom and opportunity for all Americans, and our economic system itself will be in danger.

H. R. 1840, which is identical with S. 11 and H. R. 11 as introduced by Representative PATMAN, had extensive hearings by the House Judiciary Committee and there is already an exhaustive record, eliminating the necessity for additional hearings by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Members of the committee are already familiar with the evidence and the arguments, and we sincerely hope it may be possible that they will be encouraged to act in plenty of time for Senate adoption at this session.

As the national trade association of service station operators, we are deeply and desperately concerned. Until this bill is passed, the Nation's nearly 200,000 service station operators are at the mercy of ruthless, cruel price discrimination practices which have and are destroying their businesses, their earnings, and savings, and taking the very food from their families. Sixty thousand service station operators fail in business, quit business or are forced out of business by adverse conditions every year, and price discrimination practices are a primary cause. We earnestly and sincerely beseech your assistance in solving this problem through adoption of H. R. 1840 by the Senate as quickly as possible.

We will appreciate hearing from you as to measures which are being taken and progress being made.

Very truly yours,

CASH B. HAWLEY,
President.

DEAR SENATOR MORSE: I do not know whether you recall me or not; but we have had several conversations in the past on the perpetuation of the famous Robinson-Patman bill for the benefit of small business.

I am again writing to you, very sincerely and earnestly soliciting your cooperation in using your customary fine influence by talking to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate on H. R. 1840, the Equality of Opportunity bill.

All indications would tend to prove to anyone that with the unanimous action of Congress in approving this H. R. 1840 indicates the feeling of the people throughout the country generally. Their great desire to have this bill approved by the Senate. I know you are a very definite champion of small business and sincerely trust that you will lend your support to the passing of same.

I know that the Congress is going to adjourn some time in July and it is my most sincere hope that this bill can now go through the House prior to the vacation time, because I understand if it does not; the thing has to start all over again during the next session.

Any assistance you can lend at this time to this most important bill will be greatly appreciated by the rank and file of the people of this country.

HUFSTADER & WALLAN SHELL SERVICE,
Bend, Oreg., June 26, 1956.

Hon. WAYNE MORSE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MORSE: We desperately need your help in combating price discrimination practices which weaken and destroy small business. Congress intended to prevent such destructive price discrimination when it adopted the Robinson-Patman Act, but the Supreme Court decision in the Standard Detroit case in 1951, which opened up the "good faith" loophole, has destroyed the effectiveness of the Robinson-Patman Act.

In the retail petroleum industry, 60,000 service station operators fail in business, quit business, or are forced out of business by hardship conditions every year—and price discrimination of the type permitted by the Supreme Court decision is probably the most important single cause of these human catastrophes.

The injury to small business caused by the Supreme Court decision will undoubtedly deepen and worsen until Congress acts to remedy the situation, and now for the first time since 1951 we are hopeful of getting such protection. A bill has just passed the House of Representatives which will remedy the damage done by the Court's decision, restore the intention of Congress in adopting the Robinson-Patman Act, and give small business the protection which it needs and deserves. This is H. R. 1840, the Equality of Opportunity bill (identical with S. 11 and H. R. 11 as introduced by Representative PATMAN) which will limit the "good faith-meeting competition" defense to cases where competition is not injured or destroyed by the discrimination.

In the House this bill received very extended hearings before the House Judiciary Committee, at which a score of small-business trade associations, farm, and labor organizations appeared in its support. It was approved by the committee, and adopted by the House 393 to 3.

This bill was unfortunately delayed in the House, however, and the promonopolists and lobbyists for big business which profit from price discrimination are probably hoping for sufficient delay in the Senate to prevent adoption at this session. In view of how desperately small business needs this bill, we ask your help to see that these delays do not occur and that this bill comes to a vote and is approved in this session.

Since the House has given this bill such extended hearings and the record is so complete, we are hopeful that the Senate Judiciary Committee can act on this measure without further hearings so that it may come to a Senate vote in plenty of time.

We will sincerely appreciate your help in getting this bill to a vote as early as possible and your support for it. Our members will also appreciate hearing from you as to progress which is being made.

Very truly yours,

L. C. WALLAN.

DEAR SENATOR MORSE: As there are no Senators from Oregon serving on the Judiciary Committee, I certainly hope you will use your persuasive abilities among your friends on this committee to report favorably for passage of the House bill H. R. 1840 before Congress adjourns.

H. R. 1840 is nothing more than putting teeth in our present Robinson-Patman Act, which will ensure the life of small business, the backbone of our country. It accomplishes this by preventing price discrimination.

If this bill is not enacted, many small businesses will soon be disabled, thus crippling the economy of the Nation. The much increased activity on the part of the opposition (big business) for the defeat of this bill, since it passed the House, should be a clear indication that H. R. 1840 is vital to small business.

The Constitution was not written with the intent that monopoly should thrive, but to the contrary; the equality of opportunity for all.

Sincerely yours,

WM. P. LYLE.

BUFFALO AND SUBURBAN
GASOLINE RETAILERS ASSOCIATION,
Williamsville, N. Y., June 27, 1956.

Senator WAYNE MORSE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MORSE: We are informed that H. R. 1840 (same at H. R. 11) the equality of opportunity bill, was passed by the House by overwhelming vote of 393 to 3—on June 11, and is now in the Senate Judiciary Committee. With such support by the House, after the extensive hearings by the House Judiciary Committee and the testimony before the House and Senate Small Business Committees—the need for this bill should now be adequately established. Economic murder through price discrimination is an issue which transcends any question of any suppliers' need to meet "lawful competition" by firing buckshot into a crowd of his customer's competitors. The answer to "lawful competition" is more "lawful competition" not "special privilege" to maintain a special customer's trade.

In view of how desperately small business needs this bill, and the need of this country to safeguard the survival of small business in a free enterprise system—even one more year of cut-throat competition may be crucial—not only for the thousands of small businesses which may be destroyed but for the morale of the remaining small business to continue the fight. When small business and its organizations have been defeated, demoralized or destroyed, who would remain to carry on the crusade for its protection?

The record is already adequate. Therefore further extensive hearings could add nothing but delay and thus prevent the report of this measure in time for action at this session. We ask your help in bringing this bill to a Senate vote in time for action and urge your personal support to aid its enactment. The overwhelming vote in the House is a tribute to the integrity of that body. May the Senate prove equally immune to the lobbies of those who would perpetuate the rule of economic murder.

Very sincerely,

WALTER F. FAXLANGER,
Executive Secretary.

RULES FOR SPORT ARE RULES FOR LIVING

(By Walter Faxlanger)

Sport in school (and out of school) teaches fair play, not only for the athletic field but for every part of living. It surely should include our business. All sport is played according to rules of fair play which apply equally to all players. To produce the keenest competition, contestants are graded according to age, weight, or skill. To match a flyweight against a heavyweight in boxnig or wrestling would be no competition at all. No one would buy a ticket to see such a match; and if anyone were forced to witness it, their sense of fairness (which they acquired through sport) would impel them to yell for a law to end such slaughter. Yet in business some persons think it is O. K. for a multi-billion-dollar refining corporation to knock out thousands of defenseless little retailers by competing at the retail level and cutting their price below the retailers' costs (but only until the independents are run out). Recently, to avoid criticism, they give stooge price cutters a special discount on condition that they will start price wars to freeze the other dealers out. Such price wars are plain economic murder.

Paying players for throwing games recently created a national scandal in basketball, although it affected only the betting fraternity and the fame of a team or a school. (The effect on student and public moral values might as well be ignored unless it is our intent to apply these moral values of sport into our business relations with our fellow men.) For instance, the recent price wars among gasoline retailers were started by refiners offering special wholesale prices only to dealers who would agree to start price wars and thus betray their fellow dealers for the financial benefit of the major oil companies. The economic and moral damage resulting was far greater than that from the basketball sellouts, but no one harped on that betrayal as a public scandal. No; instead, such throatcutting is praised during Oil Progress Week and is hailed as proof that the oil industry is not a monopoly. No one bothers to point out to the public that such competition is only at the retailer level and is provoked by refiners to force retailers to handle the refiners' products for less.

MISSED MORAL POINT

The Supreme Court of the United States recently ignored the moral lessons of sport when it ruled that the right of a major oil company (Standard of Indiana) to discriminate in price between "Neds" and its other dealers in Detroit, "to meet the competition of another refiner (unnamed) in good faith" was a complete defense even though Neds used the advantage to cut the throats of a thousand other dealers, many of them Standard's own outlets. The Robinson-Patman Act ban on price discrimination (the third legislative attempt by Congress to prevent it) could not forbid discrimination unless it could be proved that there was an "intent" to establish a monopoly. How could anyone prove "intent"? That it did tend to create a monopoly and did injure competition was ruled irrelevant.

"Meeting the price of a competitor in good faith" might be compared to "shooting in self-defense." The Federal Trade Commission claimed that such facts should be admitted to the evidence for whatever weight they might hold, but that greater rights of third parties and of the public were involved and that those public rights were paramount above all private feuds. The Supreme Court ruled in effect that if one feudist was shooting at a shadow of another feudist across Main Street and thousands of third parties were being killed and a whole city was forced to detour from its normal places of trade that the Government still had no power to tell the feudists to "cease and desist" in accordance with a Government order. That is exactly the status of our State and National antitrust laws today.

We believe that the present session of Congress should write into law those moral values of sport which would outlaw price discrimination in words so clear that no court could dare misinterpret their meaning.

"Neds" was not an isolated case in Detroit. The practices complained against are part of a diabolical scheme, used nationwide by all major refiners to force all independent retailers out of business. But for a few exceptions that part of the program is already an accomplished fact. They wish, however, to retain the right to discriminate as a weapon for control and for further conquest of many related lines. For example, the writer is still an independent retailer. I own my own building and sell four different brands of gasoline. Yet, when I signed with Firestone to sell Firestone tires I was told to sign a form which directed Firestone to pay to Texaco a 1-percent commission on all of my sales. By their control over so many retail outlets they have gained power to levy tribute on other business and even to control who may or may not manufacture.

The oil industry's drive for supreme economic power began in the early 1930's when the major refiners started invading the retail field by building strings of palatial stations. The selling appeal of these swank emporiums was an "unfair trade practice" because they did not amortize the cost or pay the operational expense of "free service" out of the fixed margin allowed to their independent dealers. By entering the retail field they controlled both the wholesale and the retail price. Dealers could not adjust their margin to pay for equal swank. The new and shiny company stations were paid for out of refining profits by a subsidy reported to average more than 5 cents per gallon more than dealer margin.

BETWEEN MILLSTONES

Despite the lure of free service and swank, enough customers stayed with the regular "garage" to enable them to hang on doggedly. The major refiners then devised a quicker-acting system of freeze-out in which their own identity was more obscure. For customers wary of swank and monopoly they baited the trap with "independence," "little dealers" and "price" from 2 to 4 cents under the prevailing price. This discount to the retail buyer was made possible by a corresponding discount which was available only to dealers with a "tank car rating." The previous existence of a few tank car stations which actually had sidings and storage facilities and had sold unsteady job lots retail, lent background and credibility to a wholly bogus crop who had neither sidings nor facilities and got their supply from the major companies. These bogus tank car stations were served by truck and bought less than carload (just like any other dealer). By some strange coincidence the dealer who got the special price was always one whose nature or previous business example might indicate that he would use that advantage to undercut his fellow dealers. His large signs and flamboyant advertising would bust open the market for 20 miles around.

Such price wars, phony as they were, put the regular dealers right in the middle—between an upper millstone (the company station) pressing down with 5 cents more in swank and service—which the independent must try to match on a 3-cent margin—and a lower millstone grinding at that 3-cent margin with a price competition of from 2 to 4 cents per gallon. Before the dealers or anyone else could figure out what had happened or where the attack had really come from, independent retail gasoline dealers were almost extinct.

FEUDALISM REVIVED

As each dealer faced economic murder he was offered one chance for escape. He must pledge a fief to one company in the new feudalism of oil—by signing a lease and agency contract with one company. This automatically made his a one-brand station. He was then allowed to lease his place back from the company on a supervised day-to-day basis, under which he could be thrown out of his own building. This choice was thrust upon, not one dealer, but thousands of dealers all over the United States. But, because their stations were remodeled and in many cases completely rebuilt with oil-company loans, many dealers thought their vassal state was a good bargain. Each attended his new station with enthusiasm.

But the companies held mortgages which had to be paid whether the margin was much or small and they controlled the margin. The companies had demanded long-term leases, but dealer subleases were for only 1 year and required the dealer to pay ½ cent or 1 cent per gallon rent. Each time the short-term lease was renewed it demanded a higher rent, 1½ cents, 2 cents, 2½ cents. Dealers were told to get their profit from the grease and oil business, which they did. The next lease charged $30 per month for the lubrication room or $60 if it had two stalls. The dealers were told to sell more tires, batteries, and accessories, and some renewals demanded 6 percent on these. Like a squirrel running faster and faster in his revolving cage merely to stay on the same spot, the lease and agency dealers found that no amount of further effort would put them any further ahead. They could never earn any more than their oil-refiner landlord chose to allow them to keep. Some were getting troublesome and a few "tank-car dealers" who had built large volume with the aid of their special discount were refusing to stay in line. They considered themselves "better merchandisers" rather than "agents provacateur" or leadersheep in a slaughterhouse.

COMPANIES MAKE NEW DOUBLE PLAY

To break them all, one company offered a 2-cent discount for cash under the posted price at company stations. The other dealers had to follow.

A new price war was on. Pet retailers got rebates or paid no rent. Grumblers were forced to quit after sitting in on the cut-throat game long enough to run deeply into debt. Many signed their new stations over to the oil companies. Stations had no value during a price war. Thus the companies gained full possession before the loans could be repaid, and the leadersheep, who had led the flock to slaughter again, this time got their own throats cut. A special few were again rewarded with a chance to sell out at a real juicy price, which enabled them to start in again and to build the swankiest stations in the town. Now these favored few still play their old role in a new game—the Iowa plan.

THE IOWA PLAN

The Iowa plan claims to establish each lease-bound operator as an independent retailer. As such the company cannot dictate the retail price as it once did. Therefore the agent provacateur is used to undersell the regular dealers to keep the dealer mark-up at a minimum, while the wholesale price is pushed upward to all the traffic will bear. This assures the refiners of a maximum portion of whatever amount consumers can be forced to pay. The Iowa plan saddles on the dealer all of the liabilities, all the responsibilities of independence, but he has none of its prerogatives. He is deprived of all the prerogatives of an employee, such as a regular salary, pay for overtime, social security, compensation, etc.

Despite the swank of the modern stations compared to those of the past, we might still ask—

IS THAT PROGRESS?

The Iowa plan station operators know that they are expected to handle the particular brand of tires, batteries, and accessories tied up with their brand of gasoline. They cannot shop for value or price. Through such control of retail outlets the refiners are in position to levy tribute on manufacturers of other lines of merchandise, and by control of the normal outlets they are in a position to dictate who may, or may not, manufacture for general sale, and at what price.

SUCH HAS BEEN "OIL'S PROGRESS" TOWARD MONOPOLY

All of this concentration of their economic power was made possible by the little clause in the antitrust laws which allows a seller—to discriminate in price between customers—"to meet the equally low price of a competitor," * * * to sell below cost, in spots, while charging high prices elsewhere. In such a game the small merchant without stores elsewhere is doomed. That is why, to encourage free enterprise as the answer to communism, we need to assure those who venture capital to start a business that so long as they are efficient they can survive next to giants; that no group which merely has more money can force them into a give-away contest sure to end in bankruptcy for the smallest. Economic murder by below-cost selling should be outlawed.

Records of the Federal Trade Commission bulge with data which supports the charges and information contained herein. Indeed, they were proved to the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals in the case of the Detroit Dealers v. Standard Oil of Indiana. If the circuit court decision had been upheld, price discrimination would be outlawed and small business could survive; but now feudalism is enthroned, economic freedom has been murdered, and democracy will perish with it—while our attention is focused abroad.

This article is published to illustrate why dealers need legislation to ban price discrimination and sales below cost. It is the dealers' intention to seek such a law in the 1952 session of the legislature.

Might we count on your vote and help to attain it?

BUFFALO PHONE BOOK TELLS TRAGIC STORY

Comparing the classified list in the Buffalo directory with the directory distributed in October of last year, we find that 228 gasoline stations (approximately one-third of those listed) changed hands within that year. Those changes were not due to the current price war because listings closed in July which was too early to include the even greater price war losses. The 228 dropped from the 1950 book exceeded by only 22 the 206 dropped from the 1940 book a year before. In the new book (distributed in October 1951), another 100 phones of dealers have already been answered by a new proprietor or have been disconnected, as of November 1. These and the 22 might be labeled victims of the price war and even more will succumb in November—1952 equals 50 percent.

The price war is not a new epidemic. It is only a more violent form of the same problems which have cursed the retail gasoline business for many years. The cause of most of these business failures can be stated in 2 words—"unfair competition" or more dramatically "economic murder."

The name of the weapon is "subsidy." By it an oil company contrives to beat down the price of hundreds of dealers below their operating costs by subsidizing a few dealers with an extra discount, knowing that the subsidized dealer will use that advantage to undersell those who have no subsidy. In the present price war they pretend to even it up by offering a ½-cent subsidy to every dealer who will meet the price of the original cutter who gets upwards of 1½ cents—but only on condition that he will post a certain price (currently 19 cents plus tax, which equals 25.2 cents). This puts the dealer on a starvation 4-cent margin in spite of the fact that one-third of all dealers were going broke each year on a margin 2 cents greater.

Another form of subsidy is to reduce the rent (temporarily) to the man whom they can dominate, and raise the rent to the man who takes seriously their advertising blah that the dealers are "independent merchants." By such subsidies they can keep the dealers they want and drive out all others.

It is impossible to amortize the cost of a modern station with modern equipment out of the above-board retail margin. During the years when all other levels and segments of the petroleum industry were expanding and modernizing out of earnings, the retail dealers (most of whom once owned their own buildings) failed to earn enough to pay their expenses or modernize their stations and were forced to sell out to the companies who would do it for them.

Although the tactics of subsidy and price fixing (temporarily below the independent dealers' costs) is as old as the industry and was outlawed over 50 years ago by the Sherman Act, and was further condemned by the Clayton Act (1914) and by the Robinson-Patman Act (1936), the subsidy, discrimination, and price-fixing (below cost) still are condoned. The three acts are nullified by failure of the Department of Justice to investigate present violators and by the decision of the Supreme Court which ruled out of order the real issue, "the effect of subsidies" upon other dealers who have no subsidy.

Behind the one-third who contribute and lose their capital each year there always waits another sucker who, as the propaganda puts it, "would like to be his own boss—an independent merchant." Their "supervisor" advises them to invest $1,600 for advertising and giveaways for the opening day. The free goods clientele love him and leave him for the next station that wants big gallonage for a day. He operates longer hours on the advice of the "supervisor" and overhead eats up his capital. It is all sucked in to the costs of retailing gas. When he goes broke another sucker is always ready to become "independent."

TEXAS SERVICE STATIONS, ASSOCIATED,
June 26, 1956.

Hon. WAYNE MORSE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MORSE: In behalf of thousands of Texas service station operators TSSA wishes to express to you its appreciation for your leadership in introducing S. 11, the equality-of-opportunity bill designed to tighten the loopholes in the Robinson-Patman Act.

Now that H. R. 1840 has passed the House and is in Senate Judiciary Committee, we wish it were somehow possible to get our message to all Members of the Senate that we desperately needs adoption of this bill if small business is to survive. Price discrimination destroys small business and causes thousands of business failures among service station operators alone.

We sincerely appreciate your interest in small business, and ask your help in urging members of the Judiciary Committee to favorably report H. R. 1840, identical to S. 11.

Those who profit by crushing small business through price discrimination will probably seek to use every method of defeating this bill, and we are deeply grateful that you have supported our cause and will continue to do so.

Cordially,

BEN OGDEN, President.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to recur to the remarks I was making concerning S. 11, because I now see the Senator from Tennessee on the floor. I do not know of anyone who has fought more persistently for the small-business men than has the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] in connection with S. 11. I do not think any one of us has a better record than has the Senator from Tennessee for fighting for the best interests of the small-business men.

Mr. President, the valiant attempt of the Senator from Tennessee at the 11th hour so to speak, to have S. 11 passed deserves high commendation by the people of the United States.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. I was one, together with the Senator from Oregon, who worked with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] in urging the passage of S. 11. His work in behalf of small business is to be highly commended. I am very, very unhappy because the bill was never brought up for consideration. As I recall, the House passed a similar bill by a vote of 393 to 3.

Every small business firm in America which is fighting against tremendous economic odds was looking forward to the passage of this very important piece of proposed legislation.

The Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] have done great work in this Chamber on behalf of small business.

It is my privilege to serve with the senior Senator from Oregon on the Senate Small Business Committee.

The members of that committee felt that the proposed legislation was of paramount importance. I hope that at the opening of the next Congress a similar bill will be introduced and that it may be placed on the statute books before it is too late.

Anyone who has been engaged in a small-business enterprise knows the uphill fight which he must make against the monopolistic tendencies of our economic system.

Mr. MORSE. One only has to read such communications as I have placed in the RECORD from small-business men in Oregon to recognize how serious their plight is and how much they needed S. 11. They point out in communication after communication that they will have to go out of business unless they get relief such as was provided by S. 11.

I associate myself with the remarks of the Senator from Minnesota. He has been of invaluable help to us in attempting to assist the small-business men of the Nation.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Minnesota. Mr. President, serving as I do under the leadership of the senior Senator from Oregon, who is chairman of the Subcommittee on Retail Distribution, I wish to underscore everything the Senator from Oregon has said. I repeat that this bill, which has died, so to speak, never had a chance to be born, much less die. Such legislation was long overdue.

If Senators will read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of about 2 weeks ago, in the speech on credit which the junior Senator from Minnesota delivered as the result of a nationwide survey as to what is happening to small business under this administration, they will find evidence to indicate that the economic policies of the administration are strangling the lifeline of credit. They will find what is really happening to independent business enterprise.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I wish to thank the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Minnesota for what they have said about the effort to pass S. 11 and to thank them for their cosponsorship of the bill which was reported unanimously by the Committee on the Judiciary.

I hope the small-business people, who have worked so hard and efficiently for its enactment, will not become disheartened, because I am certain it will be one of the first bills to be introduced in the next session. I hope there will then be time for full debate. I hope then when the bill is brought to a vote, there will be very few Senators who will oppose it on the floor of the Senate.

I regret exceedingly that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] objected to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I merely wish to add a word with reference to the bill which the able Senator from Oregon was discussing, namely, S. 11. It had a companion bill, H. R. 1840.

I think this Congress has much of which to be proud. But the one piece of legislation which small business all across this country wanted was this particular bill. I think it is most regrettable that tonight we did not have a chance to vote on it because of the objection of one of our colleagues on the other side of the aisle.

COMPULSORY INSPECTION OF POULTRY

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, there is another matter on which I wish to comment. Then I shall ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a speech which I had intended to deliver today, but which I postponed in order to accommodate the schedule of the majority leader. It involves the serious matter of psittacosis, or parrot fever.

My proposal seeks to provide for the compulsory inspection of poultry. The health of the American people is being greatly jeopardized because of the inadequate inspection of poultry.

Only a few days ago we read that several persons in Ypsilanti, Mich., became ill after eating diseased poultry.

Mr. President, a poultry inspection bill should have been passed.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the speech I intended to give today.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONSUMERS, INDUSTRY, AND WORKERS NEED COMPULSORY POULTRY INSPECTION

The adjournment of Congress will leave unresolved one of the most vital problems of consumer protection to come before us in recent years. I am referring to legislation for the compulsory inspection of poultry.

It is highly unfortunate that neither the Senate nor the House of Representatives has acted on this most pressing legislation during the current session. Extremely dangerous problems to the health of consumers and poultry workers and to the economic welfare of the poultry industry are posed by the marketing of filthy and diseased poultry.

We, in Oregon, know through bitter experience how great are these health hazards and the need for compulsory poultry inspection. As I have reported to the Senate in detail previously, the Portland area of Oregon suffered a serious tragedy last spring because of the unhindered flow of diseased poultry. Two persons died and 62 men and women were made extremely ill—some were hospitalized for months—by an epidemic of turkey-caused psittacosis or parrot fever.

A NATIONAL PROBLEM

Oregon is by no means the only area plagued by outbreaks of illness due to diseased poultry. For example, only on Wednesday, the Washington Daily News reported that dozens of Michigan college students had been hospitalized after eating poultry. The news account stated, and I quote: "Health officials in Ypsilanti, Mich., said that the sudden fever and nausea that hospitalized 40 eastern Michigan college students was 'salmonella nurium' caused by infected poultry, and is 'very distressing, but almost never fatal.' "

These are just two of many outbreaks in recent years of illness, and sometimes death, caused by some of the 26 diseases transmissible from poultry to man. In Oregon, Texas, Michigan, Georgia, Nebraska, New Jersey, Virginia, Iowa, and other States unfit poultry has stricken consumers and poultry workers.

Despite the cries of apologists, diseased and adulterated poultry is definitely a health hazard. The very fact that poultry is in the unenviable position of the top category of causes for food poisoning demonstrates that point. The United States Public Health Service blames poultry and poultry products for an average of one-third of the food-poisoning cases reported each year. That percentage is far above those attributed to any other food groups, including all other perishables.

But even if death and illness were not involved here, even if consumers and poultry workers were not endangered, we would still have the responsibility to stem the flow of filthy and diseased poultry to market. The consumer does not want to buy garbage. And she has the right to be protected from buying it unwittingly. We must provide legislation which will assure her of good, clean, healthful birds.

INSPECTION NEED PROVEN

This great need for compulsory inspection legislation has been thoroughly documented in hearings before three different committees of Congress this year. But, unfortunately, this extensive consideration of the problem has not led to legislation.

The Senate Agriculture Committee last week reported what it called a compulsory poultry inspection bill. But the effectiveness of this measure is very doubtful. For example, it does not require ante mortem, or before slaughter, inspection, which alone probably would have prevented upward from 50 of the 64 Oregon cases of psittacosis. In fact, the Agriculture Committee's bill is a weak measure, loaded with loopholes.

Such legislation is as harmful to the poultry industry as to consumers. For poultry-inspection legislation without teeth cannot prevent epidemics. And future outbreaks will severely hurt the industry, in addition to causing human suffering.

OREGON HAS A DIRECT INTEREST

We, in Oregon, know that if there is a repetition of the spring disaster in our State, or if another poultry-caused disease were to strike there, our turkey industry would be severely harmed—and probably permanently so. Only the combined quick action of public-health authorities, labor, and industry saved the situation from becoming chaotic after the spring psittacosis outbreak. In the future, even this effective joint activity may not be enough against the resultant drop in consumer confidence and the embargoes of other States.

PUBLIC INTEREST GROUPS PIONEER

Mr. President, we simply must have truly health-protective poultry-inspection legislation. I know that the fight for it will continue and that it will be successful. Powerful public-health groups, women's organizations, consumer groups, farm organizations and labor unions will increasingly press their joint effort to secure adequate and effective poultry inspection.

I want to thank and congratulate these groups for their fortitude and sense of public service.

Special credit must go to organized labor for the activities of the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen (AFL–CIO) in spearheading the campaign. This union called the attention of Congress and the Nation to the scandalous conditions existing in some sections of the poultry processing industry and to the problems these conditions posed to consumer and poultry workers.

For this public service I want to commend the Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen and their great president and secretary-treasurer, Earl W. Jimerson and Patrick E. Gorman. I believe the Nation is indebted to them for their immense efforts to put this legislation on the books. The Meat Cutters Union's campaign is, indeed, a wonderful example of a powerful organization using its strength to benefit all the people of the Nation.

The General Federation of Women's Clubs, Young Women's Christian Association, American Association of University Women, and Housewives United also deserve great praise for their public-spirited campaign on behalf of this legislation. These women's groups have ably represented the views of homemakers and consumers.

The National Farmers' Union has made many valuable contributions during the consideration of the poultry inspection bills. It realizes the great benefits to farmers of legislation which will assure consumer confidence in an agricultural product.

And important health groups, the Association of State and Territorial Health Officers, Association of Food and Drug Officials of the United States, Association of State Public Health Veterinarians Conference of Public Health Veterinarians, American Veterinary Medical Association, and American Nurses Association, have aided Congress with their expert knowledge and support. Some members of these groups are really the pioneers in the campaign, for some have called for this legislation as far back as a decade ago.

USDA DRAGS FEET

I regret, Mr. President, that among the groups which deserve great praise for their work on behalf of poultry consumers I cannot name the Department of Agriculture. This is the agency which should have called the need for compulsory inspection of poultry to the attention of the Nation and the public. Yet it did not. In fact, for a time it actually denied the need.

Worse yet, the Department of Agriculture sought to defend the malpractices committed under its voluntary inspection program. In the words of a Senate subcommittee, spokesmen for the Department sought to defend the lack of consumer protection with—and I quote—"contradictory, misleading, inaccurate, and exaggerated statements."

I assume this lack of concern about consumers is another part of the "be conservative with money but liberal with people" policy which this administration has so often enunciated.

LEGISLATION SHOULD RECEIVE PRIORITY NEXT YEAR

I am proud, Mr. President, to have played a part in the campaign to drive diseased and adulterated poultry from the market place. I was one of the sponsors of the first bill introduced in the Senate to provide compulsory inspection of the poultry for wholesomeness and sanitation. And I have supported the subsequent bill, S. 3983, introduced by Senators MURRAY, MCNAMARA, and BENDER, following their subcommittee hearings.

I will continue to do all in my power to secure the enactment of an effective and adequate bill. And when I say, "effective," I mean a bill which will actually protect consumers and poultry workers—not one that is a jumble of many fine phrases, and few safeguards.

This legislation is needed by all the American people. It is legislation which will save human suffering and which will assure the American consumer of always getting a square deal when she buys poultry. Therefore, Congress must correct its 1956 sin of omission by enacting a compulsory poultry inspection law early in its next session.

HELLS CANYON DAM

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD certain editorials relating to the Hells Canyon Dam.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Coos Bay Times of June 28, 1956]

HELLS CANYON: STUDY IN POWER

At long last, thanks to the doggedness of Senators WAYNE L. MORSE and RICHARD NEUBERGER and Representative EDITH GREEN, the Senate and the House are going to discuss Hells Canyon bills calling for a high Federal dam. Both S. 1333, introduced by Senator MORSE and cosponsored by Senator NEUBERGER, and H. R. 4719, cosponsored by Mrs. GREEN, have passed their respective Interior Committees and are expected on the floor next week.

It has been a long struggle against opposition which has consistently ignored or rearranged the facts in order to follow an ideal which has no bearing on the question—an ideal of laissez faire as opposed to what the opposition has emotionally termed "creeping socialism."

The opposition, so well aided by Secretary of the Interior Douglas McKay, has attemped to make the issue one of "good old American free enterprise" against what McKay likes to call "Federal monopolies opposed to construction of water resources projects by anyone except the Federal Government." McKay, and others like him, have chosen to ignore the fact that private utilities control 80 percent of this country's power output and that even the most stanch advocate of a high Federal dam at Hells Canyon, Senator MORSE, has publicly said that he favors private construction of dams when the situation warrants it.

The factor the opposition has ignored, and the one which sets Hells Canyon apart from any ideological or political consideration, is simply the question: How can its full potential be most nearly realized?

Because of the wide diversity in figures quoted by what should be reliable sources (estimated on cost of construction of Idaho Power Co.'s three low dams range from $132.6 million to $311.2 million and on the Federal high dam from $311 million to $388.6 million), it is difficult to choose between the Federal and private projects. It is difficult, that is, if the contrast in benefits is not considered.

But let's look at this contrast. Consider that the high dam plus downstream dams which would use the high dam's water would have an output of 1,124,000 kilowatts compared with three low dams' output of 680,000. The difference in output is higher than the whole constant capacity of Bonneville Dam.

But more important, the high dam's output would go into the Northwest power pool envisioned in the U. S. Army Engineer's main control plan for the Columbia River basin, to provide power we must have to keep and attract industry here. The Idaho Power output would go into that company's marketing area, southeast Idaho, and never would see the power pool.

One of the reasons why Idaho Power would not sell outside its bailiwick is that it could not compete ratewise. Its estimated rate would be 6.69 mills per kilowatt hour, compared with 2.34 wholesale offered by Bonneville Power Administration. The high dam rate would be an estimated 2.70 mills.

Another reason why Idaho Power would keep its power to itself, to sell on the basis of what the traffic would bear, is that there is a strong likelihood that it would not have much more than enough power for its own customers. The estimate of Idaho Power's three-dam output is an optimistic one. Chances are that the company would build only the most profitable Oxbow dam, and possibly the Brownlee Dam, but probably not the little Hells Canyon dam.

Now comes the question: But what if Congress doesn't pass the Hells Canyon bill for the big dam? Then we'll have nothing. Granted, but there is more leeway in time than usually thought, and a failure in this Congress would not be the end of hope. Although 8 years is the time estimated for construction of the high dam, experts say it could be done in 5. And before that time, storage water from the dam could be released to the benefit of downstream dams.

This time factor compares favorably with the estimate of 4 years for Brownlee, 6 for Oxbow, and 9 for little Hells Canyon. And those times are dependent on Idaho Power not only getting enough financing but also wanting to build all three dams as quickly as possible.

We have listed the power output as the big factor in favor of a high dam. There are others. New industries would open up in the Northwest, because of the low-cost power, that would affect the whole country. About 60 percent of the nation's reserves of phosphate rock are in southeastern Idaho, but they are undeveloped because of power rates. The Nation's farmers are worrying about a shortage of phosphates for fertilizers and the high dam would bring them out. Other resources or industries dependent upon cheap power, such as aluminum and low grade copper, would open up. And just plain availability of power in larger quantity would attract many industries.

Arid sections of the Northwest could be brought to productiveness by irrigation, 192,000 acres of them, through a separate project financed by revenues from the high dam. No irrigation provision is made in Idaho Power's plans.

Recreation facilities, for which Idaho Power plans to spend $95,000, would be vastly outdistanced by the $1 million project planned for the Federal dam. It has been estimated by a national parks official that 650,000 tourists, more than Idaho's whole population, would visit the big dam annually.

Water storage for flood control would be greater at the high dam and would be infinitely so if only 1 or 2 of the small dams were used for comparison. This also would preclude any necessity of building dams on the Clearwater or Salmon Rivers, tributaries of the Snake, which would not only be a saving in construction costs but also would save the huge salmon runs on those rivers and the forest land and winter range for numerous elk and deer on the Clearwater.

Not the least of the consideration is that of revenue. The Federal Bonneville Power system had, through the last fiscal year, returned to the Treasury almost $402 million and was $68 million ahead of its repayment schedule.

We hope the Congress can look at these facts squarely, without having to consider party lines, and can vote for the public welfare.

[From the Portland Oregonian of July 20, 1956]

HELLS CANYON HIGH DAM OUT, BUT STORAGE ISSUE REMAINS

The 51 to 41 vote in the United States Senate defeating the Morse bill to authorize a high Federal dam in Hells Canyon leaves that Democratic campaign issue as dead as a dodo.

Bills to authorize Hells Canyon were introduced in the 81st, 82d, and 84th Congresses and the Republican 83d Congress. Only in this 84th Congress has the bill come out of committees in House and Senate. In its first and last Senate test, Hells Canyon was beaten. Eight Democrats, seven from the South, voted with Republicans against it. Only two Republicans, ALEXANDER WILEY, of Wisconsin, and WILLIAM LANGER, of North Dakota, voted for it. There is no point in pressing for a vote in the House.

The last lingering hope of the National Hells Canyon Association to prevent Idaho Power Co. from proceeding with construction of the three dams licensed by the Federal Power Commission in the Hells Canyon reach of the Snake River is in the courts. That is a slim hope. The courts have repeatedly upheld the administrative judgment of FPC in licensing such projects. And since Congress refuses to authorize a Federal dam, there is no competitor for the sites.

Although the public might reasonably expect to be spared the political thunder of candidates on Hells Canyon itself, in the coming campaign, and henceforth, the Senate vote does leave some related issues still open for discussion.

In an editorial on this page Sunday, the Oregonian pointed out that if Idaho Power Co.'s program should be sustained, and a high Federal dam in Hells Canyon eliminated from consideration, it would still be possible to obtain flood control and power benefits comparable to those of a Federal Hells Canyon Dam through cooperation of private utilities and the Federal Power Commission.

The suggestion was that Pacific Northwest Power Co.—a grouping of four utilities—and Idaho Power Co. get together with FPC to study advisability of increasing usable flood-control storage of the Middle Snake from 1,500,000 acre-feet to 2 million acre-feet.

Pacific Northwest Power Co. seeks FPC permits to build Mountain Sheep Dam, a river-run project, and Pleasant Valley Dam, with total storage of 928,000 acre-feet and usable flood-control storage of 500,000 acre-feet. The FPC permit for Idaho Power's Brownlee Dam requires availability of 1 million acre-feet for flood control. Its two other projects, Oxbow and low Hells Canyon, would have no usable storage.

The Federal Power Act requires FPC to give due consideration to comprehensive and multiple use of water in granting licenses. Since an estimated 2,300,000 acre-feet of usable flood-control storage has been replaced in Hells Canyon with the 1 million usable acre-feet of Brownlee Dam, storage elsewhere in the basin for flood control and downstream power benefits must be found.

Our suggestion is that thorough study be made of the potential benefits of eliminating Idaho Power Co.'s low, river-run Hells Canyon Dam, the third on the downstream ladder, and that Pacific Northwest Power Co.'s Pleasant Valley Dam, 40 miles below, be built high enough to back the river up to the Oxbow damsite or thereabouts. The estimated gain in usable storage would be around 500,000 acre-feet. We believe the power benefits would equal or exceed those of the presently proposed projects, and that power benefits in lower Snake and Columbia dams would be increased measurably.

The private utilities have fought their hardest to kill the Federal Hells Canyon Dam legislation. They say then can do a better job, at less cost, than the Government. But if they are to be permitted to consider power revenues and output only, they will not be doing the comprehensive job that needs to be done. The Senate vote on Hells Canyon makes it imperative, we believe, for the private utilities to reexamine their plans for the Middle Snake.

STATE OF THE NATION UNDER THE REPUBLICAN ADMINISTRATION

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, as has been customary for a number of years, both the majority and minority leaders of the Senate, at the close of a Congress, put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and have printed as Senate documents their respective statements on the record of Congress.

At this time, I ask unanimous consent to have printed such a statement for the minority side in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD together with a review of the achievements of the Republican Administration since 1953. I also request that, with the consent of the Senate, this statement and the review of achievements be printed with any necessary revisions and corrections after the adjournment of the Congress as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATE OF THE NATION UNDER THE REPUBLICAN ADMINISTRATION

INTRODUCTION

At the close of the 84th Congress, consider these achievements of the Republican administration after only 3½ years in office:

We have successfully gained and held the peace in a world of danger and uncertainties. No American boy today is fighting on a foreign battlefield.

By a strong defense, mutual aid to the free world, and a firm foreign policy, we contributed heavily to the reduced fear of war in the world. Today, there is a great rift in the Communist system. Regardless of their motives, the Communist leaders have been compelled to try to ease the tensions within the "Iron Curtain" by repudiating Stalin.

At home, the Republican administration has brought the Nation to the highest state of prosperity and well-being in our history—without basing it on war or leaf raking. We have topped at $400 billion economy. Moreover, the promise of the future is exceptionally bright.

Over 66 million people are now full-time job holders, with wages and personal incomes at peak levels. The number of strikes and man-days lost is the lowest in 8 years.

Government spending has been reduced $8 billion from Mr. Truman's last budget year and Government finances have been put in order. Today, the totals are written in black ink, with income and outgo balanced, and something left over to reduce Government debt.

Inflation, which between 1939 and 1952 had cut the spending power of the dollar in half, has been halted.

Taxes have been cut by $7.4 billion. The savings to each family come to about $100.

We have checked, and in some cases reversed, the 20-year trend to centralization of power in Washington, ending wage, price, rent, and production controls which shackled our economic system.

We have extended and increased social security, railroad retirement, unemployment compensation benefits, and have greatly expanded hospital building, rehabilitation, and other health, education, and social benefits for our people.

The decline in farm prices and income has been ended. We have launched a new soil bank program designed to reduce price-depressing surpluses and preserve the fertility of the Nation's croplands.

In 3½ years of Republican administration, more significant advances were made by executive and court action in civil rights of Negroes and other minorities than in all the years since the Civil War.

Under this administration there has been undertaken the greatest public works program in the history of the Nation including the St. Lawrence Seaway, a $32.9 billion Federal highway program, and the upper Colorado River Basin project covering five States and to cost eventually more than a billion dollars.

Over all is an honest, economical Republican government—respectful of State and local rights; mindful of the people's welfare; responsive to the needs of businessmen, farmers, workers, military personnel, and our young people for the freedom and opportunity to build, produce, and prosper, and which does not treat Communist infiltration as a "red herring."

A large part of these accomplishments came about through a Republican President working in harmony with a Republican-controlled 83d Congress in the first half of the President's term of office.

In 1954, however, the Democratic Party regained control of Congress. Individual Democratic leaders pledged coooperation with the President and on numerous occasions gave their support, especially in the field of foreign affairs. President Eisenhower, for his part, followed his well-known policy of respect and cooperation with Congress.

While the President's batting average in the 84th Congress is good, much of his success is due to the popularity and public approval of his recommendations and to the strong support given his program by Republican Members in Congress. On the program as a whole, the Republican leadership and party members gave the President strong support.

MISFORTUNES OF DIVIDED GOVERNMENT

It is no reflection on the sincerity and patriotism of members of either party to say that the public interest suffers when Congress is controlled by one political party and the executive branch by the other party. If our people realized this more fully, there is good reason to believe they would vote for a Congress controlled by the same party as the President's. In this way responsibility for success or failure of a program could be made clear.

Although the 84th Congress enacted a considerable quantity of bills and a fair share of the President's program, the unfortunate results of divided government can be seen in the failure of this Democratic-controlled Congress to enact many bills recommended by the President in the public interest. It can be seen also in bills which delayed action or distorted the President's recommendations.

FAILURE TO ENACT MEASURES URGENTLY NEEDED IN THE PUBLIC INTEREST

For example, the Democratic 84th Congress failed to pass the President's recommendations for Federal aid for additional school construction so urgently needed in many areas of the country. The same Democratic Party split which helped to defeat the school construction bill made impossible the enactment of civil rights legislation recommended by the President. Although highly critical of immigration restrictions, a Democratic Congress did not act on the President's recommendations for revision of the Immigration and Nationality Act. The Democratic 84th Congress again rejected the President's recommendation asking statehood for Hawaii and home rule for the District of Columbia. The Congress also failed to enact the postal rate increase requested by the President to end the deficits in the operations of the Post Office.

PARTISAN POLITICS AGAINST THE PUBLIC INTEREST

The Democratic 84th Congress unfortunately yielded to partisan politics detrimental to the public interest. The House Democratic leadership last year pressed for a $20 personal income-tax cut, although they knew that such a cut would deprive the Government of over $2½ billion in much-needed revenue and force the Government to borrow money and go deeper into debt.

IMPORTANT LEGISLATION DELAYED AND DISTORTED

Far too many bills important to the public interest were unduly delayed or distorted so completely that the President was compelled to veto them. The great Federal highway program and more than a dozen other major bills, for example, were not enacted by the 1st session of the 84th Congress as urged by the President, and thus were delayed more than a year. The farm soil-bank program was delayed for months until it was too late to apply it to the 1956 spring planting. When the bill finally passed it contained such major contradictions that it was plainly unworkable and the President was compelled to veto it. Similar delays affected other legislation urgently needed to aid the Nation's farmers. The huge military public works bill contained provisions violating the fundamental principle of separation of powers and here again, the President was forced to veto it. Democratic insistence on a postal pay bill stripped of proper job reclassification as recommended by the President forced another veto.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

The one outstanding fact of paramount importance to all our people is that under this Republican administration the United States is at peace with the world.

Our strong defense, our steady pursuit of goals toward peace and toward the independence and free development of nations, large and small, have had beneficial results. Regardless of its motives, the Soviet Union for the present appears to have shifted from its policy of fomenting violence and aggression, and now emphasizes peaceful and economic competition. International tensions have relaxed to some extent; there is less fear of war; the economic state of the world is good; and the outlook for peaceful progress looks brighter.

Although the President and the Secretary of State are charged with the conduct of foreign affairs, the Congress played a strong supporting role. Bipartisan unity reached high levels because the President worked in close harmony with Republican and Democratic leaders in both Houses.

When the Chinese Communists threatened an attack on Formosa, the Congress passed, at the President's request, House Joint Resolution 159, giving him authority to use armed force, if necessary, for the protection of Formosa and the Pescadores. This clear policy dissolved the threat. In section 12 of the Mutual Security Act of 1955, Congress affirmed American policy against the admission of Communist China to the United Nations. This was reaffirmed by a unanimously adopted concurrent resolution and in the mutual security bill of 1956.

The Senate broadened the defense of the free world in Asia by consenting to the Southeast Asia Treaty and the Mutual Defense Treaty with the Republic of China. It approved the Austrian State Treaty by which, at long last, Austria became a free and independent member of the international community. The occupation of Germany was also brought to an end, and the Federal German Republic became a member of NATO.

The 84th Congress took several occasions to reaffirm American policy in support of the freedom of all nations. A Senate resolution expressed the hope that self-government would be restored to the enslaved peoples of Europe and Asia. Both Houses approved a joint resolution urging the administration of American foreign policies in ways that will support the efforts of other people to achieve freedom and independence. These resolutions strengthened the President's hand in 1955 at the Geneva summit conference. More recently, Senate Resolution 302 expressed sympathy for the Polish people of Poznan in their courageous fight for bread and independence.

The Senate also approved several Geneva conventions for the more humane treatment of war prisoners, extension of the Trade Agreements Act, and a number of other treaties affecting the American interests abroad. The Congress also authorized American participation in the International Finance Corporation.

Late in the second session, some opposition developed among members of both parties to amounts requested by the President for mutual security. Upon the President's appeal, Republicans and Democrats joined to restore some of the cut in funds.

Notwithstanding the strong bipartisan support given the President, Democratic control of Congress resulted in some failures in legislation. Among these were the President's proposal for an atoms-for-peace ship, a bill introduced by Senate Republicans to require executive agreements to be deposited with Congress within 60 days after ratification, rejection of amendments to the Refugee Relief Act, and failure to act on the President's request for participation in the Organization for Trade Cooperation to administer the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Under Republican leadership the Nation's defense strength is the greatest in our history, short of wartime mobilization.

Peace with honor remains the keystone of our national policy. In case of attack, however, our total land, sea, and air forces could inflict devastation on any aggressor.

Our Armed Forces are prepared to deal with any eventuality in the foreseeable future—with big or little wars and with nuclear or conventional weapons.

Nothing in the proceedings of the 84th Congress disputes this strong posture of American national defense, despite searching investigation and often acrimonious debate.

President Eisenhower's defense proposals to the 84th Congress looked to continued improvement in our combat readiness, without straining the Nation's economy. For defense in the year ending June 30, 1957, the President requested $34.1 billion in new funds. Congress approved a total of $34.6 billion, for the most part following the President's recommendations.

For military construction (housing, missile testing, and other research facilities, airbases, and other defense installations) Congress approved $1.398 billion, compared with $1.148 billion asked by Mr. Eisenhower.

Controversy developed in Congress over two aspects of the defense program: Air Force appropriations and the strength of United States airpower.

Congress cut the President's Air Force Budget for "Maintenance and operation" and "Military personnel," but increased by $100 million funds for "Research and development" and by $800 million funds for "Aircraft and related procurement." This latter increase revolved around demands of some Democrats for more B–52 bombers. The net increase in the Air Force budget was $792.6 million.

Senate Democrats originated and pushed to adoption the Air Force increases, voting down a Republican-sponsored compromise of $500 million, which included $350 million for aircraft procurement. The House, which earlier by voice vote had rejected $1 billion extra for B–52 bombers, agreed to the higher Senate figure after conference.

The $800 million were not earmarked solely for B–52's. Instead, conferees agreed, "the added funds should be utilized to expedite production of heavy bombers, tankers, and other essential Air Force weapons to the optimum limit of existing facilities."

In further explanation, the top House conferee declared the funds were also made available for the intercontinental ballistic missile, for jet tankers, and for fighter planes, although B–52's would have priority.

Secretary of Defense Charles E. Wilson denied he would impound the extra funds. He said he and his military advisers would restudy the whole situation so as to get the most defense for every dollar.

The airpower controversy led to hearings of a five-member Senate subcommittee, which was originally limited to study of the Air Force, but later was extended to guided missiles of all three military services; and still later to the Navy air arm by request of Republican members of the subcommittee.

More than 100 witnesses freely gave their personal views and judgments. Without exception, each military officer, when asked, testified that, as of today, the United States is ahead of Russia in overall airpower.

Reflecting today's revolutionary technological changes, differing views were expressed on how the United States can maintain a strong deterrent position.

Summarizing the situation, Admiral Radford, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Nation's top military adviser, declared:

"It is my professional opinion that the forces which we are maintaining constitute a visible deterrent, are adequate to perform all essential tasks in the initial stages of a shooting war, global or otherwise, and constitute an ample base for a rapid and orderly buildup should such an eventuality become necessary."

Testimony before the Air Force Subcommittee showed that, without adding to our present military equipment, our readiness could be greatly improved if more skilled people were attracted to, and remained in, the military service.

To this end, President Eisenhower submitted career incentive proposals to the 84th Congress. Enacted were the following: Military pay and short-term reenlistment bonus; medical care for servicemen's dependents; increase in number of Regular officers allowed in Army and Air Force; benefits for survivors of servicemen and veterans; incentives for medical and dental officers; and retirement of Army and Air Force officers at temporary higher grades, in line with Navy and Marine Corps officers.

The Congress failed to enact legislation providing for an Assistant Secretary for research and development for the Army, Navy, and Air Force.

NATIONAL ECONOMY

The foundation of today's unprecedented prosperity was laid by the close cooperation between the President and the Republican 83d Congress.

Controls were removed, the whole tax structure overhauled, a $7.4 billion tax cut put through, the budget brought into healthy balance, and a start made at getting the Government out of trade and industrial enterprises competing with private citizens.

The result was to free the economy, open up new areas of opportunity, and encourage the productive energies of all our people. Except for some unemployment trouble in spots and grievous trouble with farm surpluses, this great forward surge of activity has continued with extraordinary vitality down to the present.

The state of the economy as of July 1956 is truly remarkable.

The Nation's gross national income topped $400 billion and the annual rate of personal income reached $317 billion. Prices and the purchasing power of the dollar have been kept stable within a small range of 3½ years. Inflation no longer robs our people of their earnings and savings, and deflation causes us no distress.

In the month of June, 66.5 million persons were at work, an alltime high for employment in the United States. The average hourly wage reached $1.96, and the average weekly pay was $79.40. In no other place on the surface of the globe has the working force of any nation ever received wages on this scale.

Acting upon the President's recommendations, the 84th Congress extended the life of the Defense Production Act until June 30, 1958, and directed Government agencies to promote the dispersal of industry in the interest of national defense. Except for the abortive attempt of some Democrats to pass a $20 individual income tax reduction, the Congress did nothing to disturb the President's view that general tax reductions could not be made while defense costs remained unusually high and Government finances needed to be brought into sound balance with some reduction of the public debt. Following through, the 84th Congress continued corporation and excise taxes at their present levels.

Congress increased the lending authority of the Small Business Administration, providing $150 million for ordinary business loans and $125 million for disaster loans. At the President's urging it enacted a Federal flood insurance program, a pioneering effort to provide financial protection for citizens suffering damages in flood disaster areas. Congress also simplified and improved customs regulations and changed the basis of customs charges on values of imported articles.

Congress also stiffened the administration of antitrust laws and raised the fines for violations of the monopoly laws from $5,000 (unchanged since 1890) to $50,000. It provided for the control and regulation of bank holding companies. The provision of these new laws was supplemented by vigorous prosecution of the antitrust laws by appropriate executive agencies. In 1954, some 35 antitrust cases were brought by the Justice Department; 54 cases in 1955. In the 62 years since the passage of the Sherman Act, 26 contempt proceedings have been brought for violation of existing decrees. Of this number, a third—9 in all—was brought during the last 3½ years. The Federal Trade Commission has been equally active in curbing monopoly. Some 42 antimonopoly complaints were issued during fiscal 1956 compared with 36 complaints in fiscal 1955. This compares with a yearly average of 28 from 1944 to 1953.

The Congress passed many other laws affecting the state of the national economy, notably in agriculture, natural resources and public works, national defense, and in the field of labor relations. This legislation is reported in more detail in those sections of this report.

GOVERNMENT FINANCE AND TAXATION

An administration achievement of which President Eisenhower is particularly proud, and which is a source of satisfaction to his fellow Republicans in Congress, is the balancing of the budget for fiscal year 1956, with a surplus of $1,754,000,000. A balanced budget also is indicated for fiscal year 1957.

Thus an essential element of sound governmental administration—fiscal integrity—has been restored with this fulfillment of an important Republican Party platform pledge. As Secretary of the Treasury George M. Humphrey and Budget Bureau Director Percival F. Brundage stated July 19 this year in announcing this achievement, "With such financial stability and sound fiscal conditions, the American people can go forward with their constructive individual plans looking toward better living and more and better jobs."

Only three times in the whole 20-year period of the previous Democratic administrations was the budget balanced. It was done in fiscal years 1947 and 1948, as a result of appropriation cuts made by the Republican 80th Congress, and in fiscal year 1951. The New York Times commented July 6 this year that the balanced budget of 1951 "was brought about largely by a huge, unexpected and unanticipated rise in revenues of that year, a 'windfall' produced by the Korea boom." The Times added: "What makes the balancing of the budget in 1955–56 a solid achievement is the fact that it has been done the hard way, and the only way that is consonant with wise and courageous fiscal policy."

Budget expenditures for fiscal 1956 were $66.4 billion compared with budget receipts of $68.1 billion. The expenditure total represented a decrease of nearly $8 billion from the amount actually spent by the Federal Government in the last Truman year (1952–53). It was a cut of $11.5 billion from the amount proposed in the budget for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1953, which President Truman submitted to the Congress in January of 1953 before the Republican administration took office. The last year of Truman accounting (1953) showed a deficit of $9.4 billion. In 1956, the Eisenhower administration produced a $1.7 billion surplus.

An outstanding fact of importance is that a balanced budget with money left over to apply on the public debt has been accomplished with lowered tax rates. In 1954, President Eisenhower's second year in office, he and the Republican 83d Congress cooperated to reduce taxes by a total of $7.4 billion, the largest tax reduction dollarwise in the Nation's history.

In the 84th Congress, legislation in the field of finance and taxation has included:

1. A decrease in the temporary legal debt limit for fiscal year 1957 from $281 billion to $278 billion. The permanent limit is $275 billion.

2. Extension for 1 year, until April 1, 1957, of special excise and corporation income taxes.

3. Instead of accepting the President's bond program which would not involve an increase in present taxes, the 84th Congress chose a 16-year tax program, effective July 1 this year, to raise $14.8 billion in additional highway-user taxes to help pay for new and improved highways. Highway users will pay as they ride by increased taxes on gasoline, diesel and special motor fuels, tires and tread rubber, and on the sales of trucks, buses, and truck trailers.

4. A refund to farmers of the Federal excise tax on all gasoline and special fuels used on the farm for farming purposes bought after December 31, 1955.

5. Removal of the excise tax on theater and other admissions which are 90 cents or less.

6. Authorization of United States membership in the International Finance Corporation, to which this Government would subscribe about one-third of the authorized capital of $100 million. Affiliated with the International Bank, the IFC is designed to stimulate private venture capital investment in productive enterprises in member nations.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

Through reorganization of the executive departments and agencies, substantial reduction of Federal personnel, and large-scale paring of appropriations and expenditures, this Republican administration has made the Government more efficient and economical, cut down its size, and checked the New Deal-Fair Deal trend toward an all-powerful central Government. Republican leadership has put an end to corruption, ousted the grafters and crooks, and restored honest government to the people.

During the 84th Congress 12 reorganization measures incorporating recommendations of the second Hoover Commission were approved by the Senate. Six of them became law. They dealt with extension of the Reorganization Act of 1949, the establishment of a 12-member bipartisan Commission on Government Security, the relief of Government officers of financial liability in certain instances, the relief of armed services disbursing officers of accountable liability in certain instances, the authorization for the donation of surplus property for civil defense purposes, and simplification of budgeting, accounting, and appropriations processes. Two others—one extending authority to dispose of surplus property by negotiation to July 31, 1958, and the other to expedite payments of certified claims where appropriations have lapsed—are awaiting the President's signature. The Defense Department reported March 22, 1956, that of the Hoover Commission's 322 recommendations for administrative reforms in that Department, 85 percent have been put into effect.

A much more efficient handling of the Post Office Department was reflected in the fiscal 1955 report of that Department, which showed that the postal deficit has dropped despite heavier mail and the higher wages for postal employees, which the administration recommended and the Congress approved. The greatly needed $430 million a year increase in postal rates failed of enactment.

Through legislation enacted by the 84th Congress, the civil service and other Government employment were improved and strengthened. Legislation was enacted to improve conditions in the Foreign Service so as to make this important branch of the Government more attractive to men and women of exceptional talent and competence. Other steps taken in the personnel field include the extension of group life insurance, unemployment compensation, and other benefits to Federal workers to bring Government working conditions abreast of comparable practices in private industry. Congress passed legislation increasing the salaries of about 600 top-level Federal employees. This bill also authorizes about 150 new technical and scientific jobs at salaries of $15,000 a year.

COMMUNISM

With the advent of a Republican administration, an era of cooperation between the legislative and executive branches was inaugurated in the effort to guard the Government against Communist subversion.

While the executive branch has been pressing action under existing law, congressional committees have been continuing investigations and subversive aliens are being deported. The Justice Department officially declared July 17, 1956, that until there is concrete evidence that the Communist Party leadership in this country has abandoned its criminal purpose of violent overthrow of the Government, the Smith Act and all other legal weapons will be utilized to combat the very real threat that domestic communism still poses to our Nation's national security.

As of July 1, 1956, 145 Communist Party leaders had been indicted on Smith Act charges and 102 convicted in Federal court. Others are awaiting trial. During fiscal year 1956 alone, 11 Communist Party leaders were arrested; the trials of Communist Party leaders charged with violating the Smith Act resulted in 14 verdicts of guilty. On July 24 the President signed into law a Republican-sponsored bill providing for stiffer penalties for persons convicted of seditious conspiracy.

NATURAL RESOURCES AND PUBLIC WORKS

The Eisenhower administration has instituted a new public-works and natural-resource development program of unprecedented scope and unequaled in the expectations for future benefits to the Nation and protection of the public's property.

These programs differ markedly from public-works programs of previous administrations in this respect: In the case of a large majority of projects, the administration has also planned for revenues which will eventually pay the cost instead of increasing public debt. This is responsible Government and financial policy.

The administration set out to develop the Nation's resources under policies of (1) wise conservation, (2) encouragement of local and private organizations capable of building public works and meeting the public's needs without tax money, (3) the recommending of Federal construction of projects restricted to those of such complexity and size that their success could only be achieved by use of public funds, and (4) encouragement of partnership projects in which the participation of private citizens and State and local government was as necessary and as beneficial to the public as Federal participation.

Republican Members of Congress strongly supported legislation based on these sound, feasible policies. The program captured the imagination of Americans from coast to coast, with this result: support for many of the proposals became mandatory regardless of political party.

Two of the foremost Republican recommendations approved by the 84th Congress involved highways and a giant water resource project.

The highway construction and roadbuilding program represents the biggest peacetime public works project of any type in the country's history. It involves the construction or improvement of 440,000 miles of roadways, including a 41,000-mile interstate highway system of 4 to 8 lanes to link every city of 50,000 population or more. The 13-year program will cost $32.9 billion. It was authorized at this concluding session of Congress after being delayed 1 year.

The administration's five-State, multiple-use upper Colorado River water storage project is strictly a Federal program of the type which no privately financed organization could undertake. The legislation will bring benefit to a 110,000 square-mile area through a system eventually designed to have a score of power and storage dams and 35 reclamation projects. The ultimate cost is estimated at $1 billion.

The administration reached another milestone in water pollution control when it submitted, and obtained passage, of legislation permitting a 10-year, $500 million program to aid States and cities to purify streams and other water sources which otherwise might endanger the health of the public.

The administration proceeded with its program of opening the Midwest to direct ocean-going trade and transportation by recommending, and having approved by the 84th Congress, a $110 million program to deepen the Great Lakes channels by the time the Republican-sponsored St. Lawrence Seaway is finished.

During the 84th Congress, the administration reversed the 15-year trend of neglect of our national parks so that today the national park system is larger and more adequately staffed than ever before. The park system obtained congressional approval to operate on a budget that is almost twice the amount available at the beginning of 1953.

More than 400,000 acres of land were added to the system and for the first time in history, the administration submitted to Congress on February 2, 1956, a comprehensive, 10-year $785 million program designed to equip the parks to accommodate 80 million visitors by 1960.

Scores of other programs and projects were submitted to the 84th Congress by the Republican administration. Among those approved were:

Authorization for a survey of the Passamaquoddy Bay power project; expansion of the Federal Aid Airport Act; flood-control bills to aid disaster areas; a minerals purchase act to aid small mining operations; authorization and appropriations for scores of reclamation, irrigation, and public-power projects; authorization and appropriations for navigation, beach erosion, and other river and harbor projects for nearly every State in the Nation; conservation measures for fish, grazing lands, and wildlife refuges, authorizations and appropriations for a vast military public-works program.

However, in certain notable instances the Democrats resisted, and, in fact, either killed, changed in part, or tried to pigeonhole by their majority power in Congress, important legislation in the field of natural resources and public works.

Five administration proposals in the 2d session of the 84th Congress for partnership development of water resources projects never saw the light of day because of Democratic opposition.

Even a proposal of a private-power company to help develop a river's hydroelectric resources without expense to taxpayers met opposition from Democrats. This was Hells Canyon Dam on the Snake River between Oregon and Idaho. The private-power company's application to build the project was unanimously approved by the Federal Power Commission after long hearings. Although proposals for Federal construction had been rejected by congressional committees twice during the Truman administration, Democrats finally succeeded in bringing the issue to the Senate floor for a final vote where they held majority power. The result was a rejection of Federal construction by a rollcall vote of 51 to 41. Smarting over defeat on this issue, Democrats permitted the big Fryingpan-Arkansas reclamation project to die in the closing days of the 84th Congress, although it was strongly endorsed by Republicans and had passed the Senate.

ATOMIC ENERGY

It was under the Republican administration that peacetime development of atomic energy by private and local municipal enterprise was first given its start, ending Government monopoly which limited work to war purposes. The 84th Congress provided joint Government-industry financing of civilian reactors; appropriated funds for continued research into atomic-energy uses; and authorized construction of an atomic-powered merchant ship. Republicans in the 84th Congress fought successfully to resist Democratic proposals which would have put the Federal Government into the business of building atomic reactors.

FARM PROGRAM

The Democratic 84th Congress made the flexible price support farm program, enacted by the Republican 83d Congress, one of its chief targets. The President fought hard to retain this program, eventually employing a veto, before Congress finally enacted this legislation of great importance to our farmers.

From the start of the session in 1955 the Democratic Congress persisted in disregarding the President's urgent plea to maintain the flexible price support embodied in the Agricultural Act of 1954. This first took effect (on a limited scale) with the 1955 harvest, and its value can be measured by the 11 percent rise in farm prices this year.

The House in May 1955, joined by the Senate a year later, enacted a measure to restore rigid 90-percent price supports for basic crops—a discredited program which had piled up nearly $9 billion in price-depressing crop surpluses, harmful to farmers and consumers alike as well as costing $1 million per day for storage.

The President courageously vetoed this bill enacted after much harmful delay and succeeded in getting an acceptable bill containing his soil bank proposal and other delayed features of his nine-point farm program, offered at the start of the second session.

The President's 15-point rural development program suffered even more delay. Offered in April 1955, it aimed at aiding about 1.5 million farm families with cash incomes of less than $1,000 annually whose production is too low to benefit from price supports. This program was all but ignored in the first session.

In his special farm message to the second session, the President repeated his recommendation for the rural development program as part of a nine-point program and requested Congress to enact it. Key legislation was cleared in the session-end jam.

Congressional action on the President's program was spotty. It enacted the soil bank proposal—a two-part program to pay farmers to take land out of production, both to reduce crop surpluses and conserve worn-out land for future needs.

Also cleared at the end of the session was one of the main parts of the President's 9-point program—legislation to implement the Great Plains program by authorizing $150 million for a 10-year cost-sharing plan to combat wind erosion by shifting land uses in 10 States.

Congress also voted increased funds for research, refunds to farmers of Federal taxes on gasoline and fuels used on the farm, and merged production credit corporations and intermediate credit banks as a step toward better coverage of farm credit needs.

Congress enacted only some of the recommendations dealing with commodity programs. It also rejected the President's request for a dollar ceiling on price supports to any one producer and refused to permit the disposal of surpluses on the domestic market at lower prices.

With flexible price supports and the soil bank as a basis, supplemented by the Rural Development and Great Plains programs, the administration provided American agriculture with its first real chance to make the fundamental adjustment needed to solve the farm problem.

LABOR

Of the many proposals for labor legislation initiated or supported by the administration, only one of prime national importance—a minimum wage bill—was passed in this Congress, and in a form differing from the President's recommendations. Except for a few items affecting special groups, the record of the Democratic 84th Congress is pretty barren of legislation responsive to the interests of the working man.

The Eisenhower recommendation for an increase in the legal minimum wage rate from 75 cents to 90 cents per hour was a carefully considered effort to balance higher wages with living costs, without increasing the danger of inflation. Congress, however, passed a bill providing for a $1 minimum.

Legislative proposals not enacted by the Democratic-controlled 84th Congress include: (1) Tart-Hartley Act revisions (even those favored by organized labor); (2) extension of coverage under the minimum wage law; (3) equal pay for equal work, regardless of sex; (4) public disclosure regarding employees' pension, health, and welfare programs; (5) Federal assistance to areas suffering chronic unemployment (area development program); (6) grants to the States for industrial safety programs; (7) revision of labor standards on work contracted or financed by the Federal Government to provide for time and one-half pay for all hours worked in excess of 8 hours a day or in excess of 40 hours a week as the work standard.

Most of these recommendations were originally made in 1955, and renewed by President Eisenhower in 1956, with several new ones.

In addition to the minimum wage, the 84th Congress enacted into law measures which regulated employment of Mexican farm laborers; increased unemployment compensation benefits in the District of Columbia; increased workmen's compensation benefits to longshoremen and harbor workers (as well as District of Columbia employees in private industry); and increased railroad retirement benefits.

VETERANS

Legislation affecting veterans enacted by the 84th Congress included the extension of veterans' education benefits until January 1965; the authorization of loans for farm homes as well as residential housing; the provision of social-security wage credits and lump-sum death benefits for military service before January 1, 1956; an extension for 2 years of the time in which eligible disabled veterans may apply for payment on an automobile; an arrangement whereby—within a time limit—a veteran may be granted an amount of term insurance equal to that which he had in service; a program for on-farm training for Korean veterans; an extension of the Dependents' Assistance Act; extension of World War II veterans' home-loan guaranty program; a provision for educational assistance for the children of certain veterans who died in Korea or World War II; and a revision of the laws providing benefit payments to survivors of servicemen and veterans.

HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE

Among the pressing concerns of the Republican administration, during the 84th Congress, in the fields of health, education, and welfare, were the necessity of strengthening the various agencies of Government which must deal with ever-increasing responsibilities in public health, medical aid, research and hospital construction, and the problem of the nationwide school classroom shortage, becoming more acute because of the accelerated birth rate since World War II.

Much had been accomplished during the preceding 83d Republican Congress. A Cabinet Department of Health, Education, and Welfare had been created. Social-security coverage had been extended to 10 million more persons, an increase which brought the total covered to 9 out of 10 persons gainfully employed. In addition, health programs were expanded all along the line and the plans were made for the White House Conference on Education.

In the 84th Congress some of the President's requests in the health, education, and welfare field were approved; others fell victim to partisan political tactics and were scuttled. Here is the record in brief:

Health: Health measures enacted during the past 2 years include: The Polio Vaccination Assistance Act, making grants to States for administering the Salk vaccine to eligibles without a means test; the Air Pollution Control Act and the Water Pollution Control Act; a bill to establish a hospital for the mentally ill in Alaska; an expanded program for vocational rehabilitation; the Narcotics Control Act; a bill providing for comprehensive research in methods for the treatment and rehabilitation of the mentally ill; and an omnibus health bill which establishes a 3-year program of graduate study for physicians and others in the public-health field; a 3-year program of advanced training for professional nurses; a 5-year training program for practical nurses; authority for the Surgeon General to make grants to improve the operation of State institutions for the mentally ill; and an extension until 1959 of the Hospital Survey and Construction Act. The President's efforts to secure reinsurance of voluntary prepayment health plans, however, did not succeed.

Education: Although Federal aid to schools in areas affected by Federal activities was continued, along with extension of veterans' educational benefits, the Democratic-controlled Congress frustrated all the administration's efforts to provide help for nationwide school construction. The President sought to provide this help on the sound basis of need and with an incentive to the States to augment rather than curtail school construction with some of their own funds. Under Democratic control the Senate committee took no action whatever to pass a school-construction bill.

In the House, Democrats insisted upon population rather than need as a basis and brought in a large Federal subsidy bill carrying out this idea. Moreover, the Powell amendment was offered to the bill. The measure was further complicated by House legislative actions. There was strong Republican support for the Powell amendment. Republicans next made every effort to substitute the President's measure for the Democratic bill. When this failed for lack of Democratic support, Republicans voted to reject the Democratic-sponsored bill which was wholly contrary to the sound principles on which the President's measure was based. The net result was that, although the White House Conference confirmed the urgent need for Federal school aid, the measure was defeated in the House.

Welfare: After the increase in benefits and the great expansion of social security coverage made by the Republican 83d Congress, the administration desired simply to complete coverage as far as possible and, for the present, devote itself to improvement of the operation of the system. The administration's requests were enlarged by the 84th Congress to include payments of OASI benefits to totally disabled workers at age 50 (instead of 65) and lowered the age of eligibility for widows, wives, and working women to draw retirement benefits. The Federal share of public assistance payments was also increased. A further amendment cut off the payment of benefits to anyone convicted of espionage, treason, or subversive activities. The school-milk program was expanded. (One billion half-pints of milk will be distributed in the schools this year.)

Appropriations, during the 2d session of the 84th Congress, touching various phases of health, education, and welfare included more than $180 million for the National Institutes of Health; $100 million to continue the school-lunch program; $39 million for services for crippled children, maternal and child health services, and child welfare activities; money to enable the Children's Bureau to initiate services in the field of juvenile delinquency; $1.1 million for Federal and State study of education beyond high school; and $4 million to continue the work in venereal disease control.

HOUSING

The 84th Congress continued to provide American families with more opportunities than at any time in history to own their own homes. The Congress also continued housing loan programs for farmers and veterans and authorized additional public housing units.

CIVIL RIGHTS—ENDING RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

Following through on the President's 1956 state of the Union message, the administration requested of Congress a 6-point program to broaden and strengthen the present civil rights remedies. The program called for the creation of a bipartisan Commission on Civil Rights to investigate alleged civil rights abuses; appointment of an Assistant Attorney General to head a new Civil Rights Division in the Department of Justice; and broader authority of the Department of Justice to use civil remedies in the enforcement of "right to vote" laws and other civil rights.

In the closing days of the session, the House passed a civil rights bill, but when it came to the Senate the Judiciary Committee buried it.

Although Democratic Party platforms have for years decried the fact that people of the District of Columbia did not have the right to vote, another bill to accomplish this purpose failed in the Democratic 84th Congress. Home rule, which was urged by the President in his State of the Union passed the Senate but no action was taken by the House.

The administration strongly recommended and the Congress passed legislation to forbid eavesdropping by recording and other devices on Federal grand and petit jury deliberations. The move for the bill developed after disclosure that a university research team, under grant from the Ford Foundation, had made tape recordings of actual deliberations in a Federal jury room. The administration considered the legislation necessary to assure the free discussion of jurors, and to preserve the basic elements of trial by jury.

One other administration request in the civil rights field to become law was a measure to protect the right to vote in Federal elections of members of the Armed Forces stationed abroad and certain others serving overseas. The law provides for a simplified, uniform absentee ballot in peacetime as well as during war. Due to Democratic opposition a provision for waiving payment of a poll tax as a condition of voting in Federal elections was stricken.

Statehood for Hawaii was also urged by the President in his message to Congress. However, it, too, was blocked by Democratic action in the House by tying statehood for Hawaii and Alaska together and then recommiting the bill to the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

In the executive branch, a 5-member President's Committee on Government Employment Policy has been created to prevent discrimination in Government jobs. The Committee on Government Contracts, established by the Republican administration in 1953, is surveying employment practices of transportation companies doing business with the Federal Government, with a view to eliminating employment discrimination. Surveys are also to be conducted in the general field of Government contracts by the CGC and the contracting Government agencies to ascertain whether such contracts are providing expanded employment opportunities for all individuals.

REPUBLICAN ACHIEVEMENTS, JANUARY 1953 TO JULY 1956

FOREIGN AFFAIRS: THE CONFERENCE TABLE REPLACED THE BATTLEFIELD

Ended the stalemated war in Korea and reversed the previous foreign policy that had contributed to the loss of 600 million people behind the Communist Iron Curtain in the decade 1943 to 1953.

Avoided involvement in the hot war in Indochina; took steps to aid Vietnam and build up its army.

Held meeting at Geneva, Switzerland with the heads of Russia, Britain, and France at Geneva to pave the way for concrete actions to relieve world tension. President Eisenhower took the initiative by his impressive offer to exchange full armament information under adequate safeguards. Although Geneva fell short of specific agreements, it served definitely to relax world tension and contributed to the shift in Russian policy.

Ratified mutual defense treaties with the Republic of China (Formosa) the Republic of Korea (South Korea), and the Southeast Asia Collective Defense Treaty (SEATO), grouping together Australia, New Zealand, Pakistan, the Philippines, Thailand, Great Britain, France, and the United States.

Ended the military occupation of Western Germany and provided for the accession of the Federal Republic of Germany to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Negotiated the Austrian State Treaty (signed by Austria, France, the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom, and the United States) by which Austria was reestablished as an independent state and the military forces of the allied powers and the Soviet Union were withdrawn.

Endorsed the President's authority to use the Nation's Armed Forces for the protection of Formosa and the Pescadores Islands, as a move to preserve peace in the Far East.

Continued economic and military aid to the nations of the free world, with increasing attention to Asia.

Extended the foreign trade agreements program, permitting tariff reductions under regulations designed to protect American jobs and business. Also, provided for American participation in the international Finance Corporation designed to help nations to develop their resources.

Assisted the new free government of Guatemala which removed the Communist regime.

Took the initiative against communism in all parts of the world.

Reaffirmed official policy against Red China's admission to the United Nations.

Supported a United Germany (resolution of 83d Cong.).

Condemned Soviet mistreatment of minorities and callous disregard of human rights (resolution of 83d Cong.).

Moved for adoption by Western Hemisphere nations of the Caracas resolution declaring communism a threat to freedom and pledging full consultation in the event of aggression.

Negotiated arms pacts to strengthen Central American countries against Communist subversion.

Acted to oust Americans in the United Nations who have served the Communist cause.

Brought about a settlement of the oil controversy in Iran, preventing the threatened Communist subversion of that country.

Proposed an international pool of atomic energy resources for peaceful uses. Without waiting for its formal organization, the United States signed atoms-for-peace agreements with over 25 nations under which the United States furnishes enriched uranium for civilian uses. Further, the United States offered to furnish research reactors and to make available power reactors.

Passed the Refugee Relief Act to admit, over a 3-year period, up to 214,000 persons to the United States in excess of the quota limit.

Settled by negotiation the Italian-Yugoslav quarrel over Trieste which for years had threatened to cause war between the two countries.

Reiterated the traditional position of the Senate in favor of self-government and self-determination for all peoples in a move designed to give hope to the enslaved peoples of the satellite countries.

NATIONAL DEFENSE: INSTANT READINESS REPLACED UNPREPAREDNESS

Developed the greatest military strength the Nation has ever had, short of wartime, with emphasis on continuous combat readiness for any contingency.

Applied almost two-thirds of the national budget to national security (military defense, atomic-energy development, stockpiling of strategic materials, military aid abroad), compared with only 32 percent in 1950 and two-thirds in the peak years of the Korean war; and by building up military muscle and cutting out waste fat, saved billions in defense spending.

Put atomic and other new weapons into the Regular military arsenal for strategic and tactical use.

Built to a 131-wing Air Force as of June 30, 1956; continued buildup to 137-wing goal by a year later.

Announced plans to add 50 percent to long-range heavy-bomber striking power by increasing number of planes in heavy-bomber wings to 45 each (formerly 30).

Equipped all Air Force fighter wings with jet aircraft; all medium-bomber wings with B–47's, which have intercontinental capabilities; heavy-bomber wings (B–36's) are being replaced by eight-engine, all-jet B–52's.

Began building toward a completely supersonic fighter inventory in the Air Force; awarded the initial contract for production of the first Air Force supersonic bomber.

Conducted research toward nuclear-powered aircraft.

Air Force missiles include GAR–1 Falcon, an air-to-air guided air defense rocket, in production; the TM–61 Matador, a tactical surface-to-surface missile with nuclear capabilities, in operation; the IM–99 Bomarc, a long-range surface-to-air pilotless interceptor, under development for air defense; and long-range missiles Snark and Navaho, under development.

Gave top priority to ballistic-missiles research. The Air Force is pursuing two approaches to the intercontinental ballistic missile (ICBM) in the Atlas and Titan. The 1,500-mile intermediate-range ballistic missile (IRBM), Jupiter, is a joint project of the Army (for ground launching) and the Navy (for surface ship or submarine use). The Air Force also has an IRBM project, Thor.

Gave high priorities to other missile research.

Obtained consent of Great Britain to extend the missile-firing range from Florida out over British possessions for 5,000 miles into the South Atlantic.

Built a powerful Navy, which consists of 2,753 ships, of which 1,000 are in active duty. These latter include 15 attack carriers, 15 cruisers, 250 destroyers, and 110 submarines. Ships in reserve include 58 cruisers, 109 destroyers, and 89 submarines. The Navy has some 16,000 planes, of which over 10,000 are in active service. Many of these are bombers which can carry high-yield nuclear and thermo-nuclear payloads.

Added two modern aircraft carriers, Forrestal and Saratoga, to the fleet; three are under construction; one is in the 1957 program; and more mobile air bases of this type are planned.

Launched the first nuclear-powered submarine, Nautilus, which is already in operation with the fleet and has steamed more than 40,000 miles, almost 24,000 of this submerged, without refueling. Launched a second such submarine, Seawolf, in July 1955; six more are in process; and six more were included in the fiscal year 1957 shipbuilding program.

Converted a cruiser, Boston, into the world's first guided missile ship; a second, Canberra, has just been launched; six surface ships in the 1956 program are guided missile ships and all cruisers and destroyers in the 1957 will be guided missile craft. The 1957 shipbuilding program includes a nuclear-powered guided missile cruiser, the first surface ship in the world to be nuclear-powered. Also includes funds for long-lead procurement of a nuclear reactor for a carrier.

Produced test models of the Seamaster, a water-borne, jet aircraft in the 600-mile-per-hour range, which can carry megaton weapons.

Began phasing into the Navy new high-skill, high-performance aircraft, including a supersonic fighter, F8U, and attack planes such as the A3D and A4D. The A3D has unrefueled combat radius of 1,500 statute miles—that is, 1,500 miles out and 1,500 miles back.

Developed missiles for shipboard use: surface-to-air Terrier, air-to-air Sparrow, and surface-to-surface Regulus I. The Regulus I can deliver an atomic warhead at transonic speeds over a 500-mile range and can be launched from submarines, surface vessels, and shore bases. An improved version is under way.

Put Talos, a surface-to-air missile, in production for test firing; the missile is designed for launching from ship or shore.

Brought the Marine Corps, consisting of three divisions and three air wings, to a high level of combat readiness; increased number of combat planes on hand and added to Marine firepower with atomic weapons.

Added the 280 milimeter atomic cannon to Army weapons inventory and supplied it to Army units in Europe.

Added Corporal surface-to-surface guided missile battalions and Honest John rocket batteries to Army combat strength; deployed some to Europe. Both missiles have atomic capabilities.

Installed Nike missile batteries for defense of key American cities; developed the missile master, the country's first electronic system specifically for controlling and coordinating Nike batteries.

Reorganized two Army divisions following maneuvers which tested organizational and tactical problems of atomic warfare; study is continuing to devise the most effective modern Army.

Built up the level of readiness of Reserve forces, aided by the Reserve Forces Act of 1955. By June 30, 1957, Reserve components are expected to have about 1.1 million men in drill-pay status—better organized, trained, and equipped than ever before.

Greatly strengthened our continental defenses: coordinated Army, Navy, and air units under Air Force control in the Continental Air Defense Command and improved fighter-interceptor forces and antiaircraft weapons; Air National Guard units aid active Air Force in standing 24-hour alert throughout continental United States.

Rushed construction on the distant early warning (DEW) line and on a radar screen in the Arctic; extended warning system to include Alaska; extended such protection along Atlantic and Pacific approaches by constructing Texas Towers (manmade radar islands on the edge of the Atlantic Continental Shelf) and by Air Force and Navy airborne patrols.

Announced streamlining of the Nation's worldwide military command structure, effective July 1, 1957.

Continued military aid to our allies to help equip and train the equivalent of about 200 divisions, 551 combat ships, 250 air squadrons, and supporting units.

Maintained a strong and expanding peacetime industrial structure, readily convertible to tasks of defense and war.

Acquired new airbases in Spain, the Netherlands, and elsewhere.

Tightened the security-risk program; acted to deny commissions to doctors and dentists who turn out to be security risks.

Made changes to improve the morale of service personnel, including a pay raise, medical care for servicemen's dependents, short-term reenlistment bonus, and liberalized benefits for survivors of servicemen and veterans.

GOVERNMENT FINANCE: BALANCED BUDGET REPLACED DEFICITS

Stimulated record-breaking national prosperity; maintained the value of the dollar; clamped the lid on inflation; counteracted recession.

Kept Republican Party pledge to balance the budget; ended fiscal year 1956 with a surplus of $1 billion, 754 million out of which a substantial payment can be made to reduce the public debt.

Reduced Government spending each year well below the $74.3 billion spent in fiscal 1953, Truman's last budget year; wound up fiscal 1956 with a spending total of $66.4 billion, almost $8 billion under Truman's fiscal 1953 total, and $11.5 billion under Truman's proposed fiscal 1954 budget which he submitted to Congress before leaving office in January 1953.

Extended the maturity of the Federal debt; moved more of the debt away from banks, where it can contribute to inflation, and into the hands of long-term investors.

Tied in debt management actions with Federal Reserve System moves to keep the supply of money and credit in line with the needs of the country.

New records set in Savings Bond sales, reflecting public's confidence in country's economic future and in Government's fiscal policies.

TAXATION: TAX CUTS REPLACED CRUSHING TAXES

Gave the American people a whopping $7.4 billion in tax cuts in 1954—the first tax cuts since the Republican 80th Congress in 1948—including:

Three-billion-dollar cut in individual income taxes (an average of 10 percent).

One-billion-dollar cut in excise taxes on household appliances, cosmetics, and other items of everyday use.

Two-billion-dollar cut by abolishing the excess-profits tax which was restricting the expansion of businesses and jobs.

One - billion - four-hundred-million-dollar cut by liberalized deductions and fairer tax treatment of millions of persons and thousands of businesses under the 1954 tax code.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION: CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENTAL REPLACED DICTATORIAL ACTION

Replaced extremist New Deal-Fair Deal administration which tried to draft striking workers into the Army and seized private property illegally.

Checked the 20-year trend toward centralization of power in Washington.

Sold to private enterprise 25 federally owned synthetic rubber plants and the Inland Waterways Corporation; and disposed of many business-type commercial enterprises conducted by the Defense Department and civilian agencies in competition with private enterprise. This returned property to local and State tax rolls.

Approved and put into effect 12 reorganization plans to improve the operations and efficiency of Government departments and agencies, and to lower the cost of Government.

Established the Hoover Commission to study Government functions and operations.

Established the Commission on Intergovernmental Relations to study Federal-State-local functions and fiscal resources and recommended proper allocation thereof.

All Government departments and agencies cooperated with these Commissions and wherever possible without legislation adopted many of their recommendations to improve the executive branch. Where legislation was required, Republican Members of Congress sponsored appropriate measures.

Substantially reduced the number of Government employees and removed security risks from Federal employment.

Brought about a budget surplus for the first time since 1951.

Reduced the deficit of the Post Office Department.

Brought about long-needed improvements and pay raises in civil service and various other Government agencies.

PARTNERSHIP POLICY IN RESOURCE DEVELOPMENT REPLACED PATERNALISM

Authorized the $300 million joint United States-Canadian St. Lawrence Seaway project to open the Great Lakes and the Midwest to oceangoing freight and passenger traffic. United States share of cost to be $105 million, financed by toll bonds.

Authorized a comprehensive $110 million program for deepening and improving the connecting channels between the Great Lakes in order to accommodate the oceangoing ships which will travel through the St. Lawrence Seaway.

Approved construction of the St. Lawrence River power project by the State of New York and the Province of Ontario, expected to generate the second largest amount of power of any similar project in the country.

Approved a 13-year, $32.9 billion highway construction and improvement program involving 440,000 miles of United States highways and roads, including a 41,000-mile interstate system of 4 to 8 lanes to connect every city of 50,000 population or more. Rural roads, park roads, and forest roads also to be improved and constructed. Total program is largest public-works project ever authorized in United States history.

Increased Federal emergency relief highway funds to help States in which roads and bridges have been damaged or washed out by hurricanes and floods.

Authorized a 10-year, $500 million water pollution control program providing grants-in-aid to States and municipalities to construct plants to purify polluted streams and other water sources. The program is the biggest of its kind in history and gives direct aid to cities and towns for the first time.

Authorized a nationwide lease-purchase program to build new post offices, customhouses, and other similar-type Federal buildings in every State.

Authorized Federal construction of the upper Colorado River water storage project covering 110,000 square miles in a 5-State area for eventual building of a score of multiple-purpose dams and some 35 reclamation projects. The project is the second largest of its type ever authorized.

Authorized what may be the third largest public power dam in the Nation—Priest Rapids Dam on the Columbia River; authorized hundreds of navigation, flood-control, beach-erosion, and other river and harbor projects of varying sizes throughout the Nation.

Authorized a $90 million Mississippi-gulf-sea-level canal.

Approved survey to determine whether hydroelectric power can be economically developed from the tides at Passamaquoddy Bay, Maine.

Authorized military public-works program of between $1 billion and $2 billion in each session of the 83d and 84th Congresses and approved appropriations for construction of numerous Army, Navy, Marine, and Air Force facilities.

Authorized the Secretary of Army to allocate money for construction of small flood-control projects.

Approved flood and hurricane disaster measures designed to help house the homeless and to reestablish communications and transportation facilities.

Authorized scores of new reclamation, irrigation, and power projects; appropriations made for new starts and continuance of operations for others.

Ended antagonism to local and private power development; permitted the Federal Power Commission to license local public-utility districts and private power companies to pay for and construct their own power projects with the results of many offers to build power projects without Federal funds.

Rejected, by majority vote of the Senate, an attempt to prevent a private utility from constructing Hells Canyon Dam on the Snake River as approved by the Federal Power Commission.

Extended the Water Facilities Act from 17 States to all 48 States in a move to conserve the Nation's water and soil resources.

Provided for upstream watershed protection and flood prevention under local control—reversing a 20-year trend toward Federal decisions on need for, and location of, such projects.

Permitted Federal loans to local irrigation districts for construction, on Federal reclamation projects, of water-distribution systems to be locally owned and operated.

Permitted—for the first time—multiple mineral development of the same tracts of public lands to encourage domestic sources of vital materials.

Extended a minerals purchase program to include incentives for small mine operations.

Inaugurated long-range programs for mining and metallurgical research; intensified study of radioactive metals; continued synthetic-fuels research; gave Federal Government more authority on surface resources in the granting of mining deeds.

Passed measures for additional conservation and propagation of fish and for the protection of grazing lands and wildlife refuges.

Approved extension of Federal Aid Airport Act to authorize a 4-year, $252 million program for annual matching funds to provide adequate and safe airports.

Approved conservation programs of many types, including improvement of western grazing lands through reseeding programs, water-spreading systems, and encouragement of soil- and moisture-conservation practices by range users.

Returned to the States their rights to submerged lands and resources off their coasts out to their historical boundaries—an area comprising about one-tenth of the area of the Continental Shelf and about 17 percent of the mineral resources.

Kept for the Federal Government submerged lands and resources beyond State boundaries—an area comprising about nine-tenths of the area of the Continental Shelf and about 83 percent of the mineral resources. Private industry already has signed leases nearing the half-billion-dollar mark; in all, an estimated $6 billion to $8 billion is expected for the United States Treasury from leases in these areas.

AGRICULTURE—ELIMINATING WAR DISLOCATIONS AND BUILDING PEACETIME PROSPERITY

The Republican administration, having inherited a rapidly deteriorating agricultural economy from the previous administration, has made solid progress in returning to farmers their share of the general prosperity, as follows:

Halted the decline in farmers' buying power which had fallen 19 points in the last 23 months of the Truman administration, but only 12 points in the 42 months of the Eisenhower administration, and is currently on the rise—up 6 points in the last 6 months.

Enacted a long-range farm program in 1954 to provide an effective floor under farm prices while reducing accumulation of price-depressing surpluses. Program provided flexible price supports effective with the 1955 harvests and farm prices rose on the average of 11 percent from December 1955 to June 1956.

Enacted a soil bank designed to reduce surpluses and increase the fertility of soil to meet future needs. The $1.2 billion program will pay farmers to take surplus crops out of production and plant grass cover and trees on marginal land. The latter is regarded as one of the greatest conservation and reforestation measures of our times.

Started a rural development program to provide better opportunities for the 1.5 million farm families with cash incomes under $1,000 annually. The full program was delayed by failure of the 1st session of the 84th Congress to act on legislation and the failure of the 2d session to pass the legislation until the final few days.

Developed a Great Plains program to provide a stable, profitable agriculture for the farm families in these 10 States. Passage of legislation providing the means for the Government to help farmers combat wind erosion in this area was delayed until the final days of the session.

Included farmers in the 1954 tax reduction through special provisions affecting farm operations. Gave farmers a refund on Federal tax on fuels used on the farm.

Extended social-security benefits to more than 5 million self-employed farm operators and farm workers.

Provided larger loan authorizations for rural electrification loans and for rural telephone loans. Reduced backlog of REA loan applications to $89.7 million, lowest level since World War II, and made loans of $189.8 million for rural electrification and $81 million for rural telephones in fiscal 1956—the highest level for any year since the program began. Modified the State allotment formula for REA funds to provide funds where they were most needed.

Returned the Farm Credit Administration to the control of farmers and merged production credit corporations with Federal intermediate credit banks, making easier credit available to all farmers.

Farm lands and buildings increased in market value by nearly $4 billion in the past year.

Farm markets abroad expanded for the third consecutive year for an increase of 20 percent in 3 years. Domestic markets increased, too, both in terms of quantity and quality of farm products demanded.

Whole agricultural industries improved. For example, dairy farming, in the doldrums when Democrats left office, is enjoying increased consumption, decreased surpluses, and improved prices. Government holdings of surplus butter were eliminated at one point during this year. Prices of hogs and beef cattle have improved substantially this year. Livestock and dairying account for about one-half of farmers' total cash receipts.

Worked vigorously with industry to market beef, dairy products, vegetables, pork, and other plentiful foods. In the past 3 years, the American people have been eating more per person than ever before. Instituted and carried out a vast beef and pork purchase program to help stop decline in prices.

Raised flexible price supports for the 1956 crops of wheat, corn, rice, peanuts, and dairy products to increase income for farmers who might otherwise have suffered from the Democratic delay in enacting the soil bank in time to take full effect this year.

Extended school milk program to nonprofit institutions which care for children and included Hawaii in the program. School lunch programs have been expanded to serve 11 million children.

Worked vigorously to eliminate burdensome surpluses of farm commodities resulting from rigid price support system put into effect by Democrats. Disposed of more than $5.5 billion worth of farm surpluses at home and abroad in the past 3 years through barter arrangements, sales for foreign currencies, expansion of the school lunch program, and distribution to the needy.

Enacted the Agricultural Trade Development and Assistance Act in 1954 under which nearly $3 billion in surplus commodities have been bartered abroad for strategic materials or sold for foreign currencies.

Increased to $3 billion the ceiling on funds authorized to finance the sale of surplus goods for foreign currencies.

Extended the Sugar Act through 1960 and increased the sales quotas of domestic beet and cane producers.

Accomplished the biggest expansion of grain storage facilities in history from 750 million bushels in 1952 to nearly 2 billion bushels capacity in 1956.

Enacted legislation permitting the Agriculture Department for the first time to work in partnership with small local watershed groups, with initiative and leadership remaining with the local organization.

Moved swiftly to give aid to farmers hit by floods, drought, and other disasters.

Enacted a Federal flood-insurance program.

Reorganized the Agriculture Department to effect better supervision, coordination, and review of farm problems. Placed all foreign agriculture attaches under the Agriculture Department which helped strengthen efforts to expand foreign markets.

Expanded research activities to develop new crops, new uses for crops, new markets, and reduced production costs. Increased appropriations for research nearly $27 million in 3 years and achieved another 25 percent increase for 1957 to a total of $103 million.

Extended and expanded the brucellosis-control program.

Raised the borrowing authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation to $14.5 billion to further the price-support programs and to finance the Soil Bank Act.

LABOR: FAIRNESS REPLACED MISGUIDED FAVORITISM

Brought to the Nation's workers the highest standard of living in history.

An all-time record of 66½ million Americans have jobs.

Wages climbed to new highs.

Workers had a net gain because, while wages rose, the cost of living remained stable, within a remarkably small range.

Gave tax cuts which were the equivalent to a wage increase for every taxpayer; workers now keep more of what they earn.

Promoted harmonious labor-management relations, resulting in less time and wages lost on account of strikes; since Republicans took office there has been greater worker-industry peace than in any comparable post-World War II period.

Extended unemployment compensation insurance coverage to 4 million more people—the first major extension since the program began.

Urged and assisted State and local action on the growing migratory labor problem and developed draft legislation to regulate its interstate transportation.

Established a program of unemployment compensation for approximately 2½ million Federal workers.

Urged States to modernize their unemployment compensation; 23 States increased jobless pay benefits and 7 lengthened the payment period.

Recommended and supported legislation raising the minimum wage.

Blacklisted minimum wage violators and recovered bak wages for underpaid employees—in the most vigorous enforcement program since passage of the Davis-Bacon Act of 1935.

Recovered for workers in 1955 alone, more than $6 million due them from employers who violated either the Fair Labor Standards Act or the Walsh-Healey Act.

Extended railroad retirement benefits for 1½ million workers.

Speeded procedures of National Labor Relations Board for handling elections, settling disputes, and disposing of unfair labor practice cases.

Provided more effective attention to problems of women workers through newly created post of an Assistant to the Secretary for Women's Affairs.

Expanded vocational rehabilitation program; strongly enforced child-labor laws and health and safety standards; pushed apprentice-training and on-the-job training programs; helped veterans return to preservice employment.

Expanded its occupational safety training program and assisted the States in promoting programs to provide safe working conditions.

HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE

Established Health, Education, and Welfare Department.

Sponsored successful White House Conference on Education.

Authorized $1,100,000 for Federal and State study of education beyond high school.

Voted funds for school construction and operation to full extent allowed by law where schools are crowded because of Federal activities.

Voted full amounts authorized for school lunch program.

Authorized Federal Office of Education to contract with universities, colleges, and other educational agencies for research, surveys, and demonstrations on educational problems.

Approved—for the first time—payment of Federal funds to States for diagnostic or treatment centers, hospitals for the chronically ill, rehabilitation facilities, and nonprofit nursing homes.

Increased grants for research on cancer, heart, mental health, and arthritis.

Broadened vocational rehabilitation program to include training of doctors, physical therapists, occupational therapists, and other specialists.

Extended social security coverage to 10 million more people in the first major increase since 1935. For the first time, 9 out of 10 gainfully employed workers are covered.

Extended Hospital and Medical Facilities Construction Act to 1959.

Increased social security benefits to those already on social security rolls, with proportionate increases for dependents and survivors. Liberalized many other social security features.

Authorized a broad, nationwide, 10-year, $500 million water pollution control plan.

Increased authorization for construction of new buildings and facilities for National Institute of Dental Research.

Extended school-milk program to summer camps and similar nonprofit institutions devoted to care and training of children.

Approved new narcotics-control law providing death penalty for adults in the sale of heroin to juveniles, and giving broad new powers to Federal agents in the general narcotic field.

Authorized funds to develop library services to rural areas.

Authorized establishment of an educational assistance program for orphans of World War I, World War II, or the Korean conflict.

Extended Poliomyelitis Vaccination Act to June 30, 1957.

Authorized funds for Alaska mental-health program.

Set up a National Library of Medicine.

Approved a continuing survey and special studies of sickness and disability in the United States.

VETERANS

Gave 5-percent increase in pensions and pay for veterans of all wars and their widows and dependents.

Gave Korean veterans the same benefits and preferences as World War II veterans in war housing, civil service appointments, and GI training; extended period for initiating training under the GI bill.

Raised funds for building veterans' hospitals to record amount; speeded construction.

Continued direct home and farmhouse loan programs for veterans; supported legislation liberalizing direct farmhouse loans and permitting Government-guaranteed loans to veterans for farmhouse purchase, construction, and repair; increased revolving funds so more direct loans could be made.

Continued Federal contributions to dependency allotments for more than 1 million enlisted personnel.

Continued paychecks and family allotments under the Missing Persons Act for Korean war prisoners and soldiers missing in action.

Provided automatic renewal of term insurance policies and simplified handling of veterans' life insurance policies.

Increased Federal payments for veterans cared for in State soldiers' homes.

Extended period during which veterans suffering loss of one or more limbs or permanent impairment of vision may apply for $1,600 payment on an automobile.

Increased benefits to survivors of servicement and veterans, and placed military personnel under the social-security system on a permanent basis.

Equalized pay received by reservists with that of members of the National Guard undergoing similar training.

Extended until July 25, 1958, the World War II veterans' home loan guaranty program.

AMERICAN FAMILIES PROVIDED MORE OPPORTUNITIES FOR OWNING HOMES

Under 4 years of the Republican administration private housing construction boomed, providing employment for an estimated five million persons and adding to the national prosperity and contentment of the American people. Fifty-five percent of the 47 million American families now own their own homes.

Home ownership was brought within the reach of additional thousands of families by enactment of Republican-sponsored guaranteed home mortgage programs providing lower down payments, lower monthly payments, longer repayment periods, and increased mortgage limits.

Laws were tightened to prevent windfall profiteering and to protect homeowners from abuses under home-repair and improvement programs; vigorous prosecution stopped windfall profits and recovered millions of dollars.

Direct home and farmhouse loan programs were continued and improved, and laws were enacted to carry out the administration's proposals for FHA insurance of private construction of rental housing at AEC sites and permanent military installations.

Thousands of additional federally aided public-housing units also were authorized.

ATOMIC DEVELOPMENT: SHARING REPLACED MONOPOLY

Inaugurated peacetime development of atomic energy by private enterprise, ending Federal monopoly which limited work to war purposes.

Revised the Atomic Energy Act to permit (1) sale for public use of electricity developed by AEC—the first such power was delivered in July 1955; (2) joint Government-industry financing of civilian power reactors—the country's first nuclear powerplant is now under construction and other projects are either in the first stages of construction or are being considered; and (3) privately financed nuclear powerplants—several utility groups have already applied for licenses to built atomic plants without Government funds.

Continued spending for nuclear research on general reactors and civilian power reactors.

Launched the Atoms-for-Peace program to demonstrate America's sincere desire to harness nuclear energy to benefit—not destroy—mankind.

Authorized construction and appropriated funds for an atomic-powered merchant ship.

CIVIL RIGHTS—ENDING RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

Ended all segregation in the Armed Forces, veterans' hospitals, schools on military posts, and Government contracts.

Ended segregation in restaurants, theaters, hotels, schools, and places of amusement in the Nation's Capital.

Ended segregation in employment contracts to which District of Columbia is a party.

Prohibition by Interstate Commerce Commission of discrimination in interstate bus and train transportation.

Protection of jury-trial procedures by prohibiting recordings in Federal grand and petit jury deliberations.

Establishment of a President's Committee on Government Employment Policy to assure nondiscrimination in Federal jobs.

Establishment of a Committee on Government Contracts (headed by Vice President NIXON) to prevent discrimination in Government contract jobs; with the result that for the first time white-collar jobs are available to Negroes in public utilities, the chemical and aircraft industry, and the Federal Reserve System.

Proposal by President that Congress create bipartisan Commission to broaden and strengthen present civil-rights remedies and investigate alleged violations of civil-rights laws.

Announcement by Housing Administrator of refusal of Federal aid to cities defaulting in obligations to minority citizens.

For the first time in history, appointment of a Negro as Under Secretary of Labor; also more appointments of Negroes in policy-making governmental positions than in any other administration.

COMMUNISM IN UNITED STATES COMBATED

Inaugurated an era of cooperation between Congress and the Executive in combating domestic communism.

Enacted long-needed Communist-control laws which (1) outlaw the Communist Party; (2) grant immunity to witnesses before congressional committees; (3) impose heavier penalties for concealing persons from arrest; (4) impose heavier penalties on bail jumpers; (5) deny a Government pension to any Federal employee convicted of a felony; (6) revoke the citizenship of persons convicted under the Smith Act of advocating overthrow of the Government by force or violence; (7) make peacetime spying a capital offense; and (8) require registration of all printing presses owned or used by Communists.

Set up Internal Security Division in the Justice Department to give exclusive attention to vigorous prosecution of antisubversive laws.

Obtained convictions of over 70 persons under the Smith Act.

Ordered Communist Party to register under the Internal Security Act.

Deported more subversive aliens in 3½ years than during entire 20 years of Democratic control.

Weeded out security risks from Federal jobs.

Vigorously pushed congressional investigation of of various Communist activities.

Reaffirmed determination to pursue congressional probes by joining Democrats in January 1955 in passing Senate Resolution 18 which declared committees should vigorously investigate the Communist international conspiracy.

Revoked loyalty order of Truman; revised and improved security system in Government. The entire problem is being surveyed by a new bipartisan commission which is to make recommendations for improvements.

DIGEST OF PUBLIC LAWS OF GENERAL INTEREST (S. DOC. NO. 154)

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed separately as a Senate document, after Congress adjourns, a digest of public laws of general interest.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ROLLCALL VOTES IN THE SENATE IN THE 84TH CONGRESS

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, after the adjournment of Congress, an analysis which I am having prepared of yea and nay votes in the Senate in the 84th Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, does the material which the Senator from California seeks to include contain anything with respect to the accomplishments of the Democratic Party? [Laughter.]

Mr. KNOWLAND. I assume the Senator from Texas will have an equal right to place his own digest in the RECORD.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bartlett, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 203) fixing the date of meeting of the 85th Congress.

ADDITIONAL MATTERS ORDERED PRINTED IN THE RECORD

By Mr. KERR:

Article entitled "This Is The Real America," written by Senator HUMPHREY and published in the Family Weekly magazine for July 1, 1956, dealing with the factors which make America strong.

By Mr. GORE:

Public statements and communications of the President of the United States with reference to the Dixon-Yates contract, as reported by the press.

Correspondence and statement concerning the TVA power system.

PROPOSED POTOMAC RIVER BRIDGE

Mr. BEALL. Mr. President, first, I wish to ask the majority leader why he has not called up the conference report on S. 2568. Second, I wish to ask the Senator from Nevada why he has not called it up.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I think I can answer the Senator publicly, as I have answered him several times privately. The conference report is quite controversial. The junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] has said he did not propose to have the conference report adopted, if he could prevent it.

If the conference report in question had been called up tonight, I was fearful that we might be here all night. I did not think Senators would want to spend all night debating the proposed bridge.

I am well aware of the diligent efforts of the Senator from Maryland to have consideration of the bill. I should like to be in a position to request the consideration of every bill every Senator wanted to have brought up, but it happens that we must cut off somewhere.

The majority leader assumes the responsibility of saying to the Senator from Nevada that he did not think this was a propitious time to consider the bill.

Mr. BEALL. I have never worked under a more efficient majority leader than the Senator from Texas. I appreciate what he is thinking about.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I thank my friend. That statement is worth my yielding to him.

Mr. BEALL. At this time, when we are thinking about the necessity of building a bridge over the Potomac River, whatever the merits of it may be, and we do not consider the conference report, and we adjourn without agreeing to the conference report, we have something to explain to the people of the District of Columbia and Virginia. The bridge would not extend into Maryland.

This is something all of us should think about.

CIVIL RIGHTS

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. President, I yield to my friend from Ohio, because it is almost the hour of adjournment.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. President, are we limited in any way?

The VICE PRESIDENT. To 1 minute.

Mr. BENDER. That is not enough. [Laughter.]

I have much to say about some of the political uproar on civil rights. The responsibility with respect to civil rights is on the majority side. We on this side of the aisle had nothing to do with it. We do not control the committees. If civil rights legislation has gone by the board——

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the Senator from Ohio tell me what he did about it when his party had control of the committees?

Mr. BENDER. I did everything I could. I have been in Congress since 1939. I have done everything I could. But I do not control the committee of which I am a member, and I do not like this demagogery [laughter] at the last minute on the part of the majority membership, trying to create the impression that somehow or other the Republican side is responsible for the civil rights program not becoming effective——

ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HOLLAND. The hour of adjournment sine die has arrived.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

The hour of 12 o'clock midnight having arrived, the Senate, in accordance with the terms of House Concurrent Resolution 276, stands adjourned sine die.

Thereupon, at 12 o'clock midnight, Friday, July 27, 1956, the Senate adjourned sine die.

An act to supplement the antitrust laws of the United States, in order to balance the power now heavily weighted in favor of automobile manufacturers, by enabling franchise automobile dealers to bring suit in the district courts of the United States to recover damages sustained by reason of the failure of automobile manufacturers to act in good faith in compiying with the terms of franchise or in terminating or not renewing franchises with their dealers; and

S. 3956. An act to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION DISAPPROVED AFTER SINE DIE ADJOURNMENT

The President of the United States, subsequent to the sine die adjournment of the Senate, notified the Secretary of the Senate that, on the following dates, he had disapproved bills of the Senate of the following titles, together with his reasons for such actions:

RECONVEYANCE OF MINERAL INTERESTS IN CERTAIN LANDS TO THE FORMER OWNERS THEREOF

S. 1384. I am withholding my approval of S. 1384, a bill to provide for the reconveyance of all mineral interests in lands acquired by the United States for certain reservoir projects to former owners thereof, and for other purposes.

The purpose of this measure is to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Army, when he determines that the exploration for or exploitation of mineral interests underlying lands within the Arkabutla, Sardis, Enid, and Grenada Reservoir projects in Mississippi will not be incompatible with the development, maintenance, and operation of these projects, and that the reconveyance of such mineral interests to former owners thereof will be in the public interest, to convey such interests to the former owners thereof or to their legal heirs upon application made within 3 years and upon payment to the United States of an amount equal to but not in excess of the purchase price for which said interests were acquired by the United States.

The Department of the Army is nearing the completion of the acquisition of approximately 283,000 acres of land for these 4 reservoir projects in northwestern Mississippi which are an integral part of the Yazoo River Basin headwater project authorized by the Flood Control Act of June 15, 1936. Approximately 62,000 acres have been acquired subject to retention of oil and gas and minerals of like character by the owners thereof and approximately 106,000 acres of the 218,000 acres acquired in fee simple for 3 of the reservoirs are available for leasing pursuant to the Mineral Leasing Act for Acquired Lands approved August 7, 1947 (61 Stat. 913). Therefore, there is no objection to the enactment of legislation which would provide for the conveyance of oil and gas and mineral interests of like character underlying some of the lands within these reservoirs to the former owners thereof under conditions provided for in section 2 of the bill.

On March 29, 1956, I approved H. R. 7097, 84th Congress, which provides for the reconveyance of oil and gas and mineral interests in lands within the Demopolis lock and dam project, Alabama, by authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to reconvey oil and gas and mineral interests to former owners thereof at the current fair market value of such oil and gas and mineral interests and subject to such reservations and restrictions as in the opinion of the Secretary of the Army are necessary. However, S. 1384 differs significantly from this legislation in that it provides for "payment to the United States of an amount equal to but not in excess of the purchase price for which said interests were acquired by the United States." This provision constitutes a departure from the principle established in other legislation requiring payment of fair market value for minerals disposed of by sale or lease. Furthermore, it is predicated on the fallacious assumption that there was a determination of the "purchase price" of the minerals separate and apart from surface and other interests at the time fee title to the land was acquired by the United States. While the known presence of minerals and any trading in oil and gas leasehold interests were considered in arriving at the appraised fair market value of lands acquired in fee simple for these projects, no separate valuation was assigned to minerals except in those few instances in which a separate estate in minerals had been previously created. Therefore it would be impossible at this time to determine, in most instances, the "purchase price" paid for the minerals. Under these circumstances, I believe that the job of administering this legislation would be confusing and unsatisfactory to all concerned. However, in withholding my approval, I am hopeful that the Congress may yet enact legislation relating to the mineral interests in these lands similar to H. R. 7097, 84th Congress (Public Law 459, 84th Cong.), referred to above.

JEAN PFEIFER

S. 277. I am withholding my approval of S. 277, for the relief of Jean Pfeifer.

The bill would permit the payment of a lump-sum death payment under section 202 (i) of the Social Security Act to Mrs. Jean Pfeifer in connection with the death of her son, John S. Inches, without regard to the statutory limitation on the period within which an application for such payment may be filed.

The facts in the case are as follows:

Mr. Inches died on August 7, 1951. His mother, Mrs. Pfeifer, paid burial costs in connection with her son's death. She did not, however, file an application for the lump-sum death payment until September 21, 1953, more than 2 years after the death of her son. Mrs. Pfeifer states that she or another surviving son had telephoned to the local office of the Social Security Administration on different occasions before the period had elapsed asking for application forms, but there are no records of such calls in the Social Security Administration files. In view of her failure to file application for the lump-sum death payment within the time fixed by law, the Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors Insurance of the Social Security Administration held that Mrs. Pfeifer was ineligible for the payment. This action of the Bureau was affirmed, after a hearing, by a referee of the Appeals Council in the Social Security Administration.

I am reluctant to deny relief in a case of this kind, but there are at least two persuasive considerations which compel me to withhold my approval: (1) A much more desirable remedy is provided for in the revision of the Social Security Act that I approved today, and (2) enactment of S. 277 would establish for the social security program an undesirable precedent which until now has been avoided.

Since 1939 the Social Security Act has required that an application for the lump-sum death payment be filed within 2 years of the death of the individual involved. The courts have held that failure to file application within this period may not be waived or excused, even though it arises from misunderstanding or unawareness.

This bill would provide special relief permitting one individual to receive a social insurance benefit under conditions identical with those under which, under the basic law, the same benefit must be denied to others similarly situated. Such special legislation, as I stated in vetoing H. R. 1334, 83d Congress, is undesirable and contrary to sound principles of equity and justice.

This is not to say that there may not in some cases be equities which warrant extending the statutory time limit. But any modification in the provisions of the Social Security Act that might be desirable to allow for such cases should, I believe, be made in the basic law and stated in general terms so as to be applicable to all persons similarly circumstanced, rather than requiring claimants who believe that they have such equities to seek individual relief through the process of private legislation, which is both burdensome and hazardous to the claimant and costly to the public. The revision of the Social Security Act approved today contains an amendment to the basic law which would afford an opportunity, not only to Mrs. Pfeifer but to all claimants similarly circumstanced, to become entitled to a lump-sum death payment under the Social Security Act upon showing good cause for the belated filing of an application.

CITY OF ELKINS, W. VA.

S. 2182. I have withheld my approval from S. 2182, a bill for the relief of the city of Elkins, W. Va. This bill would relieve the city of Elkins of all liability to repay a $75,000 loan (and all unpaid accrued interest) which it received from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The facts on this bill are clear. Under the World War II defense area landing program, the Federal Government undertook, under certain circumstances, to build airports for communities which would provide appropriate land. In July 1943 the city of Elkins agreed with the Civil Aeronautics Administration to furnish land for an airport. The United States Government agreed to pay the cost of constructing the airport. Elkins then applied to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and was granted a loan of $75,000 to purchase the land. The loan was evidenced by $75,000 of 4 percent airport revenue bonds issued by the city. The city has made no payment on principal and is now in default on bonds aggregating $24,000. Some interest payments have been made but the accrued and unpaid interest as of May 1, 1956, amounts to $22,400. Through the Civil Aeronautics Administration, the Government has expended over $1 million on the airport.

The issues involved in the bill are likewise clear:

1. The original agreement was and Elkins has received and will continue to receive benefits at least proportionate to its relatively small share of the airport's total cost.

2. The bill would give special treatment to a single community and thereby discriminate against other communities which built airports during World War II with Federal assistance. Of over 500 municipalities, representing every one of the 48 States, which entered into similar contracts with the Civil Aeronautics Administration, the city of Elkins is the only one which applied to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a loan to finance the purchase. The proposed legislation would relieve the city from any obligation to repay the loan. Thus, in effect, the Federal Government would have both constructed the airport and provided the land. No other municipality has received such special treatment.

3. The bill would set a precedent which could be used by many other communities to urge cancellation of their obligations held by the Federal Government. In all, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation made loans to over 6,000 municipalities and other public bodies. Of these, there are still outstanding 75 issues of municipal obligations totaling approximately $7 million. To relieve Elkins as provided in this bill would be to give that city a preference which was not given to any other city granted loans by the Corporation. Undoubtedly, special circumstances exist in many of the communities whose obligations remain unpaid. Testimony presented to the House Committee on the Judiciary suggests that the case for relief from their obligations might be as persuasive as in the case of Elkins. The precedent set by this bill could, moreover, adversely affect collections on loans to local governments under several other continuing Federal programs.

This bill involves one community and a relatively small amount of money; but it would establish undesirable principles and precedents affecting many other communities and many millions of dollars. I have, therefore, withheld my approval of S. 2182.

DATE OF MEETING OF 85TH CONGRESS

S. J. Res. 203. On recommendation of the majority and minority leadership of both the Senate and House of Representatives, I am withholding my approval of Senate Joint Resolution 203, fixing the date of meeting of the 85th Congress. January 7, 1957, the date fixed in the resolution, is the date prescribed by law for the counting of the electoral votes for President and Vice President. I am informed that the Congress cannot conveniently count those votes on the same day that it assembles.

RATES CHARGED FOR ELECTRIC POWER BY SOUTHWESTERN POWER ADMINISTRATION

S. 3338. I have withheld my approval of S. 3338, an act relating to rates charged for electric power and energy marketed by the Southwestern Power Administration, and for other purposes.

The only purpose which this legislation could accomplish would be to prevent the Secretary of the Interior from fulfilling the obligations imposed upon him by section 5 of the Flood Control Act of 1944, to establish rate schedules which will return sufficient revenue to amortize the investment in Federal multiple-purpose projects allocated to power, and to pay the necessary costs incurred in operating and maintaining power projects. By its terms, S. 3338 grants a legislative moratorium which prevents any rate increases for power sold by the Southwestern Power Administration to any public body or cooperative until June 30, 1957. This would result in a loss of $2,167,000 revenue during the present fiscal year.

Sound management requires that the Federal Government fix rates for electric energy and power from Federal projects which will return the taxpayers' investment, with interest, within a reasonable period of time. Revenues from power sales by the Southwestern Power Administration in 1955 were not sufficient to pay even the interest on the portion of construction costs allocated to power. Furthermore, these revenues have been insufficient to provide any return of the capital investment in power facilities since 1953. Enactment of the bill will prevent the establishment of compensatory rates until July 1, 1957.

Fears have been expressed that the increased rates, which I am informed amount to approximately 40 cents per month for the average rural customer, proposed by the Department of the Interior will force upon preference customers—public agencies and cooperatives—the burden of absorbing the deficit in power revenues brought about by the delivery of power to a nonpreference customer under a 1952, 30-year contract at unrealistically low unit rates. However, the fact is that under the proposed schedule of rates, these preference customers will pay for power at rates determined upon the assumption that all power users must pay the rate necessary to retire the capital investment allocated to power on these multiple-purpose projects. The preference customers will not pay any of the deficit resulting, during the repayment period, from the 30-year contract.

VALIDATION OF CERTAIN MINING CLAIMS, WYOMING

S. 3941. I am withholding my approval of S. 3941, an act to provide for the validation of certain mining claims owned by Arthur W. Hyde, John H. Gossett, Clyne A. Bailey, and Manuel Silva, all of the State of New Mexico, and Thelma Arndt, Wallace (or Wally) Lawson, Richard L. (or R. L.) Greene, Elden F. Keith, Zola Keith, Leon Keith, Lee E. Keith, Robert Arndt, Rose Greene, Ferne Cressy, Marjorie Lawson, and Frank Cressy, all of the State of Wyoming.

S. 3941 provides an additional period of time for the validation of mining claims held by certain specified persons in New Mexico and Wyoming, which could have been validated under the act of August 12, 1953, but which were not validated thereunder solely because of the failure of the holders of the claims to take the necessary steps.

This bill was originally introduced as a general measure, but, after the Department of the Interior recommended that it not be enacted, it was amended so as to be a private relief bill. This was done because the Department of the Interior pointed out that S. 3941 was really of the nature of a private bill, and that, if the bill were amended along such lines, reasons justifying the special treatment of the specific claimants might, perhaps, be produced. Justification for such unusual treatment has not been shown. The 12 persons named in the bill as having claims in Wyoming justify their failure to validate their claims under the act of August 12, 1953, on the grounds that a search of the records at a land office failed to show the existence of an oil and gas lease at the time of the location of their claims. However, a more diligent search of those records subsequently revealed the existence of an oil and gas lease. One of the persons named in the bill as having a claim in New Mexico based his right upon the fact that a search of the records at a land office failed to show the existence of an oil and gas lease because there had been a delay in making entries in the land office records. There was no evidence that the claimant had taken all possible steps to ascertain the existence of an oil and gas lease. The information on the other three claims is limited.

Under the circumstances, I have no recourse but to withhold my approval of S. 3941. To approve S. 3941 would, I believe, establish an undesirable precedent, encouraging others to seek relief from laws of general applicability on expired mining claims.

H. R. 10285. An act to merge production credit corporations in Federal intermediate credit banks; to provide for retirement of Government capital in Federal intermediate credit banks; to provide for supervision of production credit associations; and for other purposes;

H. R. 11010. An act creating the Muscatine Bridge Commission and authorizing said Commission and its successors to acquire by purchase or condemnation and to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge or bridges across the Missippi River at or near the city of Muscatine, Iowa, and the town of Drury, Ill.; and

H. R. 12237. An act to encourage and assist the States in the establishment of State committees on education beyond the high school, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Carrell, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 7728. An act to provide that the Department of the Navy shall not be required to reimburse the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the transfer of certain real property at Columbus, Ohio;

H. R. 9506. An act to provide for the conveyance of La Puntilla Military Reservation, San Juan, P. R., to the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico;

H. R. 10624. An act relating to intercorporate relations between the General Public Utilities Corp., a corporation organized and operating in the United States, and the Manila Electric Co.;

H. R. 10898. An act for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Randall McMahon;

H. R. 11548. An act to provide for the establishment of a new fish hatchery in the vicinity of Paint Bank, Va.;

H. R. 11682. An act to facilitate the control and eradication of certain animal diseases, to facilitate the carrying out of agricultural and related programs, to facilitate the agricultural attaché program, to facilitate the operations of the Farmers' Home Administration, the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation, and the Forest Service, and for other purposes;

H. R. 11702. An act to provide for the sale of lands in reservoir areas under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Army for cottage site development and use;

H. J. Res. 546. Joint resolution to amend the act of August 20, 1954, establishing a commission for the celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Alexander Hamilton; and

H. J. Res. 695. Joint resolution to suspend the application of certain Federal laws with respect to personnel employed by the House Committee on Ways and Means in connection with the investigations ordered by House Resolution 331 and House Resolution 606, 84th Congress.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills and joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 3489. An act to amend the Federal Employees' Group Life Insurance Act of 1954 to bring employees of Gallaudet College within its coverage;

H. R. 6856. An act to amend section 7 of the War Claims Act of 1948 with respect to claims of certain religious organizations functioning in the Philippine Islands;

H. R. 6709. An act for the relief of Harry M. Caudill;

H. R. 7536. An act to amend the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, so as to require that certain vessels carrying passengers for hire be fitted with radiotelephone installations;

H. R. 9083. An act to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to extend the period for amortization of grain-storage facilities;

H. R. 11969. An act to require certain safety devices on household refrigerators shipped in interstate commerce;

H. J. Res. 615. Joint resolution for the relief of certain aliens; and

H. J. Res. 649. Joint resolution for the relief of certain aliens.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2567. An act to authorize the appointment and retirement of Darrell C. Williams as a lieutenant commander, United States Navy;

S. 2663. An act to establish an effective program to alleviate conditions of substantial and persistent unemployment and underemployment in certain economically depressed areas;

S. 3468. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to amend certain contracts providing for the furnishing of water to the city of Rapid City, S. Dak., for municipal purposes;

S. 3517. An act to provide for the reorganization of the safety functions of the Federal Government, and for other purposes;

S. 3957. An act to amend the act authorizing the exchange and amendment of certain farm units in order to limit the time during which applications may be made under such act;

S. 4284. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Army to dispose of a certain parcel of land, a part of Fort Belvoir Accotink Dam site military reservation; and

S. J. Res. 180. Joint resolution to provide for the reappointment of Arthur H. Compton as Citizen Regent of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 2916. An act for the relief of Mrs. Alberta Bernard;

S. 3927. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey to Indian tribes certain federally owned buildings, improvements, or facilities on tribal lands or on lands reserved for Indian administration; and

S. 4058. An act to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to extend and renew to Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railroad Co. for the term of 10 years a lease of a tract of land in the United States Department of Agriculture Range Livestock Experiment Station, in the State of Montana, and for a right-of-way to said tract, for the removal of gravel and ballast material, executed under the authority of the act of Congress approved June 26, 1946.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3467) entitled "An act to authorize the conveyance of tribal lands from the Shoshone Indian Tribe and the Arapahoe Indian Tribe of the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming to the United States"; requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. O'MAHONEY, Mr. JACKSON, Mr. WATKINS, and Mr. BARRETT to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12350) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1957, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate further insists on its amendments in disagreement to the above-entitled bill and requests a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. HILL, Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. SALTONSTALL, Mr. YOUNG, and Mr. KNOWLAND to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

FEDERAL HIGHWAY ADMINISTRATOR

Mr. FALLON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 4164) to provide for the appointment of a Federal Highway Administrator in the Department of Commerce, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. COLE. Mr. Speaker, I announce to the House, in view of the fact that there are two very important bills on the atomic energy program which are scheduled for action by the House and have not been considered by the House, that until those bills are considered by the House I shall object to any unanimous-consent requests for legislative action. Therefore I object, Mr. Speaker.

THE LATE HONORABLE W. RANDOLPH CARPENTER

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep regret I announce to the House the death of a former Member of this body, the Honorable Randolph Carpenter, of Topeka, Kans.

Randolph Carpenter was my predecessor in the House. He served during a 4-year period, having been elected in 1932 and 1934. He did not seek reelection at the end of his second term.

Randolph Carpenter was born and reared in Marion, Kans., where he resided until 2 years ago when he moved to Topeka and became associated with the Columbian Title and Trust Co. of that place.

Mr. Carpenter served for a term as United States district attorney for Kansas. He also served as a member of important Federal commissions and boards.

Mr. Carpenter was a lawyer by profession. He was widely known. He was highly respected. He was regarded as being outstanding in the ethics of his profession.

During his term in Congress, Mr. Carpenter won the friendship and confidence of the Members of the House on both sides of the aisle. He was one of the hard-working, earnest Members of this body. Party lines made no difference to Randolph Carpenter when the decision was with respect to the best interests of his country. He served with honor as a member of the Armed Forces. He likewise served with honor as a Member of the Congress.

Mr. Carpenter had those qualities that go to make up a real statesman. He had a deep sense of justice. He was a Christian gentleman.

To Mrs. Carpenter and the children, we extend our deepest sympathy.

Death is only an old door
Set in a garden wall.
On gentle hinges it gives, at dusk,
When the thrushes call.

Along the lintel are green leaves,
Beyond, the light lies still.
Very willing and weary feet
Go over that sill.

There is nothing to trouble any heart,
Nothing to hurt at all.
Death is only a quiet door
In an old wall.

CUMULATIVE VOTING

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Speaker, I introduced a bill this morning amending the National Banking Act on the subject of cumulative voting, proxy solicitation, and removal of directors.

My main purpose in doing so is to focus attention upon these very important matters which should receive the attention of the next Congress.

In the meantime, there should be full and complete discussion of these subjects, pro and con. Requests by interested parties to be heard should be addressed to the Banking and Currency Commitees of both Houses.

I have incorporated in my bill some of the amendments that had been sought to be offered to S. 256. I have no pride of authorship, nor do I insist that my bill is perfect.

I am hopeful that the best thinking of the country can be brought to bear on the various parts of the bill, so as to bring forth a really satisfactory piece of legislation that will give the utmost protection to all concerned.

SPECIAL ORDER

Mr. MULTER asked and was given permission to address the House following the legislative program of the day and any special orders heretofore entered, to include his remarks in the Appendix, to include a report to his constituents and extraneous matter and tabulations.

ELECTION OF HON. IRWIN D. DAVIDSON AS JUDGE

Mr. ZELENKO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. ZELENKO. Mr. Speaker, I take this occasion to wish further success to our most distinguished colleague, the Honorable IRWIN D. DAVIDSON, who represents the 20th Congressional District of the State of New York.

I know that the entire membership of this great body is fully aware of the great legislative contributions he has made to the citizens of this country.

Congressman DAVIDSON has again been called upon by the people of the State of New York to continue his distinguished public service.

Upon the conclusion of his present term, he shall stand for election as a judge of the New York Court of General Sessions. I have no doubt of the successful outcome of his campaign, for the people of New York for many years have been fully cognizant of his sterling and unmatched qualities and will elect him to that high office by an overwhelming vote.

The citizens of New York are to be congratulated for their good fortune and wisdom in choosing Congressman DAVIDSON to be a judge of one of their most important tribunals. He will bring to that court his fine character, his wide experience, his profound knowledge of the law, and his unflagging desire to help his fellow man. These qualities were evidenced for many years during his service in the Legislature of the State of New York and as a judge in its courts.

It has been a distinct privilege for me to serve with Congressman DAVIDSON. I join with you in wishing Godspeed and good health to him and his wonderful family.

THE NATIONAL CONGRESS OF AMERICAN INDIANS

Mr. EDMONDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDMONDSON. Mr. Speaker, in the closing hours of the 84th Congress I want to pay tribute to the American Indians of the United States and Alaska and to the churches of America for their intensive mission studies and their interest in legislation for American Indians. I also want to speak of a great organization, the National Congress of American Indians.

In a deeply sincere gesture of appreciation last week, American Indians invited the Members of the House and Senate Subcommittees on Indian Affairs to a breakfast to express their great thanks to the United States Congress for passing H. R. 5566, the bill to extend the life of the Indian Claims Commission for 5 years without any crippling amendments. Indians from all over the United States and Alaska made this gesture through their organization—the National Congress of American Indians. Also, this weekend, the Otoe and Missouri Tribes, in my State of Oklahoma, are conducting a special ceremonial to thank and honor all the officials who have had a part in making possible their day in court and the final determination of their claim against the United States Government. I know that the Indian people want every member of the Congress to know of their appreciation.

In the many opportunities I have to work and eat with Indian tribes—and indeed it is a genuine Indian custom to eat together on joyous and important occasions—I have felt humbled by their qualities of generosity, reason, and patience. At our breakfast, a few days ago, though, I also felt guilty for myself and for the Congress in which I am privileged to be a Member, that we had not accomplished more in behalf of these generous and patient citizens of ours. I had tried hard on general education and sanitation bills in addition to supporting smaller measures—but surely I could have done more. I thought then of the many hours we have all spent to enact technical assistance programs for underdeveloped countries in other parts of the world, while our American Indians ask and wait patiently for this Nation to get around to a similar program for them.

But at that breakfast meeting, I also felt new hope for the American Indians not only because the life of the Indian Claims Commission had been extended but because the occasion invited one who has lived close to the Indians to notice the progress of the Indians in building an effective national organization. And I think in the closing hours of the Congress many of my colleagues in the Indian subcommittees will want to join me in paying tribute to the impressive growth in effectiveness and responsibility in the National Congress of American Indians. From the founding convention in Denver, Colo., in 1944, with only about a hundred Indians coming from 34 tribes but speaking only as individuals, the organization has grown to represent officially about 150,000, almost half of the American Indians in the United States and Alaska as represented in its tribal membership voted by the official governing bodies of the Indian tribes. Most of the Indian tribes with significant landholdings have officially voted tribal membership or financial support to the national Congress of American Indians. It was a rare privilege for me to address and observe the 1954 convention of this organization and I was then impressed and humbled by the patience of the delegates to this meeting. The seriousness with which they discussed issues, the courtesy with whch they heard all their delegates out, the patience with which they continued their discussions until understanding and agreement came about gave me deep respect for their official actions and resolutions.

A distinguished leader in this effort by the Indian people to forge a responsible national organization, to give voice to Indian concerns, has been the chief justice of my own State, the Honorable N. B. Johnson of Claremore, who served as the NCAI's first president and was reelected 8 successive years. Another distinguished Oklahoman, W. W. Short, served as the second president, preceding the current president, Joseph R. Garry, great-great-grandson of the great Chief Spokane-Garry. It was 20 tribes of Oklahoma under the leadership of Robert Goombi, chairman of the Kiowa-Comanche-Kiowa Apaches, who joined in designating NCAI's executive director, Mrs. Helen L. Peterson, Oglala Sioux, as "Outstanding Indian Citizen of 1955" last summer at the Anadarko, Okla., Indian Exposition. Other distinguished Oklahomans who are helping to make NCAI a unique contribution and a credit to the Nation as well as to the Indian people are numerous Indian attorneys, tribal officials, and Will Rogers, Jr.; Allie Reynolds; Maria Tallchief; and

W. W. Keeler. It is the hope of many of us that this all-Indian national organization will bring its annual convention to Oklahoma in 1957 to help us observe our 50th anniversary as a State. I cannot help but point with pride to the fine contributions of Oklahoma Indians in building a needed national Indian organization, just as they have contributed so richly to other areas of our national life.

By means of the recent breakfast, the Otoe-Missouri celebration to be held tomorrow, and in many other ways, American Indians have thanked us in the United States Congress for doing what we must acknowledge was no more than our duty. I believe many of my colleagues will want to join me in returning thanks to the American Indian people for their patience with our slowness, in extending them our congratulations for effective, responsible and impressive work done by their national organization in the 84th Congress just ending, and a pledge that we shall increase our efforts in their behalf in the years to come and that we welcome their ideas and participation in an accelerated Federal program to improve the conditions of the American Indian people.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently no quorum is present.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 126]

Abbitt	Eberharter	Patman

	Passman	Wilson, Calif.

The SPEAKER. On this rollcall 336 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the quorum call which terminated a few minutes ago, may I make a statement because I was not personally present before the time to answer "present" expired. I was on the floor actually during the second rollcall, but I was called to the long-distance phone off the floor to answer a matter of serious illness in California and that conversation on the long-distance phone had not terminated in time for me to get back and actually answer "present."

THE GENTLEMAN FROM NORTH CAROLINA, MR. BONNER

Mr. PELLY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. PELLY. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I read in the Washington Post a long letter on the editorial page over the signature of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, our good colleague, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BONNER]. This letter outlined the circumstances under which the so-called tanker bill passed the House, and I thought in fairness to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BONNER] I would like to insert it in the RECORD so that all Members could read this statement of facts. However, I found that the letter had already been inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and accordingly I take this means of urging all Members to be sure to read it.

At this time I would like to express my admiration for the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BONNER]. He has been a very fair chairman of the committee on which I have had the privilege of serving. I have noted a previous statement by him to the effect that all legislation having to do with helping the merchant marine must of necessity help some individual steamship operator. At the same time, the chairman has never pushed legislation which benefits his own district, but has always given equal opportunity to all of us on the committee to have full consideration and hearings on our own bills.

Mr. Speaker, I am particularly mindful that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BONNER] was receptive to an amendment proposed by me, and which has been incorporated in all recent bills reported from the committee having to do with the sale of ships. This is an amendment requiring competitive bidding with a minimum price.

I further wish to compliment the chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries that he has never permitted partisanship to play any part in the activities of this great committee which has been so active and which has done so much for the merchant marine during the 84th Congress. It seems to me that it would be particularly unfortunate if a Member of Congress who has done so much for an industry which is vital to the defense of our Nation were unfairly criticized, as in the case of the so-called tanker bill. I think most unjustly our colleague was criticized in the editorial columns of a local newspaper. I for one as a member of his committee and representing a different political party have come to admire and respect our colleague, as do all the members of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee who have had such a good opportunity to observe our chairman during the past 2 years.

The American people and Members of this Congress have every reason to be indebted to a great committee chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BONNER].

SECOND SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1957

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, we have a very unusual procedure here this morning. For the first time in many years, the Senate has recommitted a conference report and sent it back to the House. After an extended conference between the managers on the part of the House and the managers on the part of the Senate in which the bill was examined in detail, item by item, and a complete agreement reached and approved by the conferees, the conference report was taken up and agreed to in the House and sent across to the other body. Thereupon the other body soundly spanked its conferees, repudiated their agreement, threw the conference report in the ashcan and came over here and wanted their chips back. In the future, when invited to a conference, we should make preliminary inquiries as to whether this is a game for keeps or merely a preseason game.

We took for granted this was a Rose Bowl game. They sent in their top team including a couple of presidential possibilities, and we sent over a second-string lineup. It was a full, free, fair conference held under the Queensbury rules and when it was over they shook hands with us and every Senate conferee signed on the dotted line.

Now this morning they come back and say, "You fellows outmaneuvered our boys and we are going to play the game over again."

It must be conceded that while it was our scrub team we did have 1 or 2 good men with us. For example, there was JOHN TABER, one of the best fullbacks that ever stopped an end run for the United States Treasury. And there was MIKE KIRWAN. MIKE KIRWAN is all-American on any man's team.

The astonishing feature of the fracas is that all the turmoil and the repudiation of a complete agreement and a signed conference report was occasioned by two minor items in the bill—the strategic minerals item and the Coast Guard patrol item. The first was to compel the United States to buy and stockpile tungsten and other minerals for which "there is no market." Strangely enough it was advocated by some of the boys who bitterly criticized the stockpiling of butter, cotton, and corn for which "there is no market."

The other item, which was the real bug under the rug, was a proposition to send gunboats down to start a war with Mexican fishermen. The fishing grounds are outside the 3-mile limit in extraterritorial waters and if there is any problem there it is for the attention of the State Department and not the Treasury Department. We took up this matter with the departmental staff and the Coast Guard command last night and they assure us there has been no request for additional boats, no estimate by the Bureau of the Budget and that they are neither needed nor wanted. But the managers from the other House insist on appropriating $9 million for them.

That is what this tempest in a teapot is all about.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. It might be interesting to the House to know that it would take a year and a half for those boats to be built.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman is correct. We were told it would take 18 months to build them.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. CANFIELD. I think the gentleman knows that the Coast Guard itself did not look with favor on this proposition. They were not behind this proposition in any way.

Mr. CANNON. I am glad to have the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey comment on the item. He has been on that subcommittee for many years and he and Mr. GARY know more about the Coast Guard and its needs than anyone else in Washington. I talked to the Secretary last night, and he quoted the Admiral as saying they did not need them and did not want them.

And now, Mr. Speaker, in order to meet the situation brought about by the rejection of the conference report, in the other body, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 12350) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1957, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. COLE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE] objects.

RATES CHARGED FOR ELECTRIC POWER

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 625 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That, upon the adoption of this resolution, it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3338) relating to rates charged to public bodies and cooperatives for electric power generated at Federal projects. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill, and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider without the intervention of any point of order the amendments recommended by the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs now printed in the bill. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 30 minutes, and at the conclusion of my remarks I shall yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ELLSWORTH].

House Resolution 625 makes in order the consideration of S. 3338. The resolution provides for an open rule, 1 hour of debate, and waives points of order against the committee amendments now in the bill.

The bill as passed by the Senate would have been applicable to all areas of the country and not just to the Southwest Power Administration area. The bill as amended by the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee provides that the rates for power and energy marketed by the Southwest Power Administration shall not be revised before July 1, 1957; it would require that the incremental method of cost allocation be used as the basis in arriving at the schedule of rates for the sale of electric power and energy marketed by the Southwest Power Administration, and further authorizes and directs that the Secretary of the Interior renegotiate existing contracts between nonpreference customers and the Southwest Power Administration so as to provide that the rates of electric power and energy to these customers would be charged uniformly with any change of rates to preference customers.

I urge prompt action by the House on the resolution so we may proceed to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, when the bill which this resolution will make in order was presented to the Committee on Rules, there appeared to be many areas of reasonable doubt about the wisdom of passing the Senate bill S. 3338 this late in the session. There was considerable opposition voiced in the hearing which the Committee on Rules held on the bill. I think if I could have my own way about it, which, of course, I do not, I would suggest that this bill be put over until the next session so that a longer and more complete study could be made and action could be taken on it in a calmer atmosphere.

Mr. Speaker, I have several requests for time on this side, and at this time I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOW].

Mr. BOW. Mr. Speaker, this bill places Congress in the position of the father of an erring son who, when the son announces his intention to abandon a life of crime, urges the boy to continue in his evil ways.

For years the Southwestern Power Administration has been the most extreme example of bureaucratic disregard of the congressional mandate on electric power ratemaking.

Now the Department of the Interior proposes to correct this long-standing abuse, and the Congress is asked to prevent the reform.

The most specific statement of Federal power policy is found in the Flood Control Act of 1944 which provides, with respect to rates, that—

> Electric power and energy generated at reservoir projects under the control of the War Department and in the opinion of the Secretary of War not required for the operation of such projects shall be delivered to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall transmit and dispose of such power and energy in such manner as to encourage the most widespread use thereof at the lowest possible rate to consumers consistent with sound business principles, the rate schedules to become effective upon confirmation and approval by the Federal Power Commission.

The heart of that provision of law is the requirement that rates be consistent with sound business principles.

The record shows that sound business principles are not and have never been a consideration in the rate proposals of the Southwestern Power Administration until, as I have indicated, the Department of the Interior recently announced its intention to seek a revision in the rate schedules.

The present rate schedules, approved in 1946 as a temporary measure, are based upon the value of power in the area as estimated by the Federal Power Commission in 1946.

The time has long since passed when this temporary schedule should have been replaced with a regular schedule recognizing the various elements of sound business principles which are basic to electric power rates.

It has not been done earlier, as the FPC directed, because the Southwestern Power Administration until 1953 fought against the application of sound business principles and the controversy prevented the submission of an acceptable rate schedule to the FPC.

The SPA attitude toward ratemaking has ignored sound business principles in at least the following categories, and perhaps others:

First. Cost allocation.

Second. Amortization.

Third. Charge for the use of money.

Fourth. Value of power and actual project income as compared with preconstruction representations.

With regard to cost allocation, the Jones subcommitee in 1952 found that the SPA consistently attempted to allocate costs so that the least possible share of project cost would be attributed to power features.

Legislation with regard to two of the projects concerned—Denison and Norfolk—required the use of the incremental method of cost allocation. Legislative history on the remaining projects did not specify the method of cost allocation. The Jones subcommittee found that SPA varied the method of cost allocation from project to project, not in regard to the actual physical circumstances of the project, but solely with the view of producing the lowest possible figure.

The report of the Jones subcommittee contains tables showing both the SPA's manipulated cost allocations and the cost allocations figured by the Corps of Engineers, which were generally acceptable to the Federal Power Commission. SPA figures show only about 54 percent of the cost that the Corps allocated to power purposes. The intention and the result, if SPA figures were accepted, would be lower power rates and a greater subsidy to power users in this favored area.

The Department of the Interior has now entered into agreement with other agencies concerned to adopt a uniform method of cost allocation, referred to as the separable costs, remaining benefits method. This method comes as near as possible to conforming to sound business principles.

The Department of the Interior proposes to incorporate this system of cost allocation in the new rate schedule for SPA. It would mean an increase of one-third mill in the present rate. This is part of the increase—part of the sound business—that the pending measure seeks to set aside.

Costs which actually belong to power should not be allocated to functions presently treated as nonreimbursable. Anything else constitutes a giveaway of the tax dollars of all of the people of the United States as a subsidy in the power bills of the people in a favored area.

The Senate measure was bad insofar as it would have postponed indefinitely the application of a sound cost allocation to the projects of the SPA.

The House measure is infinitely worse in that it has amendments which would require that the allocation be based on the incremental method, thus making it impossible to conform to the sound business principle represented by the separable costs remaining benefits formula.

Computations of the Corps of Engineers published in the Jones subcommittee report to which I have referred show that the incremental cost method recommended in this bill would result in charges to power of $328,688,180, while the use of the separable costs remaining benefit formula show charges for power of $436,663,720.

I do not believe there is any justification in the legislative history, other than on Denison and Norfolk, for the Committee's airy assumption that the dams would have been built for flood control in any case and that power is only a secondary consideration. Use of the incremental method can be justified only when it is clearly indicated throughout the history of the project that the function concerned is indeed only an incident to the main purpose, or when the function, such as power features, are added subsequent to original authorization.

Going further, we are concerned with amortization of project costs as they relate to sound business principles. It seems to me that amortization under the sinking-fund method now used by Federal agencies is not in accord with sound business principles. This method of amortization results in equal annual payments for the sum of amortization and interest on unamortized balances on the assumption that the income from the power project will continue at the same estimated annual rate throughout the entire period of amortization.

This procedure is faulty for several reasons.

First, the assumption that any Federal hydroelectric power project will be able to enjoy the same annual income over a period of 50 years is hardly justified in view of the developments in nuclear energy with which all of us are familiar.

Second, the sinking-fund method results in only a minor repayment during the lifetime of that generation of taxpayers which had advanced the funds for the project.

A procedure more in accord with sound business principles would be that method of amortization which requires equal annual repayments of the Federal investment—not equal annual payment of the sum or amortization and interest on balances. This would result in a more rapid payoff during the early years of the project when income is most certain, a fair return to the taxpayers who actually advanced the funds, and a diminishing burden on the project and hence on its customers in the later years of the payout period.

This is not the primary consideration, however, with respect to the amortization problem in the bill. Here we have a project that is not paying out. For the past 3 years it has failed to pay even the full amount of interest due, and we are told that it is falling some $2,500,000 short of paying the interest each year.

This means that under the present rate schedule, even when additional facilities overcome the present deficit, the project cannot pay out in 50 years. Adoption of the new rate schedules, which this bill seeks to prevent, would provide a 50-year payout period. Thus the bill presents the issue very clearly: should we hold to the long-established practice of requiring a 50-year repayment on projects of this nature?

SPA has long envisioned evasion of the law requiring a 50-year payout. The figures it made available to the Jones subcommittee in 1952 were based on a payout of 100 years' duration. This prolonged period, plus the manipulated cost allocations I have already mentioned, permitted SPA to recommend a charge for power less than one-half of the charge considered reasonable by the Corps of Engineers. Sound business principles never entered into the SPA calculations. The sole consideration was a low power rate.

This kind of thinking is still dear to the hearts of southwestern power beneficiaries, and the hearings developed that a payout period of at least 78 years is now contemplated by the proponents of this measure.

The 78-year period is based on a study that takes into account the effect of new power facilities to be added in the year 2010.

To me it is highly dangerous to assume, as I have said, that hydroelectric power will yield reliable revenues, in competition with the probable development of nuclear energy, even for the next 50 years. In fact, I would not want to bet on hydroelectric power in competition with the present methods of steam generation using low-cost coal resources. To expect that we can depend upon repayment from hydro projects over a period of 78 years is reckless. To base a decision today upon the possible installation of new hydro plants in the year 2010 is visionary.

Entirely aside from the violation of sound business principles, let me add that I consider it immoral to require that future generations of power users, 78 years from now, should be required to pay for electric power that is operating farms, factories, and the household conveniences of today.

A third consideration is the proper charge for the use of money advanced for the project, and this means money that comes either from Federal borrowing or from taxes, either of which is a responsibility of all Americans.

A fundamental sound business principle is that money is not loaned for less than the cost of money to the lender. Any other practice would lead to bankruptcy. Further, I think it is a sound business principle that the charge for the use of the money should begin on the day the first advance is made. By this I mean, as the Corps of Engineers has agreed, that interest should be paid during the period of construction. SPA calculations have not included interest during the period of construction. This is another device by which SPA has sought to justify a lower power rate than the facts and sound business principles would permit.

Finally, as I have pointed out heretofore, no sound business would tolerate a condition under which preauthorization or preconstruction estimates are forgotten as soon as they have served their purpose of helping to bring the project into being. This, unfortunately, is a common practice of Federal development agencies.

In the case at hand, actual construction costs have been 79 percent greater than the preconstruction estimates of the SPA.

This increase in construction costs, plus the use of the new cost allocation formula I have mentioned, brings the cost of the power facilities to something like 83 percent greater than SPA's original estimates.

It is apparent that rates based on these original estimates are entirely unrelated to the actual cost of the power, as they must be also to the value of the power.

These actual costs should be reflected in the rate at which the power is sold. At present they are not so reflected. The proposed revised rate schedule, which this legislation proposes to postpone or set aside, would be based on the actual costs, and would account for about 2.2 mills of the 2.5-mill increase proposed.

Summing up, we have a situation where the clear mandate of Congress has been ignored for the past decade. During all of this time the Southwestern Power Administration has operated as a subsidized utility serving a limited number of customers in a favored area at the expense of all of the other taxpayers of the United States. Sound business principles have not been considered.

The Department of the Interior now proposes a new rate schedule, some 4 years overdue, in which recognition is given at least to sound principles of cost allocation, period of amortization, and actual construction cost. This is a trend that should be encouraged. It is a good beginning toward cleaning up a bad situation in the Southwest. Yet we are asked to freeze the present unrealistic rate and continue the burden on the taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, I think we should mention that this is actually of small moment to the customers of Southwestern Power Administration. The effect of the new rate schedule would mean an increase of only about 40 cents per month to the average farm user of SPA energy.

It is of great importance, however, not only in dollars and cents but in principle as well, to all the taxpayers of the country who, until this time, have realized almost no return on their investment in this complex of dams and transmission lines and who will be forced to continue to pay a part of the electric power bill of every SPA consumer if a freeze is instituted.

This is a giveaway if ever I saw one. The tax dollars of every American are being given away to benefit a favored few.

I find no justification whatever for passage of this bill.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDMONDSON].

Mr. EDMONDSON. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a considerable amount of interest to the argument of the gentleman from Ohio. These are the same arguments which were made against this bill both in the hearings which were held over in the other body and also in the House committee and those arguments were rejected by committees which have studied this particular legislation for several good and sufficient reasons.

There are three clear and compelling reasons why this legislation, which would defer a suggested increase in rates for the preference customers of the Southwestern Power Administration for about 11 months, should be granted by the Congress.

In the first place, this legislation seeks to prevent an unfair rate increase proposal which raises the rates of Southwestern Power only in regard to the preference customers. Under examination before the committee, Assistant Secretary Aandahl was asked the direct question as to whether or not he had also proposed to increase the rates of the private power companies who, incidentally, receive a very large percentage of the power supplied by the Southwestern Power Administration. He stated that he had no intention of seeking a rate increase for the power companies, even though under the figures supplied by the Department of the Interior these rates also are below the rate necessary to secure an actual return on the investment at the present time. He was asked whether he had any intention to secure an increase in the rate of the power being supplied through the Arkansas Light & Power Co. to the Reynolds Aluminum Co. in Arkansas, which receives the entire production of electricity of one of the dams in the Southwestern Power Administration area. He stated before the committees that he was bound by a contract which, in all fairness, was entered into back before this administration, and he felt he was unable to raise the power supplied to the Reynolds Aluminum Co. Now the rates which the Reynolds Aluminum Co. enjoys and is going to enjoy, under the contract with SPA and Arkansas Light & Power for some time, are substantially below in the average cost of power now being charged to the preference customers which is proposed to be raised under the Department of the Interior proposal. So we say, first of all, it is unfair to come out of the Department of the Interior with an increase of rates to the REA's and the small communities without also seeking, through negotiation or otherwise, an increase in rates to the private power companies and to the nonpreference users of this power.

In the second place, we say it is also unfair to invoke arbitrarily a new method of allocating costs, when the only congressional direction that has been supplied on this matter in the Southwestern Power area is a direction that the incremental cost method be used. The gentleman from Ohio was fair enough in his remarks to say that there are two instances in the legislative history of this power where the Congress has said that the incremental method shall be used. There are no instances with regard to any other dam constructed where Congress said that any method but the incremental method should be used.

The importance of that is this: If we switch over to this new cost allocation method, there will be an increase in the rates. We say if they do not propose to increase those rates for Reynolds and the private companies, then manifestly it is unfair to switch over to a new allocation method and raise the rates for the REA and the consumers in that area.

Now, there is a final reason and a most compelling, important reason, and that is that in this 7-State area the States have been suffering for a period of 3 or 4 years from an acute drought that has been recognized by the White House in the declaration that it is an economically distressed area. We have had great losses of crops, forced liquidation of our cattle herds throughout that area, and we have had a great loss in farm prosperity, and the burden of this proposed rate increase is going to fall upon the consumers and the farmers and the customers of the REA in that disaster area. The rate increase described to you by the gentleman from Ohio as only one-third of a mill is actually an increase from 5.6 mills to an average rate of 7.7 mills, which is almost a 40-percent increase in the rates, and an increase of more than 2 mills that is being proposed actually in this proposal.

Now, in all fairness, we have here a history of acute drought, of great economic distress that is recognized by the White House as an area of economic distress, and I think in fairness to the Secretary of the Interior it should be pointed out that when our committee chairmen from both bodies asked that he withhold sending this request over to the Federal Power Commission for a period of time to permit this study, he readily agreed withholding sending over the rate increase.

I believe he did that because he also recognizes the emergency character of the situation in those States. Let me dwell on one further point.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Bow] said that this places the Congress in the position of a father to an erring son, and he says that Southwestern Power Administration for many years has been operating without regard to sound business principles. The fact of the matter is that the figures show that from the year 1945 until the year 1953 there was a retirement on investment in Southwest Power Administration operations in each of those 9 years. Only in the last 3 years—1954, 1955, and 1956—when we had this terrible drought strike that area do the actual figures show that there is a deficit operation.

It would be unconscionable if this Congress refused to give the relief that is being sought by these farmers and these REA customers. I think it would be unconscionable if this Congress permitted a rate increase for these REA's and for these farmers when no rate increase is even being considered for the private power companies and for Reynolds Aluminum on the very fine rates that they enjoy.

We do not ask a preferential or a special position for the REA's or for the municipalities who enjoy this status of preference customers. But we do say that they are entitled to fair and equal treatment and that they should not be penalized in a time of economic distress.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I hope the bill S. 3338 will be supported by my colleagues on this side. I hope the rule will be adopted so we can support the bill.

I will say this in all frankness to my colleagues, that when the bill first came before the committee of which I am a member I opposed it vigorously for two reasons. First, the bill as it came from the other body proposed to freeze rates in all of these power areas—Pacific Northwest, TVA, all of the areas—for an indefinite period of time. It affected all the areas. I opposed it then because I said it would affect the feasibility of every irrigation project in the 17 Western States. Some committee amendments will be presented here this morning which were agreed to on both sides of the aisle.

Second. I opposed the bill because it froze rates for an indefinite period.

This bill now will be limited only to Southwest Power and for a period until June 30, 1957. So with those amendments in the bill I can support it.

The reason Southwest Power is in difficulty—and I am referring to that part of the report of the committee which covers that—is this: First, the estimated total cost has risen 79 percent above the original estimate. So you are operating Southwest Power under some temporary rates, and with costs going up 79 percent it is true that Southwest Power failed this last year by $2,700,000 of even paying the interest. But that was due to the fact that these costs are so much higher than we had expected them to go.

So the bill that will be presented to you ought to be adopted so we may have a further study of all rates. I hope that our committee or some committee of Congress can make a further study of some of these electric light rates in these power areas.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDMONDSON] spoke about the power rates to the aluminum companies. In my opinion, one reason they lack enough money to pay interest is because these aluminum companies are getting large blocks of secondary power for 1¼ mills; yes, I said 1¼ mills. They call it secondary power or dump power, but I will tell you that they use it as firm power; while the REA's and the preference customers must pay about 5.4 mills for this power.

Some of these contracts with the private power companies were entered into for a period of 30 years, and, if I read the contract correctly, it is not subject to review. So you can understand that large blocks of power sold at 1.2 mills per kilowatt just cannot help but add to the deficit. The private companies have a contract, running for 30 years, of electric energy at less than the cost of production. The REA's are penalized because of the preference treatment given private industry. It does not make sense to me that we let a long-term contract made under a previous administration continue under these circumstances. There is a group investigating power rates. Here is a very fertile field.

More than half of the power produced at Bonneville in the Northwest is sold at less than 2 mills, yet the preference customers, the REA's pay between 5 and 6 mills for that same power. So there ought to be a review.

I hope we can support this bill and go forward. If the rates are to be raised, there ought to be some way found to raise the aluminum company rate, not 1¼ mills for secondary power, but to a point where we will have a decent return for this power and not load all of it onto the REA's.

Then, as has been said before, this is a drought area. I think there is some reason to extend it because of the economic distress that is going on in this area. When farmers have no income they cannot meet their bills. Therefore, I hope that the House will support the bill. I hope the amendment will be adopted, because it ought not to refer to any other area than the Southwestern Power Administration. If it is going to refer permanently to all districts, then it would be bad legislation and I could not support it, because I am sure it would make unfeasible irrigation power projects and cause additional trouble for the Federal Power Commission and those charged with seeing that these projects pay back the money they borrow at a reasonable rate of interest. I think they are behind $8 million in this area. Most of that is due to the fact that long-term contracts have been let to the power companies at very cheap rates, less than the cost of production. We are absolutely subsidizing the large aluminum companies and private industry with the money of taxpayers all over the country, then trying to load the rest of it onto the REA's. Let us adopt this bill and take another look at it when the next Congress comes in session. In my humble judgment the power contracts with the private companies violate the Flood Control Act of 1944 because they violate the preference clause which allocates Federal power to preference customers such as the REA's and municipalities.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TRIMBLE].

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I speak to you on this rule asking not for charity, not for sympathy, but for plain, simple justice. I have enough faith in the good judgment of this House to believe that they are going to do the just thing.

We are in an area in the Southwest where there is a drought situation. Ninety percent of the power of the hydroelectric projects in our area is sold to the power companies at an average rate something like 2.8. It is then resold by them to the rural electric cooperatives at 5.6.

The Southwestern Power Administration has paid its way. Every cooperative in my district, and I have five, was meeting its payments and interest and everything in good shape, until the drought came and made a different situation. Let me tell you something about that.

As I said, there are five rural electric co-ops in the district which I am honored to represent. The average customer usage is less than three users per mile. There is no power company, whether it is public or private, that could pay its way and make a profit with only three users to the mile. The cost of running those lines out to those farms is about $1 per foot.

When the drought hits, people have to leave the farm. They go to California, to Michigan, to Kansas, to Missouri, and to other places to seek employment. The rural electrical co-op that serves our home near Berryville, my hometown, has in the neighborhood of 10,000 meters. Right now there are 2,000 idle meters. There is not a dime coming in, but the expense is there just the same. Another co-op in my district has 11,000 users and they have 3,000 idle meters. The other co-ops are in a similar situation. All this bill proposes to do—and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ALBERT] and I introduced bills in the House identical to S. 3338. All this bill proposes is to give us time to get together and work this thing out; and study the situation without increasing the already overburdened farmers in my section of the country and all 7 States of the Southwest with a 40-percent increase. All we want is just to treat everybody alike. I have implicit faith in your fine sense of justice.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONAS].

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include a table and a memorandum from the Federal Power Commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult for me ever to find fault with anything my friend from Arkansas says. He has stated that he is pleading for simple justice and, of course, I have always believed in fair and equal justice to all people. But there are certain things about this situation in the Southwest that need to be clarified. If my comments seem in opposition to the position taken by the gentleman from Arkansas, I hope it will not be charged that I am less interested than he in justice and fair play.

I consider myself a good friend of REA. I have consistently supported appropriations for the rural electrification and rural telephone programs ever since I have been in Congress and I do not think anyone can honestly contend that the appropriations I have supported have ever been less than required to carry forward these programs with all reasonable speed. I have three REA cooperatives in my congressional district. I have close business, personal, and political friends who are managers, directors, and customers of REA. They entertained me at a dinner held in my district not too many weeks ago and we talked over their problems in a friendly and open way. Just a week or so ago, 2 representatives of that group called on me in Washington to discuss 3 pending bills, and this is one of them. Hells Canyon was another and the Niagara power bill was the third. In our discussion of this particular bill, S. 3338, an argument was advanced to me by these gentlemen which is similar to the one advanced here this morning by the gentleman from Oklahoma and touched also by the gentleman from Arkansas. They all contended that it would be unfair and unreasonable to raise rates against rural cooperatives and not raise them against the private companies who acquire some of the SPA power. I assured the REA representatives who called upon me and advanced this argument that if they could show me—and I say today to the proponents of this measure—if they can show that the Department of the Interior has authority or right to advance the rates in the existing 30-year Reynolds Metals Co. contract, I will support this bill unless the rates in the contracts with the private companies are raised.

It should be pointed out that the Reynolds Metals Co. contract, which is a long-term 30-year contract under which approximately one-third of all of the power produced by the Southwestern Power Administration is acquired by that one company, was signed by Mr. Oscar Chapman when he was Secretary of the Interior in President Truman's administration. That contract not only disposes of one-third of all of the power produced by the Southwestern Power Administration to this one nonpreference customer, but it does so for a period of 30 years and the contract does not contain any rate redetermination clause. The contract does contain a provision for step increases in rates at 10-year intervals but does not contain any provision giving the Secretary of the Interior any right to redetermine or increase the rates as specified in the contract.

Mr. WILLIS. I want to take up the gentleman's invitation to show it.

Mr. JONAS. I cannot yield at this time. I only have 5 minutes. Please do it in your own time.

As I was saying, if anyone can show that the Secretary of the Interior has the right, under the contract to which I have referred which was signed by Mr. Oscar Chapman as Secretary of the Interior on behalf of the United States of America with the Arkansas Power & Light Co., and Reynolds Metals Co. in 1952, to raise the rates for power which Reynolds Metals Co. is getting from the Southwestern Power Administration, I will vote against any increase in rates to the REA's until the rates to the private companies can be raised.

I am placing in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks, under unanimous consent obtained before I began to speak, a memorandum of the Federal Power Commission dated April 4, 1952, in Docket No. E-6407. This memorandum appears in full beginning on page 1362 of the "hearings before a subcommittee of the Committee on Government Operations of the House of Representatives, 84th Congress, 1st session." This memorandum analyzes the Reynolds Metals Co. contract and the contents of the memorandum will be very revealing to those who are interested in determining what has caused many of the difficulties with respect to power in the Southwest.

This memorandum indicates that there was built into the contract a subsidy which amounts to approximately a million dollars a year—a subsidy for the benefit of the private utility and the private aluminum company. I hope someone can find a way by which this contract can be changed or the rate increased so as to eliminate the subsidy. I do not think this one company, which is not a preference customer, should have been placed in a preferred position of receiving these great benefits which directly affect the low revenues received by Southwestern Power Administration and thereby contributes, at least indirectly, to the accumulating deficits which the Southwestern Power Administration has been sustaining for a number of years.

I would like to read a paragraph from the Federal Power Commission memorandum concerning this contract. It will be argued that the contract was negotiated when we were engaged in the Korean war and that it can be justified as an emergency measure. One obvious answer to that is that surely it was not expected by the administration then in power that the Korean war would last 30 years. Certainly prudence, and a desire to follow the letter and spirit of the Flood Control Act of 1944, would have indicated the desirability of putting a withdrawal clause in the contract or at least a clause which would have permitted a redetermination of rates if circumstances arising in the future made such a course of action necessary or wise. And with respect to the argument that this contract was dictated by a war emergency, here is what the memorandum of the Federal Power Commission said:

> The Flood Control Act of 1944 requires preference be given to public bodies and cooperatives in the sale of power. Reynolds, to which the deliveries to Arkansas Power are largely dedicated, is neither. SPA defends the diversion of such a large block of power (150,000 kilowatts) to a nonpreference customer on the Nation's current need for aluminum. A letter has been received from the Defense Production Administration verifying this need. The question still remains, however, whether such a large block of power can be so diverted legally without a modification of the Flood Control Act. There is also question whether it is in the public interest to divert this large block of public power for use by one private corporation for private gain. Further, SPA has made no showing that the low rate it proposes to charge Arkansas Power will result in a saving to the Government in its purchases of aluminum from Reynolds.

So I would say to the people in the Southwest Power area, who are vitally concerned with this subject, that if the power rates are going to have to be raised—and it seems to be agreed by everyone that they will have to be raised if you are not to continue to fall farther and farther behind in the payments you have obligated yourselves for—if its rates have to be raised, the responsibility or blame does not rest with the present Secretary of the Interior. He was certainly not responsible for the 79-percent increase in the cost of constructing the dams and power installations over original estimates. Nor did he have anything whatsoever to do with the execution of the contract with the Reynolds Metals Co.—a contract which allots one-third of the entire power available from the Southwest Power Administration to one private company, which is not a preference customer, at a rate which amounts to a subsidy of nearly $1 million a year.

And may I say to the chairman of the Public Works and Resources Subcommittee of the House Committee on Government Operations, which has been engaged during the last 2 years in trying to discredit the present administration of the Interior Department, that here is a field for investigation. Last year that subcommittee conducted extensive hearings, which filled a 3-inch volume containing 1,686 pages, ostensibly studying whether acts and policies of the Interior Department had adversely affected the rights of preference customers. The subcommittee knew about this Reynolds Metals Co. contract, because it was called specifically to the attention of the subcommittee on several different occasions, but it was not scheduled for study or investigation. Yet it appears that under this contract a nonpreference customer gets one-third of the entire power available for sale by the Southwest Power Administration.

I would suggest that this subcommittee look into the background of that contract and determine if in its negotiation there was, as would appear from the Federal Power Commission memorandum cited above, a violation of the Flood Control Act of 1944. Certainly enough has come to light concerning that contract to indicate that it was highly favorable to one private company, which is not a preference customer, and was highly detrimental to the REA cooperatives and other preference customers in the Southwest Power area.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I repeat the statement I made at the beginning. If it can be shown that the Secretary of the Interior has any legal right to raise the rates in that contract I will vote for this bill.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONAS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I have two of these companies in Michigan. I am informed we are paying 10 to 12 mills at the bus bar while these gentlemen are getting it for 7 mills. Did I get the gentleman right that the Reynolds Metal Co. is getting $900 million?

Mr. JONAS. The Reynolds Metals Co. gets one-third of all the power that is produced.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. But the gentleman mentioned dollars.

Mr. JONAS. I said the Federal Power Commission memorandum, which I am putting in the RECORD, says that there is a subsidy in that contract to the utility and the private company of nearly a million dollars.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Then they get a subsidy because those gentlemen over there gave it to them. We did not.

Mr. JONAS. That contract was negotiated in 1952. I have not heard anybody on this floor complain about this great giveaway of a third of the power in the Southwest Power area to nonpreference customer.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. I thought maybe they had not heard about that.

Mr. JONAS. That is the reason I am putting the memorandum from the Federal Power Commission dealing with this contract in the RECORD.

(The memorandum follows:)

DOCKET NO. E-6407, SOUTHWESTERN POWER ADMINISTRATION, APRIL 4, 1952

MEMORANDUM FOR THE COMMISSION

(Reference: Department of the Interior (Southwestern Power Administration). Contract between United States of America, Arkansas Power & Light Co., and Reynolds Metals Co.[1])

Presented herein for the Commission's consideration is the 30-year contract between the United States of America, Arkansas Power & Light Co., and Reynolds Metals Co. for the sale of 150,000 kilowatts of low-load-factor peaking power and of secondary energy by the Government (SPA) to Arkansas Power, and the sale by that company of 110,000 kilowatts of high-load-factor power to Reynolds Metals.

[1] The Bureau of Power has prepared a memorandum for the Commission on the subject of allocation of project costs, power values, etc. Material contained in such memorandum has been utilized herein.

The contract was filed on January 30, 1952, by the Secretary of the Interior for confirmation and approval by the Commission under the Flood Control Act of 1944 of the rates and charges for the power to be sold by the Government to Arkansas Power. Because Reynolds is a customer of Arkansas Power and not of the Government, the rates to be charged Reynolds by Arkansas Power are not before the Commission for approval.

The contract provides for automatic termination if the rates to Arkansas Power are not approved by the Commission by March 29, 1952. A supplement dated March 14, 1952, filed March 27, provides for a 15-day extension of this termination date to (Sunday) April 13, 1952.

The staff recommends disapproval for the reasons outlined below.

BASIS FOR RECOMMENDATION

The principal points bearing on the staff's recommendation are briefly as follows:

(a) SPA's overall payout studies, adjusted to reflect Bureau of Power's project cost allocations between power and other uses, adjusted to a 50 (instead of 100) year amortization period, show its total proposed revenues will not meet total costs. Involved in this matter are questions concerning SPA's methods of allocating project costs to power.

(b) The contract revenues are below full allocated cost. SPA has submitted several studies, most of which show that revenues from the contract exceed costs allocated thereto. However, the staff believes SPA's approach is unrealistic. (Further, the staff's allocated cost of service studies indicates rate A may have to be increased substantially.)

(c) The contract is for a term of 30 years with no provision for review of rates at any time. However, while the rates charged by the Government would be frozen (except for fixed periodic increases), Arkansas Power has the protection of the State regulatory commission. The staff does not believe the Government should commit itself to specific rates for such a long term without some recourse for adjustment in price should it become necessary, particularly since only a minor portion of all costs are definitely known at this time.

(d) The contract rates are substantially below SPA's other rates, and therefore are discriminatory.

(e) Reynolds is not a preference customer, and there may be question whether SPA can legally divert such a large block of power to such a customer. Further, it may not be in the public interest to tie up such a large block of public power by one industrial customer.

(f) Arkansas Power has first refusal on secondary energy (after SPA's present commitment to Texas Power & Light Co. and SPA's own needs) with no corresponding obligation to take it. This is believed to discriminate against other purchasers of SPA's secondary power.

(g) The margin of profit to Arkansas Power may be excessive.

(h) The contract price is substantially below the value of power in the area.

RATES

The rates to be charged Arkansas Power by the Government result in a payment of $1,872,000 per year for the 150,000 kilowatts and 360 million kilowatt-hours of firm power which is equivalent to an average rate of 5.2 mills per kilowatt-hour. Expressed on a kilowatt-year basis, it is $12.48 per kilowatt-year (including 2,400 kilowatt-hours per kilowatt, 27 percent load factor). The rate for the secondary energy sold the Arkansas company is 1.25 mills per kilowatt-hour.

The charges for the firm power increase 5 percent every 10 years during the term of the contract. The charges for the secondary energy increase to 1.50 mills per kilowatt-hour at the end of 5 years, to 1.75 mills per kilowatt-hour at the end of 15 years, and to 2 mills per kilowatt-hour at the end of 20 years.

Reynolds will pay to Arkansas Power $2,232,000 per year for 110,000 kilowatts and 360 million kilowatt-hours of firm power (37 percent load factor). Additional energy is charged for at 2.25 mills per kilowatt-hour for the first year with upward adjustments thereafter.

A more detailed description of the contract is attached as appendix A.

DISCUSSION

Costs and revenues

Allocation of project cost to power: At the time the subject contract was filed, SPA submitted an overall payout study comparing total system revenues with total costs through 1958. This study used questionable methods of allocating the costs of the reservoir projects to power, which SPA claimed was the best it could do on the information available to it at the time. At the conference of March 14, 1952, among representatives of SPA, the Corps of Engineers, and the staff, SPA stated that in the light of new data then available to it, it was willing to use the incremental method of allocating project costs to power in all cases (except possibly one), but that the allocation of any larger amount to power will price it out of the market. The Bureau of Power, on the other hand, believes the separable costs-remaining benefits method of allocating project cost to power to be proper for all projects except Denison and Norfork where the incremental method is deemed proper due to the special circumstances in those cases.[2] These matters are fully discussed in a separate memorandum for the Commission being submitted by the Bureau of Power.

Amortization period: SPA used 100 years in its overall payout study for the amortization of the project investments allocated to power. This matter was discussed at the conference of March 10 and 14, 1952. Although SPA did not agree at the time that 50 years was proper, later studies submitted by SPA used a 50-year amortization period.

Overall payout study: The following tabulation compares the results of SPA's overall payout study for the year 1958: (1) As submitted by SPA; (2) as adjusted to reflect the incremental method of allocating project costs to power and using a 50-year amortization period; and (3) as adjusted to reflect the allocating of project costs to power proposed by the Bureau of Power, which also includes a 50-year amortization period.

	As submitted by SPA	Incremental project allocation	Bureau of power project allocation
Total annual revenues (1958)	$21,461,200	$21,461,200	$21,461,200
Total annual costs	20,326,500	26,357,400	29,887,500
Excess (deficiency) in revenues	1,134,700	(4,896,200)	(8,426,300)
Percent	6	(19)	(28)

In addition to revenues from the sale of hydro-peaking power to be made under the subject contract and other sales of such peaking power, the above overall payout studies include revenues and related costs for sales to be made under rate schedule A to (preference) customers. These customers will be served largely from the systems of power companies with which SPA has or is negotiating wheeling and firming-up contracts, and from the transmission systems of the generation and transmission (G. and T.) cooperatives to be leased by SPA. (Appendix B attached gives a detailed description of SPA's proposed system and operations.)

Contract revenues versus cost of service: SPA has now submitted 6 studies comparing the contract revenues, averaged over the 30-year contract term, of $2,207,160 with the allocated cost of the service to be rendered under the subject contract, computed on different bases. These studies show annual costs allocated to this load ranging from $1,817,000 to $2,283,000, depending on the allocation method used and the assumptions made. SPA employed two methods of allocating system costs to the subject load: (1) Using average system cost per total kilowatt-hour sold, firm and secondary, and (2) assigning costs to capacity as well as energy. The first method is believed to be unrealistic and not defensible on any grounds because the same costs are imputed to secondary energy as to firm. SPA's second method (demand and energy) shows the following results:

	Cost	Amount revenues exceed costs
Revenues: 30-year average, firm and secondary energy	$2,207,160
Costs:
(a) 5 interconnected projects constructed or under construction, initial generating units only [1]	2,154,000	$53,160
(b) 8 interconnected projects expected by 1958, initial generating units only [2]	2,283,000	(75,840)
(c) Same as (b) except includes added generating units deemed necessary by 1958	[3] 2,100,000	107,160

[1] Denison, Norfork, Bull Shoals, Fort Gibson, and Tenkiller Ferry.

[2] Same as (a) above plus Table Rock, Dardanelle, and Short Mountain. SPA expects 4 additional projects by 1958 but they will be isolated and the power disposed of separately.

[3] This figure is lower than that of (b) because the allocated cost of the dam and reservoir is distributed over a greater number of kilowatts.

The above comparisons also are not believed to be valid because current costs are compared with the average revenues expected over the 30-year contract term. These average revenues include the effect of the periodic rate increases provided by the contract. The average revenues for the initial 5-year period will be only $2,052,000. This is less than any of SPA's allocated costs shown above. The comparison with initial revenues is believed to be the proper comparison (instead of with average revenues) because there is no assurance that the contract will continue for the full 30-year term. Furthermore, SPA claims that the periodic increases in the rates to Arkansas Power are to cover future increases in costs. Presently estimated costs, therefore, should be compared only with the initial rates. Thus, by SPA's own figures, the contract revenues will be less than cost.

The above studies are based on SPA's revised allocations of project costs to power and on the amortization of such costs in 50 years. SPA has allocated to power, however, only the incremental costs of adding power to flood control (and navigation) projects.

A staff study, using the allocations of project costs to power considered appropriate by the Bureau of Power and making certain other adjustments to SPA's studies, shows the allocated cost of the service to be rendered under the subject contract to be $2,857,500 per year or $805,500 (39 percent) in excess of the initial contract revenues.

[2] The Bureau of Power, in its memorandum for the Commission, points out that the instrumental method might also be appropriate for Tenkiller Ferry, but that the differences are relatively small.

Cost of service under rate A: Staff computations, using the data contained in SPA's overall payout study, but reflecting SPA's incremental allocations of project costs to power, show the allocated cost of service to purchasers served under SPA's rate schedule A (sales to preference customers) to be approximately 7.03 mills per kilowatt-hour at the load factor of the rate A customers assumed by SPA. This compares with the average revenue of 5.46 mills per kilowatt-hour under rate A at the same load factor. Allocating the project costs in the manner deemed proper by the Bureau of Power results in a cost of service to rate A customers of approximately 7.92 mills per kilowatt-hour.

SPA claims that if rate A is increased as much as a mill or more it will be priced out of the market. Considerable difficulties are, therefore, anticipated when rate A comes up for review in the near future. (Rate A approval expires February 13, 1953.) It would, therefore, appear to be imperative at this time to insure that any long-term rates, such as those contained in the subject contract, are not below cost, because any deficiency therein may require a further increase to the rate A (preference) customers.

SPA's position that increasing the portion of the project costs allocated to power will price it out of the market is a very vital question, and it must be settled in the near future before the review date of all of SPA's other rates. It certainly is too important to attempt to settle in the limited time available for the study of the subject contract. There is reason to believe there may be factors which contribute to SPA's unfavorable position other than the allocation of project costs, and it is believed that it would be inadvisable to use SPA's proposed allocations of project costs at this time as a basis for the long-term approval of the subject rates at least until the matter can be thoroughly studied.

Thirty-year contract term with no provision for review of rates

The contract is for 30 years with no provision for the review of rates at any time. The firm rate is increased 5 percent every 10 years. (The secondary rate is increased at 5, 15, and 20 years.) SPA claims these increases will take care of possible future increases in cost. It is understood that Reynolds insisted that the rates not be subject to review due to its financing requirements.

The bulk of the project and transmission investments remain for the future. Only 3 projects costing $100 million are now producing power, out of 12 projects forecast for 1958 costing over $775 million. Further, whereas the rates to Arkansas Power are not reviewable under the contract, that company is protected since its rates, including those it charges Reynolds, are subject to State regulation. Also, if SPA's costs do increase, the rates to other customers receiving the same class of service would necessarily increase, with resulting discrimination, and any deficiencies of the contract rates would undoubtedly increase the burden on preference customers.

At the conference of March 10, Mr. Wright, Administrator for SPA, stated that he was not surprised at the staff's concern over this matter, and agreed that a tentative rate was as suitable here as it had been in other cases but he was unable to obtain such a concession—that "maybe you are just staying with it longer than I."

Lower than other SPA rates

SPA charges other utilities $1.15 per month ($13.80 per year) per kilowatt of demand and 1.25 mills per kilowatt-hour for similar firm service, and is negotiating other contracts with these same rates. This is an average price of 7 mills per kilowatt-hour at the load factor of the deliveries of firm power to Arkansas Power, which compares with the average firm rate of 5.2 mills per kilowatt-hour (first 10 years) to Arkansas Power under the subject contract. Rate schedule A for service at the same load factor averages 6.75 mills per kilowatt-hour. The subject rate would, therefore, appear to be unduly discriminatory in favor of Arkansas Power (and Reynolds).

Reynolds not a preference customer

The Flood Control Act of 1944 requires preference be given to public bodies and cooperatives in the sale of power. Reynolds, to which the deliveries to Arkansas Power are largely dedicated, is neither. SPA defends the diversion of such a large block of power (150,000 kilowatt) to a nonpreference customer on the Nation's current need for aluminum. A letter has been received from the Defense Production Administration verifying this need. The question still remains however whether such a large block of power can be so diverted legally without a modification of the Flood Control Act. There is also question whether it is in the public interest to divert this large block of public power for use by one private corporation for private gain. Further, SPA has made no showing that the low rate it proposes to charge Arkansas Power will result in a saving to the Government in its purchases of aluminum from Reynolds.

First refusal of secondary energy

Arkansas Power is given first refusal on SPA's secondary energy next to SPA's present commitment to Texas Power & Light Co. and after SPA's own uses in its interconnected system, yet there is no reciprocal obligation on Arkansas Power to take the energy when offered. It is believed Arkansas Power should be so obligated, or that the rate should be made higher to avoid discriminating against other customers also purchasing secondary energy.

SPA claims it is not concerned with whether Arkansas Power takes secondary energy or not because it is negotiating a contract with 12 power companies similar to the Oklahoma companies' contract wherein they are obligated to take all power and energy for which SPA has no other market. This contract, however, is still not a fact and may never be consummated.

Apparent subsidy to Reynolds

When Reynolds is not taking power, or if Reynolds cancels, the firm rate to Arkansas Power will be increased 1 mill per kilowatt-hour on the number of kilowatt-hours Reynolds' take is below 360 million kilowatt-hours per year (but not to exceed $180,000 per year on the 360 million kilowatt-hours of firm energy sold Arkansas Power). If the higher rate is proper, then the lower rate applicable when Reynolds is taking power would appear to be a subsidy to Reynolds. SPA views the difference as the cost to Arkansas Power of transmitting the power to Reynolds, which it does not bear when Reynolds is shut down. Reynolds however is a customer of Arkansas Power and not of SPA, and whether or not Reynolds operates has no effect on SPA costs.

Margin to Arkansas Power

The 150,000 kilowatts and 360 million kilowatt-hours per year of firm power Arkansas Power will purchase from SPA will cost $1,872,000 per year (first 10 years). Arkansas Power will charge Reynolds from $2,232,000 to $2,247,000 per year for 110,000 kilowatts and the same 360 million kilowatt-hours during the first 10 years. The 40,000 kilowatts it retains has a value, at SPA's rate of $1.15 per kilowatt per month, of $552,000 per year. This results in a total average marking to Arkansas Power of approximately $919,500 yer year to be realized on the firm power. SPA estimates it will sell Arkansas Power an average of 144 million kilowatt-hours per year of secondary energy for which it will charge 1.25 mills per kilowatt-hour (first 5 years) and 1.50 mills per kilowatt-hour (second 5 years). Arkansas Power will receive an average of 2.526 mills per kilowatt-hour from Reynolds for this same energy, which is a further margin to Arkansas Power of $165,700 per year, or a total margin of $1,085,200 per year (71.5 percent) to cover losses and the cost of transmitting the power to Reynolds, which would appear to be quite substantial considering the services to be rendered. In addition it must be presumed Arkansas Power will make a profit on the additional (off-peak) energy it will sell to Reynolds.

It is understood the Bureau of Power is making a study of the overall value of the contract to Arkansas Power which will be included in a memorandum for the Commission on the subject contract.

Comparison of contract revenues with power values

The subject contract is premised on the belief that Reynolds cannot pay more than approximately 4 mills per kilowat-hour (for 99 percent load factor power)—that if the rate were any higher it would locate on the Texas gulf coast. Thus, SPA is competing in effect, with power values where cheap natural gas is available and not with the power values of its own area which were used in determining the feasibility of the various projects involved.

The Bureau of Power, in its memorandum for the Commission on these matters, estimates the present power values to Arkansas Power as $15.52 per kilowatt per year and 1.34 mills per kilowatt-hour (using present gas costs of about 11 cents per million B. t. u. Fuel costs at new plants may be substantially higher). These applied to the 150,000 kilowatts and 360 million kilowatt-hours per year of firm power and to the 144 million kilowatt-hours of secondary energy SPA estimates it will sell to Arkansas Power result in a power value of $3,003,000 per year. This compares with the contract revenues of $2,052,000. This further emphasizes the question of whether the sale of such a large block of public power by SPA for private use, at the low rate proposed, is in the public interest, particularly in view of the fact that SPA shows in its overall payout study an estimated potential market by 1958 of 158,400 kilowatts in additional preference customers over and above those included in its study.

Conclusions

In view of the foregoing the staff can see no proper basis for recommending approval of the rates and charges to Arkansas Power contained in the subject contract, and recommends that they be disapproved.

APPENDIX A—DESCRIPTION OF CONTRACT

TERM

The contract is for 30 years from the commencement of service with Reynolds being permitted to cancel after 15 years on 1 year's notice. If Reynolds cancels after 15 years, or the contract is terminated at any time by reason of default, service to Arkansas Power will terminate as soon as it can procure an additional 40,000 kilowatts of capacity, but not sooner than 2 years nor later than 5.

SALES BY SPA TO ARKANSAS POWER

Under article I of the contract, SPA will sell to Arkansas Power 150,000 kilowatts and 30 million kilowatt-hours per month (360 million kilowatt-hours per year) of firm peaking power and energy and up to 25 million kilowatt-hours per month (300 million kilowatt-hours per year) of secondary energy. Arkansas Power has first priority on SPA's secondary energy (up to 25 million kilowatt-hours per month) in excess of SPA's present commitment to Texas Power & Light Co. (which takes half the output of Denison) and SPA's own uses on its interconnected system, but with no corresponding obligation to take the energy.

Arkansas Power must pay for the full 30 million kilowatt-hours per month (firm) regardless of its actual take, which is permitted to vary from 22,500,000 to 37,500,000 kilowatts per month, if agreeable to SPA, with the total excess or deficit not to exceed 60 million kilowatt-hours at any one time. (If water is spilled while Arkansas Power has energy in storage, it will be charged to Arkansas.)

The rates provided for the sale of power to Arkansas Power are briefly as follows:

	Contract years
	1–5	6–10	11–15	16–20	21–30
	Mills per kilowatt-hour
Firm power, per month:
1st 22,000,000 kilowatt-hours	6.00	6.00	6.30	6.30	6.6150
Next 8,000,000 kilowatt-hours	3.00	3.00	3.15	3.15	3.3075
Average of above	5.20	5.20	5.46	5.46	5.7330
Secondary energy	1.25	1.50	1.50	1.75	2.00

The above rate for firm power results in a fixed charge of $156,000 per month ($1,872,000 per year) for the first 10 years and averages $163,930 per month ($1,967,160 per year) over the 30-year period of 5.46 mills per kilowatt-hour. Expressed on a kilowatt-year basis, the firm-power rate is $12.48 per kilowatt-year (including 2,400 kilowatt-hours per kilowatt) for the first 10 years, and averages $13.11 per kilowatt-year over the 30-year period.

If Reynolds takes less than 360 million kilowatt-hours per year of firm energy from Arkansas Power, the firm rate to Arkansas Power will be increased 1 mill per kilowatt-hour for a number of kilowatt-hours equal to the amount Reynolds' take is below 360 million kilowatt-hours, but not to exceed $180,000 per year.

ARKANSAS POWER'S SALE TO REYNOLDS

Under article II of the contract, Arkansas Power will sell 110,000 kilowatts of high-load factor firm power to Reynolds (the contract indicates 80 million kilowatt-hours per month will be sold to Reynolds, or a load factor of 99.6 percent) for use in a proposed new aluminum plant, reported as to be located near Arkadelphia, Ark.

The rate to be paid by Reynolds to Arkansas Power is very complex. When Reynolds is producing aluminum, the rate is $2,232,000 per year for the 100,000 kilowatts and 360 million kilowatt-hours per year with certain increases after the 5th year. Additional energy is charged for at 2.25 mills for the first year with upward adjustments each year through the 15th (when it reaches 3.112 mills per kilowatt-hour). After the 15th year, Arkansas Power must purchase secondary energy from the Government when available at Reynolds' request, for which Arkansas Power will charge Reynolds 2.50 mills per kilowatt-hour for the 15th to 20th year and 2.625 mills for the 21st to 30th year. The rate for all additional energy is 2.25 mills per kilowatt-hour for the 16th to 30th year plus a fuel adjustment.

When Reynolds is not producing aluminum, the rate for all energy is 5.2 mills per kilowatt-hour.

During the first 5 years, Reynolds must take or pay for not less than 3.36 billion kilowatt-hours (70 percent load factor), and not less than 4.8 billion kilowatt-hours during any subsequent consecutive 10 years (50 percent load factor). Further, when Reynolds is producing aluminum, Reynolds shall take or pay for at least 30 million kilowatt-hours per month (37 percent load factor), the same number of kilowatt-hours Arkansas Power is obligated to take from SPA. Reynolds may shut down at any time but may not restart within 1 year without being rebilled for an amount equal to the total amounts Arkansas Power paid the Government for power under this contract during such period of shutdown.

Also Reynolds may procure fuel for Arkansas Power in the amounts required for the delivery of steam-produced energy under the contract, with certain restrictions, and Arkansas Power will charge Reynolds only 0.63 mill per kilowatt-hour for conversion to electric energy and transmission to Reynolds. After the 15th year, if the total average rate to Reynolds exceeds 4 mills per kilowatt-hour for 3 months, Reynolds may construct a plant of its own to generate that portion of its energy not furnished Arkansas Power by the Government and Arkansas Power must transmit the energy for Reynolds at an agreed upon price not to exceed 0.5 mill per kilowatt-hour per 50 miles.

APPENDIX B—SPA'S PROPOSED SYSTEM AND OPERATIONS

SPA anticipates 12 projects will be in operation by 1958 for which it will be the marketing agent. (The Corps of Engineers is the construction agency.) The Denison, Norfork, and Narrows projects are now producing power. Bull Shoals, Whitney, Fort Gibson, Tenkiller Ferry, and Blakely Mountain are in advanced stages of construction. The balance, Table Rock, Keystone, Dardanelle, and Short Mountain, have been authorized but no funds have been appropriated for their construction. A description of the circumstances of studies and authorizations of the projects is included in the Bureau of Power's memorandum on these matters.

SPA anticipates that eight of the projects will be interconnected through its back bone transmission line (nearly completed) extending from the Denison project on the Texas-Oklahoma border to the Norfork project in north central Arkansas. The remaining four, Narrows, Whitney, Blakely Mountain, and Keystone, are expected to remain isolated and their output disposed of separately under individual special contracts. (Initially, in its overall payout study, SPA had included Keystone in the interconnected projects, but included no transmission facilities to connect it to the backbone line.)

In this connection it was pointed out at the conference of March 10, 1952, by the corps that the cost estimates on the Keystone, Dardanelle, and Short Mountain projects are very questionable, and that these projects are integrally related to other projects in the plan of improvement of the Arkansas River for navigation and other purposes and can be justified only if the entire plan is carried out. The corps further pointed out that because of the very low ratio of total benefits to total cost (1.05:1) for the overall development, they question whether it will be initiated in the near future if at all.

In response to a question by the corps at this conference as to why the last three projects were selected, Mr. Wright, SPA Administrator, stated they were selected as the result of studies made by SPA and after discussions with SPA's customers (but not with the corps, the constructing agency).

SPA has entered into contracts with six generation and transmission (G. and T.) cooperatives to lease all or a portion of extensive transmission networks to be constructed by these cooperatives from REA funds, estimated by SPA to cost some $34,500,000, and to purchase the entire output of four steam-electric plants totaling 115,000 kilowatts to firm up a portion of its hydropower, also to be constructed by the G. and T. cooperatives from REA funds. Except in one case, SPA will sell firmed-up power from these networks to the member cooperatives and other SPA customers at SPA's standard rate schedule A. The exception is the Northwestern Electric Cooperative which will build a 252-mile 154-kilovolt line from the Bull Shoals project in north central Arkansas to its proposed 40,000-kilowatt steam plant to be located at Missouri City, northwest of Kansas City, Mo. SPA will sell to the cooperative 40,000 kilowatts at the steam plant site and the cooperative will in this case distribute the power to its member cooperatives at its own expense.

SPA has a contract with a seventh G. and T. cooperative (the M. & A. Electric Cooperative). This cooperative will also construct a transmission grid and a 20,000-kilowatt steam plant but SPA will neither lease the lines nor purchase the output of the plant, but will sell a 5,000-kilowatt block of power (2,000 kilowatts initially) to the cooperative at rate A and pay the cooperative 1.25 mills per kilowatt-hour to wheel the power to the member cooperatives. (SPA will buy surplus steam-generated energy from the cooperative if needed by SPA however.)

The balance of SPA's (hydro) power will be disposed of as peaking power to the power companies in the area under the subject contract, under contracts approved as to rates by the Commission to February 13, 1953, and under a contract still under negotiation. Under the latter two contracts, the companies will retain a portion of the power and wheel the balance, firm it up, and deliver the firmed-up power to SPA customers for the account of SPA.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHUDOFF].

Mr. CHUDOFF. Mr. Speaker, I came over here this morning to listen to the debate. I had not expected to participate in it and I hope I will not take too much of your time.

Mr. Speaker, instead of trying to blame anybody for this situation we ought to be honest with ourselves and try to work this thing out so that nobody will get hurt. It is true that the gentleman from North Carolina and myself have gone into this aluminum company contract numerous times over the past year and a half. I believe we agree there is nothing that we can do about decreasing or increasing the rates to the Reynolds Metals Co. However, the RECORD should show at the time this contract was entered into by the previous administration, aluminum was in very short supply in the Nation. We had a great defense problem and just like many other subdivisions of Government that wished to make it attractive to companies to come into a particular area to build manufacturing plants, this contract was entered into with Reynolds.

One of the reasons why the Reynolds Metals Co. came into the area of the Southwest Power Administration was because they could get power at a lower rate and we in turn could have our aluminum produced that we needed very badly, and, in addition, it put a lot of people to work. Just because we cannot review that contract, I cannot see why we have to penalize the farmers and little people in the southwest area.

I have nothing to gain by this bill. I am from Philadelphia where we do not have a power problem. In all sincerity, in all honesty to the people of Arkansas and Oklahoma, we ought to agree on this matter. This is not the first subsidy that the Government ever gave. We had a big fight about subsidizing airlines yesterday. We subsidize many things. This power is absolutely necessary to the economy of the Southwest and I think we ought to go along with this bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLE].

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with my colleague, the ranking minority member the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER], in urging that this rule be adopted. This, as has already been demonstrated, is, of course, a very complicated matter. When the bill was voted out, some members on the minority side of the Public Works Committee expressed some concern about it, and we worked out some amendments which will be offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to which those primarily interested in this legislation have no objection and which I will not oppose. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] authorized me to say, in his absence from the floor, that with the adoption of those amendments he would have no objection to this legislation. That statement is also true with regard to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCGREGOR], the next ranking member of the minority of the Committee on Public Works. So, we are coming along here late in this session, and I will not take any more time on the rule. I hope the rule is adopted and that we will proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MILLER of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MILLER of New York. I was just going to ask the gentleman this: As I understood the debate so far this morning, this is for a freezing of the REA and preferential rates for a period of 11 months; is that correct?

Mr. ENGLE. That is correct.

Mr. MILLER of New York. Yet the assertion has been made here that the real evil in the situation and the real cause of the present predicament is that this power allocated to Arkansas Light & Power and Reynolds Aluminum is for a period of 30 years. Now, if that is the real cause of the difficulty, we certainly are not going to be in any different shape 11 months from today than we are today. In other words, with a power freeze for 30 years for Reynolds Aluminum and this freeze for 11 months, we will be back every year with this situation or meet it now.

Mr. ENGLE. I did not make that statement.

Mr. CHELF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLE. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CHELF. I carry no brief for the Reynolds Metals & Aluminum Co., but I have been told—and I hope the gentleman will correct me if I need correction—that this contract was negotiated with Reynolds Metals on the recommendation and on the suggestion of the Office of Defense Mobilization at a time when we were in the Korean war and when there was a critical shortage of aluminum and all other metals. Is that true? Because we ought to be fair about this matter. I want the RECORD straight. I do not want politics in this debate.

Mr. ENGLE. Well, I think it is, and, of course, the fact that Reynolds Aluminum gets a large piece of this power has some significant effect on the whole problem. We expect, and what we are asking to do is to freeze the situation until June 30 next year. In the interim we will try to work the thing out with the Department of the Interior in order to come to a fair conclusion on it.

Mr. CHELF. It is my understanding that these rates will be increased 40 percent.

Mr. ENGLE. The proposal is to increase the rates on preference customers from 5.5 mills to about 7.7 mills.

Mr. CHELF. If this has been declared a disaster area, the people are unemployed and the farmers are not able to pay operating expenses, or making anything, if they cannot pay the regular rates now, how can they pay a 40-percent increase? Down home we have a heart. If a man owes a debt and through no fault of his own, he is in financial difficulty, we give him a break. We try to get him up on his feet so that he can make it. From what I have heard here the proponents have made a case.

Mr. ENGLE. The gentleman makes a very fine argument.

Mr. CHELF. Thank you, my colleague. I am going to vote for it.

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGLE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BECKER. The gentleman mentioned a couple of minutes ago that two members of the Committee on Public Works had agreed to some amendments to this bill.

Mr. ENGLE. No; I did not mean to say that they agreed in behalf of the Committee on Public Works.

Mr. BECKER. The amendments the gentleman was going to offer.

Mr. ENGLE. What I said was that they say they will not oppose the bill if these amendments are adopted.

Mr. BECKER. I just wanted to make the RECORD clear that this bill was not in the Public Works Committee.

Mr. ENGLE. Maybe I should clear that up.

Mr. BECKER. I just wanted to make that clear, that is all.

Mr. ENGLE. The House Public Works Committee has an interest in this matter because these projects were built by the Army engineers. They were not built by the Bureau of Reclamation. The bill got into our committee because the bill, as it came over from the Senate, froze the power rates of all Federal power throughout the whole Nation. Now, these specific projects were built under the Army engineers authorization, which came out of the gentleman's committee, explaining, of course, the interest of the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. DONDERO, and some others. They did not presume to act for the Public Works Committee. I want to make that clear.

Mr. BECKER. And I wanted to make that clear, too.

Mr. ENGLE. What they said was, with those amendments, they personally would not oppose this legislation.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, we are all, friends of the REA, but as I understand this issue, from the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONAS] who knows the facts and speaks with authority, the trouble now is that the Southwestern Power Administration, is not making enough money so they can continue to supply the needs of the REA customers. That is unfortunate. We should in some way assist them. There is no one who wants to see them lose money or be deprived of power.

But it appears that the contract which was entered into some years ago and which gives the Reynolds company a subsidy of $900,000 a year—and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHUDOFF] might make note of that figure, even if he does come from Philadelphia, because it is quite a sum out in the country—that contract was made by a previous administration, by Mr. Chapman.

The answer for the making of that contract and which he gives in substance is, "I do not see any reason why REA customers should be deprived of power and made to suffer." I do not either, except that Chapman got them into that hole. Then the gentleman in effect said, "Well, the contract was made during the war," and another gentleman says, "During the Korean War, and those had to be the terms." Who shoved us into the Korean War? Was it not Truman? Republicans did not have anything to do with that. Nor can you lay that to the private power companies. That charge will not wash out. One reason for the plight of the REA customers may be that costs have gone up. Another might be lack of good management.

Another reason for the contract he gives is—and I do not get the hook-up between the two, because if it was during the war then there was no unemployment—but he said it was to give jobs. Well, that doesn't make sense, and that is all there is to his argument.

The whole situation gets back to the fact that the Truman administration or Mr. Chapman stuck us with the contract and it resulted in a whale of a big subsidy every year to the Reynolds private industry which some would like to liquidate.

Along the same line, as mentioned by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONAS], for months the subcommittees of the Committee on Government Operations—not all of them, oh, no; but one or two—have been going under the direction of or being directed by Socialists, or former employees in the Department of the Interior, who either resigned because they could not stand the return to sound business methods or were kicked out. They have been directing the activities of this subcommittee. The parent committee, that is the Committee on Government Operations, has had $995,000 for investigations. They asked for $100,000 more, but that went out on a point of order. But they had within $5,000 of a million dollars, a large part of which, in my opinion, as shown by their investigations and hearings they have been using deliberately and with skill, and without regard to the facts, to create and disseminate at the taxpayers' expense propaganda against private enterprise. That is the picture, and, like it or not, that is the way it is. They have been shoving along these reports at this late date, in the last week or two, when there is no sufficient opportunity for us to answer.

Not more than 2 hours ago I had a call from the Department of the Interior—and I was not on that particular committee as a regular member—when they said, in substance, "We just received a a copy of a report which reflects upon our integrity and we would like to answer. Will you make an effort to get time for us to answer?"

I said, "Bless your soul, the hearings, the time for putting in the report, were closed yesterday noon." They gave us all of 24 hours, this generous committee did, to file answers to reports which are based upon the stenographer's minutes where there was no printed record. How do you like it? And what do you think of that kind of treatment?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SAYLOR) there were—ayes 84, noes 72.

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 219, nays 126, not voting 87, as follows:

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

IMPORTATION OF SHOE LATHES

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. REED], the leader of the Republican delegation in the House and former chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, is the author of the bill (H. R. 10177) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930 to provide that certain lathes used for shoe last roughing or for shoe last finishing may be imported into the United States free of duty.

I ask unanimous consent that that bill be taken from the Speaker's desk, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Line 12, after "act", insert "and prior to the expiration of 2 years after such date."

After line 12, insert:

"Section 313 (b) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, is amended by inserting after 'linseed oil,' wherever it appears the following: 'or printing papers, coated or uncoated'."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to suspend for 2 years the import duties on certain lathes used for shoe last roughing or for shoe last finishing, and to permit substitution for drawback purposes in the case of printing papers."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. COLE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that this is a very important bill to industry and to labor. It means a great deal to this country. I worked very hard on this bill. The committee has been very considerate, and I want to congratulate the committee and express my appreciation of their efforts in getting the bill to the point where it is now.

I regret that this objection has been made. The parliamentary inquiry which I wish to direct to the Chair is this: Is there any device by which I can get this bill up and give the House a chance to vote on it for the benefit of industry in many States and for labor in many States?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is compelled to say to the gentleman that we would have to explore other avenues a little further.

RATES CHARGED PUBLIC BODIES AND COOPERATIVES FOR ELECTRIC POWER GENERATED AT FEDERAL PROJECTS

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3338) relating to rates charged to public bodies and cooperatives for electric power generated at Federal projects.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3338, with Mr. COOPER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this legislation, simply stated, is to put into effect a moratorium on a proposed rate increase in the Southwestern Power Administration until June 30, 1957, or something in the neighborhood of 11 months.

I should like to deal briefly with the background of this legislation and then discuss the bill itself. The southwestern power market area, in which the Southwestern Power Administration is located, includes parts of six States—Arkansas, Kansas, Louisiana, Missouri, Oklahoma, and Texas. The waterpower projects to which this legislation relates are seven integrated projects in the system—Denison, Norfork, Bull Shoals, Fort Gibson, Tenkiller Ferry, Blakely Mountain, and Table Rock. The first of these projects was initiated in 1945. I mean by that the first of these projects was put into operation in 1945 and from time to time other of the projects have been completed and added to the system.

When the first project was put into operation it became necessary, of course, for the Interior Department to establish the power rates, because under the 1944 Flood Control Act, power generated at all public projects, whether built by the Army Engineers or the Bureau of Reclamation, is turned over to the Department of the Interior as the marketing agency. So in 1946 certain rates were established with reference to the sale of power in the Southwestern Power Administration, and the Federal Power Commission approved those rates for a period of 6 years, and since that time has given short extensions from time to time.

After the project was fairly well on its way the Interior Department made a study of the sufficiency of the rates to meet the repayment costs of the project. It was discovered that the Army engineers had underestimated the cost of these projects some 80 percent. We hear a great deal around here about the Bureau of Reclamation in many instances underestimating the cost of projects.

These projects were underestimated by 80 percent by the construction agency which was the Corps of Engineers. They estimated the total cost at $199.8 million with $109.2 million allocated to power, when, as a matter of fact, the project will finally cost $357.6 million with $200.2 million allocated to power. In other words, instead of $109 million allocated to power, which has to be repaid, the amount of actual cost is just a fraction over $200 million. Of course, that made a significant difference with reference to whether or not the rates were entirely adequate, and in the light of those facts, the Department of the Interior started to look the situation over.

There are three groups of power customers in that area—the rural electric cooperatives, the Reynolds Aluminum Co. and the private power companies. The rate established on the aluminum company's contract will result in a deficit so far as that contract repaying its actual cost over a period of 30 years that the contract runs, plus the additional 20 years under which all these programs pay out, of something like $27 million. The deficit on the private power contracts will run something like $8½ million. The payments the rural electric co-ops were able to make, as pointed out by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDMUNDSON] up to 1954 were sufficient to pay the interest and a substantial sum on the capital cost. Some $4 million was paid up until that time. But, in 1955, there was a deficit, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOW] pointed out, of something like $2 million. That resulted from two things. In the first place, they completed some other projects which added to the capital cost and, of course, increased the amount of interest due the Federal Government. The interest went up from something less than $1 million to $2½ million. And there was in 1953 an additional capital cost of about $63 million. When that hit them plus this water shortage and the drought, they simply have fallen behind in these recent years. When you do not get any water, you do not have any water to fill a reservoir. When there is no water to fill a reservoir, there is no water to run through the powerhouse. When there is no water to run through the powerhouse, there is no power to sell, and if the droughts are bad enough, the farmers cannot buy what power there is. These people are in a distressed area as declared by the President of the United States.

In the light of all that, what did the Department of the Interior propose? They came up here with a proposal that the power rates charged against the rural electrical co-ops should be increased by 40 percent from 5.5 mills to 7.7 mills. It must be remembered that the Reynolds Electric Co. gets its power in various categories. As you know, this power business is very complicated—from a low rate of 1¼ mills to a higher rate of 7.6 mills and it can be argued their average rate and the average rate of the private utilities is about 2.8 mills. The Department of the Interior came up here with the recommendation that the rates be increased on the rural electric co-ops. A bill was immediately introduced in the other body to not only freeze the rates of the Southwest Power Administration, but to prevent the increase of any rates of power disposed of by the Federal agencies throughout the United States. Very complete hearings were held on that subject matter in the other body, by a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Public Works joined by a subcommittee from the Senate Committee on the Interior, a subcommittee of the House Committee on the Interior and Insular Affairs, and a subcommittee of the Committee on Public Works.

The Senate bill was voted out by the Senate and was passed, and when the bill came over to our side we held hearings on it and we changed it. We adopted three amendments to the Senate bill, substantive amendments.

The first amendment we adopted limited the operation of the bill so far as the rate moratorium was concerned to the Southwestern Power Administration area itself, the only one really in trouble with respect to this power rate problem.

Then we added a second amendment which said that the Federal Government in fixing the rates in the Southwestern Power area should use the incremental method of establishing the cost of the power facilities. This simply means that nothing is charged for the building of the dam, the only charge being made for the improvements necessary to produce power. The dam had to be built anyway; in other words, the incremental or additional cost added to the flood feature of the dam. We felt that was a fair base inasmuch as it was the method used in fixing the rate for the power contract with the private utility company and the Reynolds Aluminum Co., and by Congress itself in two of these projects in the Southwestern Power area.

The third amendment which the committee added was that the Secretary of the Interior be authorized and directed to renegotiate these other contracts for the purpose of increasing their rates and in order that future rate revisions shall be spread equitably among all of the customers of the Southwestern Power Administration. In other words, our bill presupposes that there is going to have to be some kind of power rate increase in this area. We did not dispute that, and those of us in the Far West who believe in these greater water and power projects believe that it is necessary for these projects to pay the costs allocated to power and repay interest on the power investment to the Federal Treasury. So we expect that these rates are going to go up.

We wanted the moratorium until the first of July of this coming year in order that the Interior Department could implement these instructions that we gave in the two new added sections, that is, sections 2 and 3.

Sections 2 and 3 caused some discussion. I did not suppose that anybody would object to applying the same rule to the rural electric cooperatives with reference to the method of determining costs attributable to power as were applied to the Reynolds Metals contract and the private power contracts; I did not suppose there would be any objection to that; if the incremental method was a good idea, and it has been applied by Congress in two projects in that area, it ought to be justified here. This was a theory that could be applied to the whole area on the ground that the dams were going to be built anyway. Therefore we thought the incremental method was a fair method to authorize them to use in this particular section.

But the Interior Department has come up with a different system and one on which there is general agency agreement. So when it was suggested that we take the section out I consulted with gentlemen on my side of the aisle as well as on the other side of the aisle who were interested in this particular legislation, and since they saw no reason for forcing this matter now, provided that section 1 of the bill is retained giving the moratorium, that we drop section 2 and go ahead and study the matters in that section later.

The same thing is true with reference to section 3, which is the matter of contract renegotiation. Some question was raised about the Reynolds contract. I know, as any lawyer knows, that you cannot abridge the terms of an existing contract; the Constitution of the United States stops that, and the Constitution is a pretty sturdy document. On the other hand, there was some concern that the direction in the bill could be regarded as a direction to the Interior Department to search out methods of finding some way of rejecting these contracts and subjecting them to renegotiation; so it was suggested that the third section be dropped out. Again I talked with those primarily interested in the bill on the subject of the proposed moratorium, and we are perfectly willing to have section 3 go over until the next session.

So the bill which will come before you, if these two amendments are adopted, or to put the case the other way, since they are amendments adopted by the committee, if the amendments are turned down, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania will urge when this matter comes up, the bill on which you will be asked to vote finally will be a bill creating a moratorium on an increase of these power rates in the Southwestern Power area until June 30 of next year, and that is all.

In the interim we propose to study these other matters, both with reference to what is the proper method of allocating cost in this area in connection with the Interior Department and the people primarily concerned, and as a matter of national policy, and, in addition, to explore the matter the gentleman from North Carolina mentioned in his discussion on the rule; and also what is the actual situation with reference to the renegotiation of some of these contracts held by private concerns that are now getting a good low-cost ride in a couple of instances, 2 of them to the extent of about $8½ million a year.

What is the justification, then, for this moratorium? The justification is the drought condition. This is a case of extreme hardship. Farmers that have no water cannot create any power to sell in order to get revenue and farmers whose lands are dry will not be able to buy power. And adding to the rates would only be adding to the deficits. That deficit is going to be added at the end of this contract period anyway. Secondly, the REA should not be picked out for preferential consideration with reference to the raising of rates. Others should be considered in that connection, too, and time will permit that to be done. The basis of cost allocation should be given some study in order that when the actual rate increase is arrived at, whether it is 2.2 mills or 1.9 mills or less than that, it will be arrived at on the basis of an appropriate allocation of cost, determined in this instance by the Congress of the United States. These other consumers should be brought in as early as can legally be done in order that there may be a fair sharing of this increased cost of 80 percent, which is the basic reason for the difficulty in which the Southwestern Power Administration now finds itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. COOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 3338) relating to rates charged to public bodies and cooperatives for electric power generated at Federal projects, had come to no resolution thereon.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution (H. Res. 648).

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the bill H. R. 12350, with the Senate amendments thereto, be, and the same is hereby taken from the Speaker's table; that the House further insists on disagreement to the Senate amendments and agrees to the further conference requested by the Senate, and the Speaker shall immediately appoint the conferees without intervening motion.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no request for a second.

The question is on suspending the rules and passing the resolution.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution was passed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as conferees on the part of the House: Messrs. CANNON, KIRWAN, GARY, TABER, and PHILLIPS.

RATES CHARGED FOR ELECTRIC POWER

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 3338) relating to rates charged to public bodies and cooperatives for electric power generated at Federal projects.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 3338, with Mr. COOPER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLE], chairman of our committee, has referred to this bill as a moratorium. I think it could be more properly referred to as a coroner's inquest. The body is being examined to try to determine whether or not the corpse that is being viewed was killed by an injection given by a former administration; and, with all due deference to the gentleman from California, everything that he said leads me to the conclusion that try as you will to bring up any other issue, the embalming fluid that is found in the veins of this corpse was placed there by Oscar Chapman in 1952.

In 1952 Mr. Chapman entered into a contract, which the Department of Justice has stated cannot be broken, for 30 years, and instead of providing that in case there was an increase in cost the contract could be opened and renegotiated to reflect the cost, this contract contained no such provision whatsoever.

Now, I was interested in the comments of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHUDOFF] when he spoke on the rule. He said that the pressing need for this contract in January 1952 was the fact that we were engaged in the Korean war and that aluminum was in short supply, and that it was necessary to encourage aluminum companies to open up. Well, apparently Mr. Chapman and the prior administration must have expected a 30-year war, because there was no provision in this contract that at the end of hostilities there should be a reexamination.

Now, I listened very closely to the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLE], and he said that you should not blame the prior administration; you should not take them to task for this very unfair contract that they entered into in giving preference and giveaway of the Federal money to the Reynolds Aluminum Co. and to a private utility because the Army engineers had missed out on their estimate and that they had underestimated the cost of this project by 80 percent. Yet the prior administration, and particularly Mr. Chapman, did not take those figures into consideration when he entered into a power contract in 1952, that these dams would cost over 80 percent more than the original estimate. No; you cannot saddle this on the present Department of the Interior. This is the first time on the floor of this House that the public-power advocates have had to come in here and admit that their whole project fails.

This is what was done in the early stages of this bill. The Senate bill wanted to freeze all rates. Then when they ran into a buzz saw and found they could not get that, and could not get that out of our committee, they said. "We will try and take one little group; we will take the Southwest Power and plead for the little people down there; we will try and get them to be the guinea pig that will set a precedent for this House to follow in all of these matters that come up hereafter."

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAYLOR. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DONOVAN. Is the gentleman suggesting that he has some information that other projects are in trouble or will be in some serious trouble in the days and years to come?

Mr. SAYLOR. I certainly am. And if the gentleman had read some of these hearings he would have come to the conclusion that it is not just the Southwest Power Administration, but the Bonneville Power Administration and a number of these other public power units that are in trouble and that are going to be in trouble and will be in here on the same basis.

Mr. DONOVAN. They will be in here asking the taxpayers all over the land to make up what they are losing.

Mr. SAYLOR. They will be in here asking the taxpayers all over the land to make it up, yes. I was interested in the fact that my good friend the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDMONDSON] gave three stirring reasons why we should pass this bill. First, the rate is unfair. It is unfair. I concede it is unfair. But it is not unfair to the people who live in this area. It is unfair to the taxpayers of America because they are being asked to pick up the tab, to pay the bill, to underwrite this loss.

Sure, it is unfair. It is unfair not to the people in that area; it is unfair not to the people who live in these 6 States but to the people in the other 42 States of the Union who have to pay their own electric bill. It is unfair to people who are yet unborn to ask them to assume to pay for the lights that are being burned by the people down in that area today. Certainly the people in that area ought to pay their own light bills.

So the Department of the Interior is now coming in and asking the Congress to put into effect the provisions of the Flood Control Act and say that the prices charged for power that is sold are sufficient to return the Government's investment with interest.

The gentleman points out a third reason why we should allow this bill to pass. There is a severe drought in this area and the farmers are in dire circumstances. For the first time we now find that the trouble in that section of the Farm Belt is not because of Mr. Benson. This is the first time I have heard these people get up and say that the trouble in that farm area is not with Mr. Benson. Now we have been told that their trouble for 7 years has been a drought. Maybe Mr. Benson is not the man principally responsible for all of the shortages in that area.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the Members of this House to defeat this bill and to defeat it because if they do not, let me predict that in the days to come, in the next session and the sessions following, there will be other projects in trouble coming in here and they will be pointing to what this House did in connection with Southwest Power to help them out, and that therefore we ought to help out the others.

These people who advocate public power should expect their own people to pay their own bills. Everyone knows they have taken enough of the taxpayers' money, without asking other people who do not live in those areas to pay their bill for burning their electric lights and operating their refrigerators.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAYLOR. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Douglas Wright, who since the Southwestern Power Administration has been in existence has been its administrator, and who was carried over from the other administration into this one by Secretary McKay, testified before a House committee last year that the average farm use of electricity in the Southwest area was 200 hours of electricity. He figures that an increase in the rate of 1 mill would amount to 20 cents per month on that basis. Did the committee take any testimony on that indicating what the cost of this increase would be for the average user?

Mr. SAYLOR. As I understand from the hearings we had on this bill, the average increase for a farm user in this area would be 40 cents a month if this bill is not put into effect.

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAYLOR. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. I noticed the chairman of the committee referred to the hearings and the gentleman has referred to them. I tried to get a copy of the hearings and was told that there are no copies available. I should like to know why the rest of the membership cannot get hearings on an important issue like this. I wonder if the chairman can answer that question.

Mr. SAYLOR. I can say that the matters before our committee were not printed. The only hearings I have referred to as printed hearings are the hearings before a subcommittee of the Senate, the Subcommittee on Public Works.

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. Why is the membership of the House not given the privilege of having what hearings there are available so we can follow this debate?

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield so I can answer?

Mr. SAYLOR. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ENGLE. The reason is that the testimony before the House committee was largely repetitious of what is already in the printed document.

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. But that is not available to us. I am talking about the House, not the Senate.

Mr. ENGLE. I know, but does the gentleman say he cannot get a printed document from the Senate?

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. There is no record, however, of these hearings. That is not fair to the House.

Mr. ENGLE. I cannot agree with the gentleman that the hearings are not available. They are. Every hearing that was printed there was participated in by members of 2 committees of this body, the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs and the Committee on Public Works, and 2 committees of the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. As I understand the gentleman, the Senate hearings covered the whole area and are not confined, as this bill is, to the Southwestern Power Administration.

Mr. ENGLE. The primary testimony in the Senate hearings related to the Southwestern Power Administration. We did not see any sense in duplicating the printing job by printing cumulative statements. For instance, Mr. Aandahl appeared, and his statement before us was just about what it was in there. Those hearings are very complete.

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAYLOR. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. EVINS. I may say to the gentleman, for his information, as a member of the House Committee on Public Works appropriations, that there are extensive hearings on this subject before the Committee on Appropriations, which are available, and where Mr. Aandahl and Mr. Wright both testified.

Mr. CURTIS of Missouri. The rest of the Members of the House, in trying to follow debate, go to the desk here, and when we are told hearings are not available it makes it very difficult to follow the debate.

Mr. EVINS. The Appropriations Committee hearings are available if the gentleman wishes to examine them.

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. UTT].

Mr. UTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this legislation, for several reasons. One is that if the enactment of this legislation is completed the Secretary of the Interior will not be able to negotiate and set rates in the Southwestern Power Administration so that the project can become feasible. The Flood Control Act of 1944 provides that rates must be set so that these projects are feasible so that they will pay interest and amortization on the investment. Here we have a proposition where this great investment is running behind not only in its amortization but some $2¾ million a year in interest. There are provisions in this legislation that suggest, at least, a renegotiation of these contracts. It has already been stated that it is unconstitutional to impair the validity of a contract and the rights of a contract. Therefore, we are just putting words into a bill that actually have no effect. I will say to you the only ones left where the rates can be raised are the rural electric co-ops because they are not under contract. That rate increase would only amount to 40 cents per month per farm family. And if they cannot pay that now, they surely cannot pay it a year from now. Reference has been made to the incremental method of arriving at a rate base. I have no fault to find with the incremental method so far as the Southwest Power is concerned, but I suggest to you if the incremental method were used whereby some private utility were going to make use of the falling water, the right side of this aisle would be up in arms against a giveaway program of giving falling water provided by the taxpayers of America to some private utility. But here they say, "No allocation or no assessment of cost of the reservoir where the storage of water is made available shall be used in the base for determining a rate to be charged to Southwest Power." I will say to you if we use the incremental methods, there is only a difference of three-tenths of 1 mill. So it has very little effect if we use the incremental method. It would mean that the rate would have to be increased by 1.9 mills rather than at 2.1 mills which is a very little difference.

I suggest to you on the renegotiation of this Reynolds contract—and as I said, it cannot be done—that we are subsidizing the Reynolds Aluminum Co. to the extent of some $900,000 a year, which over a 30-year period amounts to $27 million being paid by the taxpayers of the United States to the Reynolds Aluminum Co.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UTT. I yield.

Mr. DONOVAN. Suppose, for example, it is discovered, as has been broadly hinted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SAYLOR], that a project, say in northern California like that one up near Shasta Dam finds it is in the same position as this Southwest Power Administration is now in and there are contracts with big power companies on the west coast which cover a long period of time, and it is found that the people who presented these projects to the House had underestimated the costs to get them by this floor, and they find themselves in the same position that the Southwest Power Administration finds itself in—they will be in here asking for the same kind of relief, I presume; is that not correct?

Mr. UTT. Unquestionably, in my mind, they will be.

Mr. DONOVAN. They will be in here hollering and complaining and charging this House with making fish of one and fowl of the other. They did it for Texas so you have to do it for northern California or for Oregon or for anyplace in the United States where there is a public power project; is that not correct?

Mr. UTT. The gentleman from New York is correct.

But, I do want to say to you that this 30-year contract which was signed by Oscar Chapman just prior to the expiration of his term as Secretary of Interior there was a 6-year temporary rate, that the then Secretary of the Interior knew a rate increase was necessary and inevitable in order to meet the interest and amortization of the project. It was also known by this former Secretary of the Interior, Oscar Chapman, that all co-ops would not be made to pay the necessary increase so long as the Reynolds Aluminum Co. had a 30-year contract at a lesser figure because Congress would come to the rescue of the coops and, therefore, by signing the 30-year contract at a loss rate froze the rates of the Southwest Power Administration for at least 30 years. With the annual loss of $2,500,000 the result of the recommendation of the committee, the total is going to be some $75 million in the next 30 years that the taxpayers of every State of the country will have to pay.

I say to you that if this legislation is passed you are not only giving a moratorium for 1 year but for every year as long as the Reynolds Aluminum contract is in effect, which is 27 more years. There is no use kidding ourselves that this is a 12-month moratorium; it is a 27-year moratorium, and the taxpayers of the country are going to have to pick up the check for $75 million to meet the interest alone, without making any payment upon the amortization of this contract.

I will say further that if this legislation is passed it will jeopardize every reclamation and flood control and power project in the United States brought before this Congress for consideration, because they will come up and say: "If it costs more do not bother, we will lower the rate and let the taxpayers pay the difference."

I urge the defeat of this measure.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BONNER].

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BONNER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Chairman, I am sure that all of us share a great sense of shock on hearing of the catastrophic collision the night before last off Nantucket Island of the Italian liner Andrea Doria and the large Swedish passenger vessel, the steamship Stockholm. These 2 great and popular passenger ships, carrying nearly 2,400 passengers, collided in the fog with a severely crippling effect on the Stockholm and resulting in the abandonment and sinking of the Andrea Doria some 10 or 11 hours later. Miraculously, loss of life appears to have been small. I commend the United States Coast Guard for its immediate and efficient response, and the magnificent feats of rescue performed during the tragic hours.

Fortunately, calm seas and instant and heroic response of rescue vessels saved nearly all of the passengers and crew of the doomed Italian liner.

I know that I express the sense of the House when I offer sincerest and deepest sympathy to the Italian people on the loss of the great and beautiful pride of the Italian merchant marine. It was only 3 years ago that she made her maiden voyage from Genoa to New York and was hailed as one of the true queens of the Atlantic.

The Andrea Doria and the Stockholm, both modern vessels, were equipped with radar and designed with supposedly adequate compartmentation and other up-to-date features of construction and equipment which should have made such a catastrophe impossible. The impossible happened and there must have been a reason.

These two ships and many others of the forty-odd foreign passenger ships plying the Atlantic between the United States and Europe are extremely popular and heavily patronized by American tourists and businessmen. Therefore I feel that the Congress and the appropriate committees must be immediately concerned when such a tragedy occurs to endanger the lives of American citizens.

Yesterday I asked the Commandant of the Coast Guard to make an investigation of the matter and report his findings to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries as soon as possible. I plan to have the committee's staff get such facts as it can concerning the disaster and attend any hearings or boards of inquiry which may be held. I am also giving consideration to the appointment of a special subcommittee to look into the circumstances surrounding this matter and give particular attention to the adequacy of equipment and safety features on American vessels. At this time I cannot say the exact course we may have to take. But I definitely feel that we have an obligation to do whatever is necessary to assure the safety of the lives of our people traveling the high seas, whether they are traveling on foreign flagships or American flagships. I cannot imagine an American flagship in a similar circumstance being unable to lower a large portion of its lifeboats.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BONNER. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Washington, who is the ranking minority member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House.

Mr. TOLLEFSON. I want to commend the chairman for the statement he has made and for the interest he has shown in this tragedy. It seems to me that our committee should obtain all the information we possibly can in connection with this collision for the purpose of safeguarding the lives of American travelers on whatever ship they may travel of whatever Nation. Furthermore, it seems to me that we should look into the international rules for safety at sea with a view to ascertaining whether or not they are adequate. Also we should inquire whether or not our own safety regulations are adequate. It seems to me our committee could very profitably look into the matter.

Mr. BONNER. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. I want the House to know that the prime interest here is in the American citizen. Of course, we are interested in the citizens of all nations, but we are responsible, in a way, to see that proper safety is accorded the American citizen who travels on a foreign-flag ship as well as those who travel on American ships.

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Bow].

Mr. BOW. Mr. Chairman, I think we should know exactly what we are doing by this bill. I spoke against the rule and tried to point out some of the facts we are faced with. We should consider the practical aspects of what will be done by this bill.

The Southwest Power Administration has borrowed money from the United States Government to operate this project at a rate of interest of 2½ percent. If any of you will check the cost of money to the United States, you will find that money costs us a great deal more than 2½ percent. On short-term loans today we are paying 3 percent plus for the money; yet this money is loaned at 2½ percent; in other words, at less than the cost of that money to the Government. The actual cost of Government money is somewhere around 4 percent. We have this money loaned at 2½ percent, less than it is costing the Government. Still they are not able to pay out. The interest is lagging at the rate of about $2,500,000 a year. I repeat, that is not according to sound business principles as required under the act.

There are Members here who represent areas with REA's. I do, too. But I do not want to go back to my REA district and tell the people served by the REA in my district that they are not only paying their light bill to the local REA but they are also paying the light bill for people served by the Southwestern Power Administration. There is no great benevolent Uncle Sam who puts this money up; there is no great fund in the pockets of old Uncle Sam. It is you and your constituents and mine who are paying the income taxes that take care of these favored few. You and your constituents want tax reduction. You will never have a reduction so long as you vote for this kind of legislation.

This project is going to be extended to something like a 70-year payoff. We had a bill in here the other day where they were talking about what is going to happen with atomic power, and that some time in the near future atomic power is going to be competitive with other power. Oh, some of them said it may be 20 years until that time comes. But when that time comes, and if atomic power becomes competitive, you will have some 50 years still left to pay out this project, and it will not pay out. Our generation will pay the bill; our generation should be paid back.

So we better be careful when we go back to our people. When we have constituents who are paying light bills to private power companies, about 24 percent of that light bill is in taxes paid to the Federal Government to carry on these non-interest-paying projects. You better look this thing over carefully before you go back to your people.

We have all talked about economy, we have talked about stability and sound financial policies in this Nation; yet here we are today under the whiplash, in this particular case, because of reasons known to many of us. I fear we will go ahead and we will pass a law that will involve a loss of $2,500,000 a year in interest alone to all the taxpayers of the Nation in order to benefit a small segment of the country. This bill may pass, but not with my vote. I am not going back and tell my people that I was any part of this kind of sound fiscal irresponsibility in this House. I am going back and say that I endeavored under adverse circumstances to try to get some fiscal responsibility on this question so that my REA subscribers are not only paying their bills but the bills of somebody thousands of miles away from them. If we are ever going to bring about sound fiscal policies, we cannot pass these laws which impair the obligation of a contract, where people have agreed to pay back to us, and, if they cannot, we will pass a law so that they do not have to meet their responsibility.

Mr. Chairman, I may not again address this House during this Congress. I hope in the next session we will bring back some semblance of legislative responsibility.

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONAS].

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to invite the attention of the committee to the consideration of one aspect of this problem that has not received any attention from those who have spoken here today.

We are all interested in the REA movement. I have already demonstrated my friendship for the REA's in my section of the country. I raise the question now, however, as to whether or not the action here proposed will not be a tremendous disservice to the REA movement. If we can accept the testimony of Mr. Douglas Wright, who has been the administrator of the Southwestern Power Administration ever since it was created back in the forties, and who was retained in that position by the new administration that come into power in 1953—and I mention that to show that he is not an appointee of the Eisenhower administration—the average cost per farm family, of an increase in retail rates of 1 mill, would be 20 cents per month. Now, the proposed increase is a little over 2 mills, and it seems to be admitted, in the debate here today that the average cost would be 40 cents per month per family. Now, I ask you, is that too much to pay to prevent giving the opponents—and we have opponents in this country of the REA movement—a club to beat the REA people over the head with? Are you not, if you adopt this legislation, giving ammunition to the people who oppose REA; are you not admitting what they have been arguing all the time—that many of these projects were not economically feasible; that the rate structure has not been realistic; and that ultimately the taxpayers of the United States will have to pick up the check? I invite the chairman of the committee to respond to this. Is this not the first time since the REA movement began that an effort has been made to have Congress fix rates by legislation and prevent a normal increase in rates when required? Is this not unique? Is this not the first time this has ever happened?

Mr. ENGLE. I do not know of any in my experience. This is the first time it has come to my attention.

Mr. JONAS. My understanding is that this is the first time since the REA movement began that proponents of legislation of this sort have ever come to Congress and sought to keep rates from being raised when required in order to meet the terms of amortization and interest.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONAS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ENGLE. Let me say this to the gentleman, that we believe it is necessary to raise these rates. There is no dispute about that; there is no argument about that. Of course, the fact that these people are in difficulty now hurts rural electrification; we know that. But that is no answer to the problem. They are behind now because of drought conditions and these new, heavy capital obligations that have occurred in the last year or two.

What we are trying to do is to find a way out, that will give an equitable increase of rates to all consumers of that power. You say, yes, we are going to have to increase those rates. We know that. This is a simple moratorium until June 30 of next year to try to work out some of these complicated problems so that the administration does not knock out the rural electrification cooperatives in order to get them further rate increases while these other people are not getting any.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is fair to point the finger at this administration and say that it is seeking to raise the rates only on the REA's. It is seeking to raise the rates on those customers who do not have firm contracts that cannot be touched.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman know that we have been paying from $2 million to $5 million to make up this loss for years?

Mr. JONAS. I am sure that is correct. May I call the Committee's attention to the testimony of Mr. Douglas Wright, on page 19 of the hearings on the Public Works Appropriations for 1956. He was talking about the knowledge in the Southwest that these rates were not realistic and would have to be raised, and that this had been known and accepted as inevitable for several years.

He said:

In addition to that, before submitting formal recommendations, as I said, they have an Advisory Committee on Power in the Southwest composed of the consumers. And in many meetings with those people the reasons for the rate changes were discussed at great length, and I think those consumers realized that a change in rates was going to be necessary, and the reasons for it.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONAS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Wright recommended that the rate be raised 1 mill. The proposal which came up here is 2.2 mills.

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Wright testified before the House Appropriations Committee in 1955 that he knew the rates would have to be raised and he thought they would have to be raised to the neighborhood of 7 mills. I recall that the REA's in my State pay 7 mills for their power and have not found the rate unduly burdensome. Of course everyone who uses electricity would like to have as low a rate as possible.

The proposal in this instance is to increase the rate to 7.71 mills which is less than 1 mill more than my REA's have been paying and will have to continue to pay.

I am just raising the question, in all seriousness and sincerity, whether we will not be doing a great disservice to the REA's, if we today confess that a situation actually exists, which the enemies of REA have always contended did exist or would eventually arise. I think we ought to struggle along and try to keep from freezing these rates if it is at all possible; I do not know whether 40 cents per month is worth the danger of destroying, or greatly damaging, REA by playing directly into the hands of those who will be able to say, I told you so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDMONDSON].

Mr. EDMONDSON. Mr. Chairman, in the first place I want to dispel any notion anybody might have that a vote against this bill would be a vote for the REA's, which was suggested by the gentleman who just spoke. You can search the 750 pages of the hearings on this bill, from cover to cover, and not find a single REA representative who is opposed to this bill. When I refer to REA, I refer to the REA cooperatives. Every REA representative, in the national office and all over the country who gave testimony on this, favored this bill and held that it was essential, necessary. So a vote against this bill is a vote against the REA's official position that was taken before the committee.

There is a second point that I think needs to be straightened out. There has been a great deal of talk about the aluminum company contract and how undesirable it is. If my information is correct, the approval that has been given to that contract by the Federal Power Commission is only a 5-year approval, and if the opponents of this bill wish to do something about their contract in 1957 they can go before the Federal Power Commission and take it up at that time. They will have that opportunity. But that has nothing to do with the merits of this particular proposal insofar as the need for alleviation of the rate increase proposed for the REA's is concerned at this time.

As to the final point, someone has said we ran into a buzz saw when we cut the bill from the entire country to one group. It was no buzz saw that led to this, it was the testimony of Assistant Secretary Aandahl that they were proposing only one increase and thinking about and studying about only one increase, and that was in the Southwestern Power Administration area. We regard this as unfair discrimination against our region of the country, and seek to prevent it by this measure. I urge the approval of this bill.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. EVINS].

Mr. EVINS. Mr. Chairman, the Subcommittee on Public Works Appropriations of the House held extensive hearings on this matter. Mr. Douglas Wright, Administrator, Southwest Power Administration, and Mr. Fred G. Aandahl, the Assistant Secretary of the Department of the Interior, both testified in detail concerning the controversy of the contracts here under consideration. It appeared to me from the testimony that an effort was being made to raise the power rates of rural cooperatives generally and especially three cooperatives in the State of Missouri. Such a raise in rates of the three Missouri cooperatives would put their rates on a level with a fourth cooperative in that area. It further appeared to me, Mr. Speaker, that the one cooperative with the higher rate should have had their contract reconsidered by SPA to reduce its rates and bring their rate cost structure in line with the three other cooperatives in Missouri—which are furnished power by SPA.

The private power companies purchasing Government power seemed to be in most instances receiving the benefit of low rates, whereas the farmers are paying a higher rate. The farmers of the area should not be saddled with the 40 percent rate increase proposed by SPA in the rate increase deal.

Certainly this matter is of such importance that we should not try to act on it too hastily. I believe this moratorium legislation should be enacted, to give the Department time to evaluate all the merits of the matter and not saddle farmer REA-Co-op users with increased rates throughout the area of the Southwest Power Territory. Rather, why should the rates of the Aluminum Company of America purchasing power in the area not be increased? That, in my opinion, would be more equitable in the present situation.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHUDOFF].

Mr. CHUDOFF. Mr. Chairman, I just want to take this minute to tell the House that the argument of the gentleman from North Carolina would mean that the time is going to come when all REA's are going to be in the red and we are going to have to pick up the check. I think the record will show there are many REA's that are not only meeting their interest obligations but paying off the capital investment long before the time necessary.

May I say to the gentleman from North Carolina that if both of us are back in the next Congress, if he will go along with these rates and keep these rates until next June, the Subcommittee on Public Works and Resources of the Committee on Government Operations will start in January to make a study of the rate structure and try to work this problem out.

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. JONAS].

Mr. JONAS. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the gentleman from Pennsylvania made that point. It is one I intended to make when I was on my feet.

I think this is the first time a failure to meet existing obligations has occurred. One of the things we have all been proud of throughout these years, and one of the things the REA people have always pointed to with pride—and I have agreed with them that we can all be proud of it—is that they have met their obligations and have not defaulted.

I am just raising the question, and suggesting serious consideration, whether or not we may not ourselves in the action we take here today in approving this legislation do a great disservice to the REA, because for the first time we are helping prove that an REA situation did not work out as planned.

Mr. ENGLE. If the gentleman will yield, you cannot get blood out of a turnip. They are not paying the rate they have now. How could they pay a higher rate? What we are saying is, Let us put this matter over until June 30, next year, while we study the proposition of making an equitable increase in rates across the line, especially in the light of the hardships these people are under. There is a drought down there. They have no water. They do not have any power and what there is, they do not have any money to buy it. The gentleman from Arkansas made a statement here on the floor that where there were 10,000 connections, 3,000 of them were not taking any of the product of those lines. So we just have to face up to the proposition, not of increasing the rates—that will not do any good—but let us go down to the Department of the Interior and work the matter out. There are at least three of these private power contracts which can, in our opinion, be renegotiated, and in all probability the Reynolds Aluminum contract can be renegotiated too, after 1957.

Mr. JONAS. May I ask the gentleman to read for the RECORD any reference in the contract under which you think that can happen because it is a subject in which I am very much interested. I repeat what I said before that if it can be shown that the rates can be raised under the private contracts, I will vote for the bill. I would never favor raising the rates to the REA's and not take similar action under the contracts with the private companies. My fear is that those who negotiated the private contracts for the Government in 1952 and prior thereto failed, for some strange and unknown reason, to provide for rate increases in those contracts.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Chairman, the principal purpose of the bill now before us is to require that the rates for power and energy marketed by the Southwestern Power Administration not be revised before July 1, 1957. This legislation is necessary because the Department of the Interior has served notice of its intention to file a new rate schedule with the Federal Power Commission which would have the effect of increasing the rates to cooperatives and other preference customers of the Southwestern Power Administration. The increase would result in an average wholesale rate of 7.71 mills at load center delivery points, as compared with 5.5 mills at the present time.

This proposed increase would upset the rate schedules of the cooperatives to such an extent that many of them undoubtedly would be put out of business. Most of the cooperatives in my congressional district are direct purchasers from the Southwestern Power Administration, and their rates would be directly and adversely affected if this rate increase were put into effect. Many of the cooperatives are having a hard time now meeting their debt obligations to the Government of the United States, and some of them are not quite making it.

The cooperatives made their agreements on the basis of certain costs of power and certain interest rates. Unless these costs are allowed to prevail throughout the life of the contracts, then the cooperatives are threatened with failure. The effect of the bill before you is to freeze the rates for 1 year at the levels existing on last February 27. During the year the opportunity would be available for a complete study of the rate structure of the Southwestern Power Administration so that the Congress would have more information on which to act.

We have had a severe drought in my part of the country for several years. Farm income in many cases has been reduced to the vanishing point. The cooperatives which deliver electricity to the farmers already are having trouble meeting their obligations because the farmers have been so hard hit by adverse weather conditions and low prices for farm commodities. The customer service of the REA's already is decreasing, even under present power rates. If the Department of Interior goes through with its plan to increase power rates, it will be placing an extra burden on farmers who already are suffering. As I see it, either we leave the rates alone for the present, or we reverse the longstanding Government policy of trying to make it possible for all farm families to enjoy the advantages of electricity.

I do not believe this House wants the Government to go back on the contracts which the REA's made in good faith with the Southwestern Power Administration. I do not believe we want to make it harder for farmers to enjoy the advantages of electricity. I do not believe we are going to take a backward step in our longstanding REA policy.

Mr. Chairman, I trust this legislation will be approved.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, I regret the situation that has developed with respect to the Southwestern Power Administration. It is a situation that cannot be condoned and must be rectified before it throws the entire REA program in jeopardy.

I shall vote for the bill before us today because there is no alternative pending another session of Congress which must enact legislation compelling corrective action. It is obvious that farmer-consumers of electric energy in this area are in no position at this time to meet the obligations that would be necessary to put the SPA on a sound footing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BOW. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-six Members are present, a quorum.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for a period of 18 months after January 1, 1956, the Secretary of the Interior shall not, in the disposition of electric power and energy generated at projects under the control of the Federal Government (or any department or agency thereof) to any public body or cooperative, charge any rates applicable to any class of service in excess of the rates in effect for such class of service on February 27, 1956, for electric power and energy furnished by him to such public body or cooperative.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, lines 5 to 7, strike the words "generated at projects under the control of the Federal Government (or any department or agency thereof)" and insert the words "marketed by the Southwestern Power Administration."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The provisions of the first section of this act shall not apply to any charge made at a rate established specifically by any contract entered into by the Federal Government prior to February 28, 1956.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 3, strike out all of section 2.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Add a new section 2 as follows:

"SEC. 2. From and after the effective date of this act, the basis for determining the allocation of project costs used in arriving at the schedule of rates for the sale of electric power and energy marketed by the Southwestern Power Administration shall be the incremental method of allocation, whereby the costs allocated to power shall be limited to the costs of adding power as a purpose in the projects."

Mr. ENGLE. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment which we agreed to delete from the bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will rise, I take it, in opposition and I have no objection, and I announce the author of the bill and those primarily interested in this have no objection to voting down this amendment.

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, that is in accord with the agreement between the gentleman from California and myself that section 2 of the bill should be deleted and the amendment should be deleted.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 14, insert:

"SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to renegotiate existing contracts between nonpreference customers and the Southwestern Power Administration so as to provide that the price charged for electric power and energy to such customers shall uniformly increase or decrease concurrently with any increase or decrease resulting from future revisions of the rate schedules presently governing the sale of electric power and energy to preference customers of the Southwestern Power Administration."

Mr. SAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee [Mr. ENGLE] to explain what this amendment does.

Mr. ENGLE. This is the amendment that permits renegotiation. It has also been agreed to drop it in accordance with our understanding and under a similar arrangement which we discussed with reference to the preceding amendment.

For reasons I have previously stated I request that the committee not agree to the amendment.
